This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. CHARGES AGAINST THE FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Thursday, April 29, 1920.

The committee met at 10 o'clock a. m., Hon. Horace M. Towner (acting chairman) presiding.

Mr. TOWNER. I believe it was arranged this morning that Mr. Munroe, of the board, should appear before the committee. Mr. Munroe, are you ready?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, on a special matter that I have been giving some investigation to, I am going to ask the chairman, in his discretion, if he will, to call Mr. Holder a few minutes. I want to ask him some questions. He is a member of the board and he is here, I notice.

Mr. TOWNER. How much time——

Mr. BLANTON. Just a few minutes. It will not take over 20 minutes. It is a matter that is very pertinent at this particular time before the other members go on, and I ask that that be done.

Mr. TOWNER. Very well. Mr. Holder, will you take the stand?

TESTIMONY OF MR. ARTHUR E. HOLDER, MEMBER FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

(The witness was duly sworn by the acting chairman.)

Mr. BLANTON. State your name to the reporter, Mr. Holder, and your occupation at this time.

Mr. HOLDER. Arthur E. Holder, machinist, member of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, representing labor.

Mr. BLANTON. You have been on this board how long?

Mr. HOLDER. Since the 21st of July, 1917.

Mr. BLANTON. You draw what salary?

Mr. HOLDER. $5,000 per year.

Mr. BLANTON. And that has been your salary since you first went on the board?

Mr. HOLDER. That has what, sir?

Mr. BLANTON. And that has been your salary continuously?

Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. You are a member of an organization that is affiliated with the A. F. of L., the American Federation of Labor?

Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir; the International Association of Machinists.

Mr. BLANTON. And you have been a member of that organization how long?

Mr. HOLDER. Of that particular organization since—I can not remember the exact day, but it was in August, 1896; but I have been a member of a trade-union in continuous good standing since the 1st of January, 1875.

Mr. BLANTON. And you have been an officer in such union?

Mr. HOLDER. I have never been a paid officer. I have been an employee, and I have occupied a number of local official positions.

Mr. BLANTON. You have occupied positions of authority in the organization, regardless of whether you were paid or not?

Mr. HOLDER. With the exception of a period of three years as president of the Iowa State Federation of Labor, which was an honorary position without salary.

Mr. BLANTON. Then you were at one time president of a State federation of labor?

Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Prior to your going on this Board of Education, what was your last position before you went on the board?

Mr. HOLDER. From the 16th of December, 1906, until the 20th day of July, 1917, I was the legislative committee or a member of the legislative committee, of the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. BLANTON. And what was your salary?

Mr. HOLDER. My salary then ranged from $4.50 a day, when I commenced, to $6 per day when I ended, with a per diem allowance.

Mr. BLANTON. Were you not paid a salary by the year?

Mr. HOLDER. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. You were just paid so much a day for whatever time you put in?

Mr. HOLDER. Exactly.

Mr. BLANTON. And the highest pay that you received was $6 a day?

Mr. HOLDER. Counting $3 per day per diem, which made it $57 a week at the time I closed.

Mr. BLANTON. And how long had you been getting $57 a week up to the time you went on this board—for how long a period of time?

Mr. HOLDER. I am not quite sure, but I think it was two years.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, prior to the two years, what was your salary?

Mr. HOLDER. About $50 per week.

Mr. BLANTON. Not "about"; but how much was it?

Mr. HOLDER. Well, it varied according to the outside service that I rendered. I was not constantly in Washington so, of course——

Mr. BLANTON (interposing). Now, at the time you got $6 a day did you get paid for Sundays?

Mr. HOLDER. Not the regular wage of $6 per day, only six days per week, but the per diem was seven days per week.

Mr. BLANTON. Your per diem meant that when you traveled in the interests of the American Federation of Labor they would allow you a per diem to cover expenses.

Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. That was what your per diem was?

Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. But your real salary was $6 a day.

Mr. HOLDER. $6 a day.

Mr. BLANTON. For six days a week?

Mr. HOLDER. For six days a week.

Mr. BLANTON. And prior to that two-year period, you salary was what—or, say, one year preceding the two years?

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLDER. $50 per week.
Mr. BLANTON. $50 per week?
Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir.
Mr. BLANTON. Do you know Mr. Barnes?
Mr. HOLDER. I never met the man.
Mr. BLANTON. You have heard of him?
Mr. HOLDER. I have heard of him.
Mr. BLANTON. Is he a member of a labor union?
Mr. HOLDER. I do not know.
Mr. BLANTON. He is reputed to be, is he not?
Mr. HOLDER. I never heard it until you brought it up yourself before this committee, sir.
Mr. BLANTON. You heard the evidence I brought out from the witnesses?
Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir.
Mr. BLANTON. Do you know what salary Mr. Barnes is getting?
Mr. HOLDER. I do not.
Mr. BLANTON. I can tell you. He is getting $3,500 a year. Do you think I ought to know more about your business than a member of the board of education? I know he is getting $3,500, and you can not tell me what he is getting.
Mr. HOLDER. Well, we have a number of men, and I would not attempt to memorize——
Mr. BLANTON. But you are one of the main men who have this business in charge.
Mr. HOLDER. Yes.
Mr. BLANTON. And are supposed to be familiar with it, are you not?
Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir. I would not pretend to say that I know the identical salaries of every member of the staff.
Mr. BLANTON. You do know Mr. Briggs, though?
Mr. HOLDER. Riley Briggs?
Mr. BLANTON. The man, Briggs, whom I interrogated one of the witnesses about, who is a machinest and a member of the same organization you belong to.
Mr. HOLDER. I know Riley Briggs.
Mr. BLANTON. Riley Briggs is a member of the machinists organization?
Mr. HOLDER. I think he is.
Mr. BLANTON. What salary does he get?
Mr. HOLDER. I am not sure. I think it is $3,000.
Mr. BLANTON. Well, you are correct; $3,000 is what he gets. Do you know Mr. Jones, the one who was——
Mr. HOLDER (interposing). No, I never met Mr. Jones—oh, Jones?
Mr. BLANTON. Who is also a member of the machinists organization.
Mr. HOLDER. Yes; I know Mr. Jones.
Mr. BLANTON. He is a member of your organization?
Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir.
Mr. BLANTON. The machinists organization?
Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir.
Mr. BLANTON. Do you know what salary he gets?
Mr. HOLDER. I think he gets $2,500.
Mr. BLANTON. Well, he gets $3,000. You came within $500 of it.

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLDER. I am giving you the best information I can recall.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know Mr. McAuliffe? Before I get away from it, Mr. Jones is a member of the machinists organization, too?

Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know Mr. McAuliffe?

Mr. HOLDER. I do not know Mr. McAuliffe.

Mr. BLANTON. Is he not one of the employees of your organization?

Mr. HOLDER. I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. You do not know at all?

Mr. HOLDER. I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know of any employment he has had with your board?

Mr. HOLDER. I do not know. I never heard his name before, to remember it.

Mr. BLANTON. M-c A-u-l-i-f-f-e—I may not pronounce it correctly, but that is the way it is spelt.

Mr. HOLDER. I do not know the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. If he has been a placement officer getting as much as $2,500 a year from this Government, should you not know of that?

Mr. HOLDER. I do not think that I should know every detail.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not talking about details. I am talking about the mere fact of a placement officer getting $2,500 a year under your jurisdiction.

Mr. HOLDER. Well, sir, will you allow me to give you a reply?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I am just asking whether or not that is unreasonable to presume.

Mr. HOLDER. If I had expected to have gone on the stand this morning, I would have brought with me a complete list of all the placement men, so that I could have given you the exact information and I would have had that information.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not asking you about anything except your own business; that is, the individual features of your own business connected with the "higher-ups." I am not speaking about the underlings who get low salaries, but I am talking about the ones who get good-sized salaries. I just presumed you would know something about that.

Mr. HOLDER. Well, there are quite a large number of men in that particular department, and I have not pretended to know all the individuals personally.

Mr. BLANTON. You do know the Mr. McGovern who was a placement officer?

Mr. HOLDER. I knew Mr. McGovern a good many years ago.

Mr. BLANTON. And knew that he was a member of the union?

Mr. HOLDER. I knew he was a member of, I think, the stationary or operating steam engineers' organization.

Mr. BLANTON. You heard him testify here?

Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Are you able to tell the committee what your board paid Mr. McGovern?

Mr. HOLDER. I think Mr. McGovern got $3,000 a year.

Mr. BLANTON. That is right; $3,000. You are acquainted with Mr. Pyle?

Mr. HOLDER. I never heard of Mr. Pyle.

Mr. BLANTON. Who was at one time employed by your board?

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLDER. I never heard of Mr. Pyle.

Mr. BLANTON. You do not know what salary he was paid?

Mr. HOLDER. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, my best information is that he was paid $3,000. Do you know Mr. Schlouder?

Mr. HOLDER. I do not know him.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, of course, you can not say what he was paid.

Mr. HOLDER. Not unless I had my records before me. I wanted to give you all this information without any reserve, but I can not carry all that in my head.

Mr. BLANTON. My information is that he is paid $3,000. Were you acquainted with Mr. Tautillo—T-a-u-t-i-l-l-o, I do not know how you pronounce it—who I believe is a plasterer.

Mr. HOLDER. I think he is a plasterer or a marble worker employed in district No. 3.

Mr. BLANTON. Then you do know of him.

Mr. HOLDER. I know of him, but I do not know the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. But you have stated that he is a member of the plasterers or marble workers' union?

Mr. HOLDER. To the best of my information or to the best of my knowledge.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know what your board has been paying him?

Mr. HOLDER. I think he is getting about $2,500.

Mr. BLANTON. You are not sure that he is not getting $3,000?

Mr. HOLDER. No, sir; I am not.

Mr. BLANTON. Are you acquainted with Mr. Tompkins, about whom some testimony has been given?

Mr. HOLDER. I saw Mr. Tompkins once in March, 1919, in the New York office, while I was conversing with Mr. Griffin, the D. V. O., and was about to go over and make his acquaintance when he was called away and I never had an opportunity to meet the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know his affiliation with union organizations?

Mr. HOLDER. I understand—I got the information from Dr. Prosser—that when he was engaged he was chairman of the board of governors of the business agents of the building trades at New York City. I think I have stated it almost exactly.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, that is quite an important position in the trade-unions of New York City?

Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir; a very important position.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know what Mr. Tompkins was paid by your board?

Mr. HOLDER. I think he was getting $3,000 a year.

Mr. BLANTON. That is correct. Now, Mr. Lynch; you know Mr. Lynch?

Mr. HOLDER. I do not think I have ever met Mr. Lynch.

Mr. BLANTON. But you know of him by reputation?

Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir; I know of him.

Mr. BLANTON. What affiliation has he with union organizations?

Mr. HOLDER. I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. You are not prepared to state?

Mr. HOLDER. I do not know, sir. If I knew I would tell you unreservedly.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BLANTON. Have you heard?

Mr. HOLDER. No; I have never heard. The subject has never been brought to my attention during any conversation about Mr. Lynch.

Mr. BLANTON. I am just speaking about men now who have been appointed since July 31, 1919.

Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Since the last of July and since you have been in charge of the business.

Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Presuming, of course, you could give me some definite information about men under your employ.

Mr. HOLDER. If you had not called me quite so early I could have given you the information exactly.

Mr. BLANTON. You realize that all these men are under your employ?

Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. As a representative of this Government?

Mr. HOLDER. Of course.

Mr. BLANTON. You realize you have just as much to do with their employment and with their drawing these $3,000 and so on salaries from the Government as any other member of this board.

Mr. HOLDER. I think so.

Mr. BLANTON. You have just as much to do with it and you have equal authority on this board with the other members, have you not?

Mr. HOLDER. I have never been denied equal authority.

Mr. BLANTON. But you have equal authority?

Mr. HOLDER. I have never assumed to have any exceptional authority.

Mr. BLANTON. But you do assume to have equal authority with the other members of the board?

Mr. HOLDER. Well, I have been treated so graciously by every member of the board that there has never been a question about it.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know what Mr. Lynch is getting—what the board paid Mr. Lynch?

Mr. HOLDER. I think Mr. Lynch is getting $3,000 per year. He may possibly——

Mr. BLANTON. Now, as a matter of fact he is getting $3,500.

Mr. HOLDER (continuing). He may possibly be getting $3,500. I think I remember that his salary was raised to $3,500 a few months ago.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Holder, with regard to these salaries, do you know, for instance, that in the State of Texas what are known as the trial judges there, the circuit judges, in whose courts and under whose jurisdiction men are tried for their lives and under whose jurisdiction property rights of the highest value involving millions of dollars are tried, do you know that those circuit judges until a short time ago received only $3,000 a year and now receive only $3,500?

Mr. HOLDER. I was not aware of that information or of that condition, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. You are aware of conditions out in Iowa where you were president of the State federation of labor, are you not?

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLDER. I knew at the time I was president of the Iowa State Federation of Labor that our governor got $3,000 per year with $500 allowance for rent.

Mr. BLANTON. And your circuit judges out there, like the distinguished chairman here, who has tried men for their lives and has tried in court the highest property rights—did you know what distinguished jurists got out in your State of Iowa?

Mr. HOLDER. I think at that time they got $3,000 per year, but please remember that was in the years 1900 to 1906, and this is 1920.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; but the distinguished chairman here is getting the same salary now in the position which he occupies that he got in 1908 if he was a Member of Congress at that time.

Mr. HOLDER. The salaries of the Members of Congress had been raised 50 per cent, in the year, I think, 1908.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, say since 1908.

Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. For the last 12 years the salary has not been changed?

Mr. HOLDER. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Just exactly the same regardless of the demands that are made on such officers?

Mr. HOLDER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I just wanted incidentally to call your attention to that fact when you are passing on these salary propositions. There has been some evidence here as to whether or not you could get competent men to fill these placement positions for the salaries you are paying. I merely wanted you to understand conditions in other places.

Are you acquainted with Mr. O'Connell?

Mr. HOLDER. James O'Connell?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. HOLDER. The president of the Metal Trades Federation?

Mr. BLANTON. The one who has had employment under your board.

Mr. HOLDER. I do not think we have any O'Connell employed by the board.

Mr. BLANTON. O'C-o-n-n-e-l-l.

Mr. HOLDER. I do not know an O'Connell employed by the board.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know Mr. James A. Fahy?

Mr. HOLDER. No; I do not.

Mr. BLANTON. Who is a New York appointee.

Mr. HOLDER. I do not know him.

Mr. BLANTON. He is getting $3,000 a year. You are not acquainted with him?

Mr. HOLDER. I do not know him.

Mr. BLANTON. You do not know his union labor affiliation?

Mr. HOLDER. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. If any?

Mr. HOLDER. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Are you acquainted with Mr. Walter Wheeler in the New York office?

Mr. HOLDER. I think Mr. Walter Wheeler was a machinist employed in the United States Navy Yard at Portsmouth, Va.

Mr. BLANTON. And he was taken over by your board, was he not?

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLDER. He passed the civil service examination and was appointed.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, well, was he not recommended by one of the New York Congressmen there?

Mr. HOLDER. I never heard of that.

Mr. BLANTON. Who is a very prominent member——

Mr. HOLDER. I never heard of that, but I do know this, that I got some information from a draftsman employed in the Portsmouth (Va.) Navy Yard, which is ordinarily known as the Norfolk Navy Yard, that Mr. Wheeler was an applicant, and if his papers were to come to me from the Civil Service Commission, whether I would be willing to sign them with the information that he would convey and that I happen to know something of Mr. Wheeler personally.

Mr. BLANTON. He being a machinist, and being a member of your organization,

Mr. HOLDER. He being a machinist and a man that had——

Mr. BLANTON (interposing). Do you know how much salary he is getting?

Mr. HOLDER. I am not sure, but I think he was getting twenty-four or twenty-five hundred dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know what Mr. Wheeler's salary is?

Mr. HOLDER. I think I said that I believe it is about twenty-four or twenty-five hundred dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. $2,600.

Mr. HOLDER. $2,600?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. You are not familiar with the fact that there are appointments made upon recommendation, say, of Members of Congress?

Mr. HOLDER. I would like to give you a——

Mr. BLANTON (interposing). Has any appointment ever been made upon recommendation, say, for instance, of Mr. Donovan, of New York, a Member of Congress and a member of this committee?

Mr. HOLDER. Not to my personal knowledge.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, let me direct your attention to four particular ones and let you answer, say, James A. Fahy, Mr. Walter Wheeler, Mr. O'Connell or O'Connor, I am not sure which, but it is one of those names, and Mr. McAuliffe, are you prepared to say that none of those appointments were made upon recommendation of the New York Member whom I have mentioned?

Mr. HOLDER. I am prepared to say that I never heard such an intimation before.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, are you acquainted with Mr. Robert G. Munroe?

Mr. HOLDER. No, sir; I never heard the name.

Mr. BLANTON. Never heard the name?

Mr. HOLDER. Never heard the name before.

Mr. BLANTON. You do not know anything about him?

Mr. HOLDER. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Are you acquainted with Mr. William A. Clark?

Mr. HOLDER. The gentleman who testified here as the district vocational officer?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. HOLDER. Yes; I know Mr. Clark.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know his affiliation with labor organizations?

Mr. HOLDER. I do not think he has any.

Mr. BLANTON. Are you sure?

Mr. HOLDER. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know what salary he got?

Mr. HOLDER. He is getting $3,600, but has been promoted to $4,000; but he has never received the $4,000 yet.

Mr. BLANTON. But he has been promoted to that?

Mr. HOLDER. He has been promoted to that.

Mr. BLANTON. And will get it?

Mr. HOLDER. And will get it.

Mr. BLANTON. And it will date from when?

Mr. HOLDER. He will get it if I can get it for him.

Mr. BLANTON. And it will date from when?

Mr. HOLDER. It will date from—really, I can not give you the date.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know what salary he received just before he entered this service?

Mr. HOLDER. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. You do not know?

Mr. HOLDER. No, sir; I do not. He testified he was in France, and he came here from the service he was rendering in France.

Mr. BLANTON. And you do not know what salary he got?

Mr. HOLDER. I never knew.

Mr. BLANTON. If he was getting only $1,800 before he entered the service of your board, it would not make any difference to you as to what you should pay him; that would have no bearing on the salary you should fix for him?

Mr. HOLDER. I would have to be guided, of course, by the information that came with his application and with his accomplishments and experiences.

Mr. BLANTON. Are you acquainted with Mr. Farwell?

Mr. HOLDER. Slightly.

Mr. BLANTON. Is he connected with any union labor organization?

Mr. HOLDER. I do not think so.

Mr. BLANTON. What salary has he been paid?

Mr. HOLDER. I think Mr. Farwell was getting $3,500 when he was working in the Boston office and I believe that he was promoted to $4,000 when he accepted the position of district vocational officer in August or September, 1919, of the New York office.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, is it not a fact, Mr. Holder, that practically all of these men I have mentioned were not residents of the districts in which they were appointed as placement officers.

Mr. HOLDER. I am not sure as to that and I do not know whether that would be always kept in mind as a guiding principle. Where all other things would be equal, I believe they would be given the preference.

Mr. BLANTON. You, of course, know what a lobbyist is, do you not?

Mr. HOLDER. Well I was presumed to be one myself.

Mr. BLANTON. You have been a paid lobbyist of the American Federation of Labor, have you not?

Mr. HOLDER. To call it by a more euphonious title, sir, legislative representative.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BLANTON. But to call it by its real, true, genuine cognomen, it is a lobbyist, is it not?

Mr. HOLDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. You are a member of the faculty of what is known as the Trade Union College, are you not?

Mr. HOLDER. I do not know whether I am a member or not. I have given them $2 for their work, but whether that gives me a membership or not, I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, there is such an organization known as the Trade Union College, is there not?

Mr. HOLDER. There are several local organizations of that kind in the United States recently organized. There is one here in Washington and the president of it, or the chairman, is Mr. Archie E. Luther.

Mr. BLANTON. Then you disclaim being a member of the faculty of that college?

Mr. HOLDER. I do not want to put it quite so harshly as disclaiming it, but I have never received notification, either orally or by written word, that I had been so recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Holder, you have heard the evidence given here by two different witnesses in your presence, who have been your employees, to the effect that with a trade unionist; that is, a member of a trade union, who believes in true unionism, that where members of the union strike and refuse to work and other employees come in and take their places, that to members of trade unions those employees are commonly designated as "scabs." You heard that testimony, did you not?

Mr. HOLDER. I heard all of that; yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the fact, is it not?

Mr. HOLDER. What is a fact—the fact that I heard it?

Mr. BLANTON. That they are designated as "scabs" when they take their places.

Mr. HOLDER. That is the universal term although some trades have——

Mr. BLANTON (interposing). That is all.

Mr. HOLDER (continuing). Different terms.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Holder, will you please post yourself on these matters so that within the next week some time, whenever you get posted, you can let the committee know so I can get some definite information about this business.

Mr. HOLDER. I have that information already prepared and ready to give you.

Mr. BLANTON. I wish you would get the information about the salaries of these various men so that you can tell this committee just exactly how many members of your machinist organization, the same organization to which you belong——

Mr. HOLDER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Have been employed by the board.

Mr. HOLDER. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. And exactly how many other members of other trade organizations have been employed and the salaries that each have been paid, so that we can get some definite information about your own business. Will you do that?

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLDER. I should be very much disappointed, Judge Blanton, if you did not give me the opportunity to give you that complete information in the most candid way possible.

Mr. BLANTON. And I hope you will.

Mr. HOLDER. And I have it all prepared, and if I had dreamed that you were going to call on me this morning I would have brought it with me, but please do not think for one moment that when I say I do not know, I am trying to evade or to ignore your questions. We believe, sir——

Mr. BLANTON (interposing). Mr. Holder——

Mr. HOLDER. Please excuse me and let me give you a complete answer.

Mr. BLANTON. That is all I care about, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HOLDER. We do not believe in concealing anything of the work of this board of which we have knowledge, and we absolutely refuse to go on parade, and I, as one member of the board, stand here self-reliant as to the work we have done and the part I have played in it myself and we want this committee, every individual member of it, to know first hand, from our own lips, exactly what we have done and what we are trying to do and what we hope to do. We want to win the confidence of this committee by a candid, safe, free, fair, courageous, self-reliant expression.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I will ask you——

Mr. HOLDER (continuing). Now, I do not know how a man can express himself more fairly or more fearlessly than that.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I will ask the committee later on——

Mr. HOLDER. And if you will kindly put every question to me in the most detailed form, I shall consider it a great big compliment.

Mr. BLANTON. Whenever you are ready, I will ask the committee later in the week, or next week to call you.

Mr. HOLDER. All right, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. You will be called later, Mr. Holder.

Mr. Munroe, you may take the stand.

STATEMENT OF MR. JAMES P. MUNROE, VICE CHAIRMAN, FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

(The witness was duly sworn by the acting chairman.)

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Munroe, you are a member of the Federal Board for Vocational Education?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. And have been since the organization of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; I was appointed in July, of 1917 by the President.

Mr. TOWNER. Do you prefer to make a preliminary statement without interrogatories, first?

Mr. MUNROE. I would like to do that, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. We will be very glad, indeed, to have it.

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, we are always glad to appear before a committee of Congress and give an account of our work, and in view of the misrepresentations that have been going around about the work, I would ask, Mr. Chairman, that I be allowed to make a rather full statements as to just what our accomplishments are to this time.

Digitized by Google

First, in regard to the statements that have been made more than once that we are very much behind in our work; and that have been bolstered up by bringing witnesses who testified in most cases that they knew nothing about the work since a year or a year and a half ago. Now, of course, as I shall show later, the work was at that time behind, for reasons which I will make plain.

As to our present situation, permit me to read the statistics given to me by the superintendent of records and returns as of March 27, about a month ago.

On this date registration in the districts reached a total of 206,666 cases.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Munroe, in giving these figures, will you be careful to give them slowly?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. The figures themselves are very easily misunderstood, and in order that the reporter may get the figures definitely in the record so that they will not have to be afterward corrected, I suggest you make those statements slowly.

Mr. MUNROE. I thank you for the suggestion.

Two hundred and six thousand six hundred and sixty-six cases. Contact was established with 174,196 men, or 84.2 per cent of the entire registration; 141,953, or 81.5 per cent of the contacts established have been surveyed by vocational advisers; 58,099 men had been approved as eligible for training, and of this number 33,686 have already entered training, 4,446 of whom began their courses during the month of March, an increase of 69 per cent over the preceding month. The completions and discontinuances total 3,052, leaving the net number of men actually in training as 30,695 on this date; that is, March 27. Of these, 28,800 were included under section 2, 1,834 under section 3, 69 under section 6 of the act, and 61 in public Health hospitals under our agreement with the Public Health Service, by which we are giving training to men with tuberculosis under medical advice.

The above men are enrolled in 308 courses given at 1,493 institutions and 4,051 commercial and industrial establishments. The percentage of enrollment in courses is as follows:

In trade and industrial group, 31.7 per cent; 26 per cent in the business and commercial group; 14.9 per cent in the prevocational group; that is preliminary studies; 13.9 per cent in the professional group; and 13.5 per cent in the agricultural group.

This list which I will not burden the record by putting in is a complete list of the establishments, schools, and so on in which men are in training.

That was on March 27. As shown by these weekly reports handed into us—the last report being April 24—during that week 1,068 men had gone into training, so that the total number of men who are in training or have been in training is at least 38,000 or 39,000 men.

Therefore, gentlemen, as shown by these figures and by the fact that in the last month we have probably got up to at least 90 per cent of contacts with the men and arranged their courses and so on, the work is practically done so far as determining the eligibility of the men and arranging for their courses.

There remain, of course, two very serious problems, the first being that of getting the men who have been allowed training, 20,000 or more, to take that training; and in that we are getting the cooperation of the American Legion and the other soldier organizations, the Red Cross, and so on, but the work of inducing these men who have been assigned training to take it has been very much hampered, of course, by all this misrepresentation in the newspapers scattered all over the country; and to-day, we have the very curious situation of the American Legion through all its posts trying in every way, with us, to induce these men who have been assigned to training to take it, while the paper which bears their name, the American Legion Weekly, is all the time trying to discredit this work of rehabilitation, and to induce these men not to have anything to do with the Federal board.

Another great work which is still ahead of us, is that of "follow-up" of these men in the schools and in the industries in which they are being trained. Also, when they are put into positions, we must follow them up for a few months, at least, to make sure that they are making good.

This has been dwelt upon by members of the committee as being one of the most important parts of our work and we agree that it is, but there, as has been pointed out by a number of witnesses who have appeared before you up to this time, we are greatly hampered by the difficulty of obtaining and of retaining competent men to do that important work of follow-up at the limitation of salary placed at $2,400 a year.

Now, the most serious charge, gentlemen, that has been brought against this board is the charge of delay in carrying out this work and I propose to devote the greater part of my testimony owing not only that the board, its staff, and its employees, generally, have been zealous to the utmost extent in pushing forward this work and at the same time have been in every way courteous and considerate toward the disabled men, but I will also show that had it not been for the zeal, the perseverence, and the foresight of the board in overcoming the various obstacles that stood in the way of prompt service to the men, had we not insisted upon the cooperation of other organizations where cooperation was necessary under the law and had we not finally insisted upon an amendment of the law so as to get over an impossible situation, the situation to-day would be really a reproach to the Government; but because of our efforts it is a great credit to the Government of the United States and a great source of satisfaction, as you have seen, to 34,000 or 35,000 men who are in training.

Before I take up that more general story, I will deal with the specific charges that have been brought forward by Mr. Littledale in his testimony.

I need not point out to this committee, because it has been familiar with this work since the beginning, the differences between section 2 and section 3 training as laid down by the law, but I think you can hardly have failed to realize that many of the witnesses who have come before you have found fault with the board because they have not been able to distinguish between the two kinds of training, and because they have believed they should have had section 2 training when under the law they were entitled to training only under section 3; and also, I perhaps should remind this committee of the spirit in which this rehabilitation law was originally framed.

Digitized by Google

In all the discussions before it was made legislation, it was clearly brought forth that it was the desire of the Government to get away from the old pension idea; that they wanted to pass legislation which should encourage the self-reliance and self-respect of these disabled men, and should lead them to stand on their own feet after the Government should have done all it could for them in the way of rehabilitation.

I have brought this forward because you can not have failed to notice that many of the witnesses, or some of them at least, have gone on the supposition that this is in the nature of a reward, and that if a man fought and received an injury, no matter how slight, he should be rewarded by training and maintenance during training.

Of course, the difficulty and one of the hardest things which the board has had to do has been to interpret the law in the most liberal spirit possible toward the soldier, but yet with due respect to the law as framed. Consequently, we have had to pass judgment in thousands and thousands of cases and give a man section 3 training when the man himself believed, under his mistaken impression, that he ought to have maintenance as well as training; and you can not have failed to notice, too, gentlemen, the extreme difficulty of the personal problems involved in dealing with these men.

Here you are all men of affairs, of wide experience, most of you are men of high standing in the law, and yet you realize how long it took you to get from the 14 or 15 soldiers who have appeared before you the real inward facts as to their conditions, their desires, and their attitude of mind toward this whole thing. Now we have had to do that same thing, through our agents, in the case not of 12 or 15 men, but of somewhere between 125,000 and 150,000 men, because it takes just as much time, just as much care, just as much study of the problem to refuse training to a man or to decide that he is entitled only to section 3 training instead of section 2 training, as it does to put him in training. So that when we tell you that 35,000 or 36,000 men have been put in training, that does not tell the whole story, because we have had, as I say, through our agents to go through the whole process of getting at a man's previous history, his state of mind, his social status, his desire for training, in the case, as I have said, of between 125,000 and 150,000 men; and we have had, in addition, to get hold of the places, whether schools or industries, in which those men can best be trained for the particular thing they have in mind to do; and then, as I have already said, we have had to organize the "follow-up" to be sure that these men are getting what we intend that they should get.

Therefore, this has been an extremely difficult, extremely human, problem, and we had absolutely no precedents on which to go. Consequently, we have had to build up an organization and to train men to undertake a thing in which they had no previous, and we had no earlier, experience. It has been one of the most difficult things that the Government has ever undertaken, and as I will show later, we have had to do this in the face of very serious obstacles.

Incidentally, let me refer to the statements made by Mr. McMurtrie implying that this Government has not done as well with this rehabilitation problem as have some of the allied governments. He brought forward, I think, the figure of 600,000 persons in Great Britain who are being dealt with by a process which he recommended should be undertaken in this country.

As a matter of fact, the Government of Great Britain is doing almost nothing in the way of vocational rehabilitation. These 600,000 disabled men are being dealt with as a social service problem through the volunteer system which obtains usually in Great Britain, in the way of giving them aid here or helping them get a job there, or something of that sort; but there is not in Great Britain any widely organized system of vocational education except in connection with the blind, and that, as you know, gentlemen, is being carried on not by the British Government but by the generosity of Sir Arthur Pearson.

As regards France, they have done what you might call a certain amount of stunt work in putting back farmers onto their farms with appliances to take the place of arms or legs which had been lost in the service, and there are some really quite wonderful things done in the way of mechanical aids to those mutilated men, but France is so poor, the problem of numbers of disabled men is so enormous as compared with what we have in this country, that she has not even begun to attack the general problem of vocational rehabilitation.

I have just got the report from Italy, and while Italy, I should judge, is doing rather more in beginning the problem than France has yet been able to do, she is just touching its fringe and is way behind Canada, which is our nearest rival in this matter of vocational rehabilitation.

Now, Canada established a board somewhat similar to the rehabilitation side of the work of the Federal Board in July, 1915, nearly five years ago, and from the latest reports she has, in those five years, put into training several thousand men less than we have. In regard to contact with the men she has so far reached about 50,000, whereas, we have reached 174,000 men, and the kind of training which she is giving is not nearly so comprehensive as what is being undertaken in this country. Consequently, in the nine months since the board was divorced from the War Risk Insurance Bureau and was able to act freely in the matter, we have done more than Canada has done in five years.

As to Mr. Littledale's specific charges, under several headings, that we were indifferent or even hostile to the disabled soldier, I think this has been disproved by the witnesses whom Mr. Littledale asked the committee to bring here, practically all of whom have testified that our attitude has been one of courtesy, patience, and friendliness. Furthermore, of those whom he named specifically in his charges, it will appear from the evidence which I will present here that five had no disability entitling them to training under the law; one of them gave the wrong address and for months therefore could not be reached by the board, one had mental complications which necessarily delayed decision, and the eighth simply said what was not so.

The facts in this case are given in this exhibit which I will put in (Exhibit A), that is, in those eight cases. As to the other cases that have been brought forward, they will be dealt with by Mr. Lamkin and other members of the staff in their testimony.

EXHIBIT A.

STATEMENT OF JAMES P. MUNROE, VICE CHAIRMAN FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION, IN REPLY TO THE CHARGES CONTAINED IN THE STATEMENT OF HAROLD A. LITTLEDALE TO THE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The statement prepared and submitted by Harold A. Littledale to the House Committee on Education recites that beginning with the issue of February 16, the New York Evening Post published a series of articles dealing with the work of the Division of Rehabilitation of the Federal Board for Vocational Education. These articles purport to quote figures furnished to the Post by authorities of the board. The statement is made that there is a total registration of 209,000 men. The information furnished the New York Evening Post states that the total registration of names as given above included duplicates. A personal interview with Mr. Littledale emphasized the fact that a number of these names were carried, because of transfer from one district office to another, on the records of more than one office. It is further stated that there were 110,000 eligible for retraining yet no such estimates were given to the Post by responsible authorities of the board. It was further stated that only 24,000 have been placed in training, whereas the information furnished him shows that 26,976 had actually begun courses of training.

The facts are that the board has not held that the gathering of statistics was its most important duty, and therefore, at the present time we can not give absolutely accurate figures as to the number of men whose names are registered with the board or who have been definitely approved for training.

The actual figures could be obtained by having each district make an audit of its files. This would interfere, however, with the more important work of seeing that the disabled men eligible for training receive it.

INTENTION OF CONGRESS WITH REGARD TO TRAINING AS EXPRESSED BY THE PROVISIONS OF THE ACT.

The vocational rehabilitation act places upon the Federal board the duty of furnishing vocational training to such disabled veterans of the war as were vocationally handicapped, and to furnish instruction without cost, if practicable, to those disabled under circumstances entitling them to compensation from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. No act of Congress has ever permitted the training of every man discharged with a rating of disability. At the time that the act was before Congress the suggestion was made that the opportunity of vocational training should be available to all ex-service men. This, however, was deemed inadvisable, and it was decided that only certain disabled veterans should be furnished courses. The disabled veterans to be trained were accordingly divided into two classes. In the first class, known as section 2 cases, were included those who were "unable to carry on a gainful occupation, to resume their former occupation or to enter upon some other occupation, or having entered upon such occupation were unable to continue the same successfully." (See sec. 11, act of June 27, 1918.) This provision was later amended and section 2 cases now include all "who in the opinion of the Federal board are in need of vocational training to overcome the handicap of their disability." (See sec. 11 as amended July 11, 1919.) Persons receiving training in this class are entitled to receive in addition to free instruction such monthly allowance as may be necessary for their proper maintenance and support. As originally enacted these payments were to equal the amount of the monthly pay for the last month of active service, or the amount to which the disabled man would be entitled under Article III of the war-risk insurance act, whichever was the greater. As now provided the allowance is $80 per month for a single man, and $100 per month for a man with dependents, with additional payments for each dependent.

In the second class, known as section 3 cases, were included all those not included in the first class whose disability was received under circumstances entitling them to compensation under the war-risk insurance act. Men receiving training in this class are not entitled to a maintenance and support allowance, but are to receive instruction without cost to themselves. Ex-service men who are not embraced by the provisions of either section 2 or section 3 are not entitled to training under the act as now drawn. The statute with regard to section 3 cases provided "that the courses of vocational rehabilitation provided for under this act shall, as far as practicable and under such conditions as the board may prescribe, be made available without cost of instruction." This differentiation between section 2 and section 3 cases was accepted by the board as imposing upon it the duty of handling the more severely disabled men first, and its whole policy has been directed to this end.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS.

Estimates have been made that there were 335,000 discharged from the service with some disability rating. The failure of the board to present accurate statistics has been a source of considerable criticism, but it is obvious, as no official figures have been issued by the departments qualified to furnish the same, the only course open to the board is to make estimates based upon the best information obtainable. This information changes from time to time and it is therefore necessary for the board to revise its estimates. As a result it is undoubtedly true that the board has made conflicting statements at various dates in the statistics issued by it. This fact is unavoidable and will undoubtedly continued until official figures have been issued by the proper departments.

The records of the board show that it has registered the names of approximately 200,000 men and has acted on approximately 145,000 cases; has approved for section 2 training 58,000 men and for section 3 training 36,000, and has, for various reasons, declared ineligible for training on the evidence available the cases of 51,000. At the present time about 4,000 men are entering training per month. The work of the board in so far as the selection of section 2 cases is concerned will be soon completed. In this connection, however, it should be remembered that probably a large number of the men who have not as yet been discharged from the Army and Navy hospitals will be entitled to training under section 11, and another large number, although discharged, are undergoing medical treatment at the hands of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance or the Public Health Service, and do not come, therefore, as yet under the terms of the rehabilitation law.

NUMBER OF MEN ENTERING TRAINING DOES NOT SHOW WORK ACCOMPLISHED.

Although this record of the board is gratifying, the number of men entering training can not be accepted as a gauge with which to measure the work accomplished. No act of Congress has provided that training be furnished all disabled veterans. Four conditions of eligibility are prescribed by the statute for section 2, men: (1) Discharge from the service under honorable conditions since April 7, 1917; (2) disability incurred in the service or traceable thereto; (3) disability constituting a vocational handicap; and (4) feasibility for training from a mental and physical standpoint. The first duty of the board, therefore, was one of selection involving contact with every veteran discharged with a disability to determine the character and extent of the disability suffered. The granting of training is not an optional matter with the board. Every case must be appraised in the light of the conditions prescribed by the act and it is as incumbent upon the board to refuse training to men not entitled to training under the law as to furnish courses to those entitled thereto. As the physical disability as rated by the medical authorities of the Army and Navy at the time of discharge often can not be accepted as conclusive, the task of selection of those eligible for training was not susceptible to standardization. A large number of men discharged with no disability rating have been found to have suffered a disability incurred in the service which constituted a vocational handicap, and they have been awarded training. Very slight physical disabilities frequently involve exceedingly serious vocational handicaps. For this reason proper selection necessitates direct contact with every disabled man and the handling of each case individually.

A case that came to the attention of the board illustrates the distinction between physical and vocational handicaps admirably. A soldier had been disabled by being kicked in the face by a mule. As the only physical disability incurred was a split upper lip the rating of disability given by the Army authorities was very small, yet this soldier, previous to entering the service, was a professional clarinet player, and his injury therefore resulted in a complete vocational handicap and clearly established his eligibility for training. Many other similar cases could be cited. On the other hand one of the cases cited critically was that of a man who suffered a partial loss of hearing in one ear, and who was a wood polisher before entering the service. This man is undoubtedly entitled to compensation, but his disability does not constitute a vocational handicap as prescribed by the act of Congress. The first task, therefore, was to obtain contact with all men discharged with disabilities, of whom about 65,000 had been released from the service prior to the enactment of the rehabilitation law, and assess their disabilities from a vocational standpoint. Before the board was admitted, approximately 132,000 men had been discharged from Army (not including Navy) hospitals.

The board does not throw the burden of proof on the disabled man. A very large percentage of the men who were discharged without disability, now find that they have disabilities which are proving vocational handicaps, but it is necessary for this fact to be shown in the records of the board before Government money can be legally expended.

Mr. Littledale makes the following charges:

Charge 1.—"We charge that the board has neglected the disabled men."

As proof the following cases are cited:

1. "Rudolph Faber, 1010 Bayview Avenue, Innwood, L. I. Wounded in action, Faber lost the use of his left arm. He was discharged March 3, 1919, with no knowledge of the Federal board. He could not return to his occupation of butcher. On July 24 the board wrote to him. He called at their office. They promised to write again. They never wrote. He heard nothing more. He was forgotten. He has been neglected. And he is making $23 a week less than he would be at his trade were he fit to-day."

The facts in the case are as follows: Mr. Faber was interviewed by a representative of the Federal board prior to his discharge. At this time the provisions of the vocational rehabilitation act were explained to him, and a form was in the possession of the board signed by Mr. Faber on February 27, 1919.

At this time Mr. Faber stated that his occupation was that of provision salesman. The record does not show that Mr. Faber was employed as butcher, as stated in the Post.

At the time of discharge Mr. Faber claimed no disability and the examining board found no disability. On this account it was not considered that Mr. Faber was in need of the services of the board and his case was allowed to remain idle in the district office. The folder fails to show that the man called at the district office, and inasmuch as no action was indicated as necessary by the evidence in the folder, no action was taken.

"Benjamin Dunstall, 117 South Avenue, Cranford, N. J. He was wounded in the Argonne. He was one year in hospital. He was discharged October 8, 1919, with one leg 3 inches shorter than the other. He could not return to the occupation of farm laborer. He applied to the board. Five months have passed and he has heard nothing. He has been forgotten. He has been neglected. And for compensation he has received nothing. He hasn't a cent. He is still wearing his uniform. He has no money with which to buy civilian clothes."

The facts in the case are as follows: Mr. Dunstall, at the time of his discharge from Fort McHenry, gave his address as 295 George Street, Toronto, Ontario. The district office in New York wrote Mr. Dunstall at this address and received no reply. They sent word to the branch office at Buffalo asking them to get in touch with Mr. Dunstall. No reply was received from Mr. Dunstall and no contact was established until the man called at the New York office during the latter part of January. At this time his case was completed and he was given a medical examination. In February Mr. Dunstall was offered section 2, training, and accepted this offer.

"Arthur P. Thomas, a patient in Flower Hospital, New York City. In October an X-ray examination showed his spine was injured and he was in danger of paralysis. It showed he was in need of an immediate operation. But that record was put away in a folder. It was placed in the files. It was forgotten. He was never told. He found it himself by accident. Independent of the board he underwent an operation. That was in January. Now he has been informed that his training claim has been discontinued and his name dropped from the pay roll."

The facts in the case are as follows: Mr. Thomas entered training at Meeker's Business Institute on May 13, and that he was later transferred to Columbia University, where he has been following a course in journalism. The records, of course, fail to show any evidence that Mr. Thomas examined his folder. The records show that he was not dropped from the pay roll of the board, but was paid in full to March 1.

The regulations of the board allow a 30-day sick leave without discontinuance of payments. If a man is confined to the hospital longer than 30 days he is transferred to the pay roll of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

To show the attitude of the Federal Board, the following summaries from its minutes are given:

In order to facilitate the placing of disabled men, it was voted that the district officer shall take the initiative in placing men who have been disabled and who do not desire retraining. 1–165.

It was agreed that in the administration of the vocational rehabilitation law the attitude to be assumed by the board toward the disabled man should be that of a "big brother" and that the soldiers should be encouraged to look to the board at all times for such help and advice as they may need in the matter of training and placement. 1–185.

In an effort to define a living subsistence for men while undergoing training the board adopted the policy, in case of all disabled men other than commissioned officers, to see to it that such men have at least the same support or pay as they received while in the service. The board ruled that the director be authorized on the recommendation of the district vocational officer to pay to each disabled man such a monthly stipend as is usually paid for lodging and subsistence by students residing in a given community, but that such stipend from the board shall not be less than the amount necessary to make his total support from the Government at least $65 per month. No provision was made at that time for commissioned officers. All such men in training under the fund were paid on the basis of their Army pay by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. For men with dependents the total amount was at least $75 per month. 1–239.

The board having learned that the amounts voted for maintenance of disabled men being low, they were by vote here increased for single men to $75 per month, and a man with dependents not less than $85 per month. 1–267.

In order that the suffering on account of lack of funds be reduced to the minimum, arrangements were made for subsistence pay to be sent to the disabled men on a semimonthly basis. 1–305.

The chief of the division was authorized to grant leave of absence with pay to men in training where such leave warranted. 1–393.

It was voted that where vacations of disabled men in training occur, they shall be paid their maintenance for such period, the board anticipating that many of the men in training would be unable to support themselves due to their physical condition during the vacation period. 1–333.

Reaffirming its policy the district vocational officers were again instructed that a period of placement training following institutional training should be provided whenever necessary and that during such placement training the disabled man should be continued on training pay. This policy here is augmented by the action instructing the rehabilitation division that whenever necessary institutional training may in the same manner follow placement training and that whenever necessary extension of courses of instruction in institutions or elsewhere shall be made in order to provide adequate training. 1–367.

That the men might have the benefit of a more close personal touch with the board the Chief of the Vocational Rehabilitation Division was authorized to secure efficient counsellors at all institutions where disabled men were in training and that where the number of students in training at any one institution was sufficiently large arrangements should be made to detail a representative of the district office to serve as counsellor or supervisor. 1–433.

Authority given to the Chief of the Vocational Rehabilitation Division to extend sick and excused leave periods where in his judgment the facts warrant such action. 1–437.

The board authorizes payment for all necessary medical or surgical care of disabled men in training and instructs the chief to secure from other Government agencies reimbursement for such expenditures as under the law they have authority to incur. 1–445.

To avoid disappointments the board voted that in all cases where a disabled man has been notified by the proper authorized official of a district office or the central office that he shall have any given course or courses such promises shall in every case be carried out.

To further facilitate training approval, the chief of the division was authorized to order district vocational officers to approve when necessary without reference to central office extension of courses for a period of one year from the date of the expiration of the period for which the man was originally approved. 2–565.

The chief of division instructed to notify all district vocational officers to see to it that every man in training had filed proper applications with the Bureau of War Risk Insurance in order to avoid the possibility of their being a delay in the receipt of compensation after the man had completed his training. 2–609.

Where men are shown to have major disabilities caused by amputations, district officers instructed to put such men into training, even in four-year courses, without prior reference to central office. 2–623.

To facilitate approvals of men whose cases were prepared and awaiting approval in the district offices the chief was authorized to train at central office and to then send to the field offices squads of men to work through the files in the district offices to approve all cases where evidence was complete and showed that the man was entitled to training; to determine cases not eligible for training and to leave memoranda in all cases not complete as to what evidence was lacking in the case and must be supplied in order to meet the legal requirements of the rehabilitation act. 2–623.

The chief of the division was instructed to divide the districts into subdistricts and a branch office established in each district in order to facilitate action, especially with reference to placement and placement training. 2–651.

When necessary to assist disabled men residing in Canada, the board authorized travel of agents of the board into Canada for the purpose of investigating such cases. 2-855.

The following quotations are from the official instructions:

"When, in the case of a disabled person in training under the law, either in regular courses or in receiving stations, emergency action is necessary to save the life, limb, or health of such person, the district vocational officer shall, through the district medical officer, see that the care needed is provided promptly. The question of adjusting responsibility for payment of costs involved can be taken up later. Pending a decision in regard thereto the board assumes the responsibility." (Sec. 258, Misc. 150.)

"If a disabled person in the field can not be reached at the address available in the district office, the district vocational officer shall ask central office to obtain the correct address from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance or the Adjutant General's Office. If this be not effective, the cooperation of the Red Cross should be sought in an effort to locate the man, especially if there be evidence that he may have a major vocational handicap." (Sec. 303, Misc. 150.)

"The board desires to give every disabled person every benefit for which the law provides, and will give most careful consideration to each man's case." (From sec. 308, Misc. 150.)

"The board will be liberal in approving training for men suffering from major physical disabilities even though they do not really involve a vocational handicap." (Sec. 405, Misc. 150.)

"The disabled men while in training should be made to feel that they have present at all times the sympathetic personal interest and guidance of a mature man to which they can feel free to go and 'talk things over.' The relationship between the board, as representing the Government, and the men must not be permitted to become mechanical or to cease to appreciate the fact that the men, each of them, have a personal future before them with all that that means in feelings, hopes, and aspirations for an American citizen who has served his country well. The district vocational officers shall, therefore, at each center where the disabled men are being trained, arrange for the selection of one or more men of the right type to act as personal counselors to the men in training." (Sec. 448, Misc. 150.)

"It is the special function of the personal counselor to be the guide, counselor, and friend to the men in training. His relationship to them should be such that when special difficulties or embarrassments occur or there appears to be danger of a renewal of the disability or for any other reason the men need advice and counsel they will feel free to come to him. The counselor should be the most suitable man available regardless of his official relationship to the actual instruction being given to the man or the business relationships connected therewith." (Sec. 449, Misc. 150.)

"The district vocational officer should inform the personal counselors as to how they should proceed to care for the interests of the man when—

(a) "There is sickness on the part of the man himself or of his dependents or family.

(b) "The man discontinued his attendance without notice.

(c) "The man is financially embarrassed.

(d) "The man is absent and his absence affects his training pay.

(e) "The man complains regarding his training, or his instructor or his failure to get his training pay or of needed adjustments of amounts due him because of change of status regarding dependents.

(f) "Cooperate with the man and the board in delivering training pay to the man and arranging for repayment of loans by the men." (Sec. 450, Misc. 150.)

"Such books, appliances, and other materials as are, in the judgment of the board, necessary to enable the disabled person to take his training in a proper manner will be furnished without cost to the men in training. When the training course has been completed the district vocational officer shall permit the man to keep permanently for his own use such of those books, appliances, and materials, as he may need to use in the vocation for which he has been trained." (Sec. 456, Misc. 150.)

"The purposes of the board are not accomplished unless the man is so placed that he is able to successfully maintain himself in his occupation in competition with the normal worker on the basis of equal pay for equal work. Except in cases where full wage is impossible the acceptance of the idea of partial wages for the disabled persons should be rejected." (Sec. 603, Misc. 150.)

"In negotiating with the employer due care must be exercised to see that he is made familiar with the circumstances of the case and the condition of the man, in so far as such circumstances or conditions affect in any manner the man's ability to perform the duties of the job proposed for him. Deal fairly and honestly with the employer, even though such frankness may result in some instances in failure to secure the job sought.

Only through fair dealing can the best opportunities for other disabled men be secured." (Sec. 605, Misc. 150.)

"Where several separate and distinct operations are involved in a trade or occupation the aim of training should be to fit the man with a degree of proficiency in each of such operations to make him a competent general workman. The steps in the course should be so laid out that the man will continue through the whole process as a learner rather than a producer. There should be no inducement offered the man to discontinue his training and remain on any one of the operations as a producer in a narrow field rather than to become a good general workman through thorough training." (Sec. 614, Misc. 150.)

"Men in placement training will receive training pay at the same rate as if they were in training in educational institutions. No deduction shall be made in the training pay of the men because of money earned incidental to their work while they are in placement training." (Sec. 704, Misc. 150.)

INSTRUCTIONS NO. 23.

SEPTEMBER 12, 1919.

To all concerned.

Subject: Procedure in closing cases.

Paragraph B. The man does not reply to letters from the district office. In closing cases on this ground it is understood that at least one letter without reply shall have been delivered to man with negligible handicap; at least two letters without reply to man with minor handicap; and at least three letters without reply to man with major handicap, or when the extent of handicap is not known.

EXTRACT FROM KIDNER MEMO. 17.

AUGUST 24, 1918.

SEC. 6. From the nature of the information called for in this and the succeeding section, it will be seen that a very intimate personal relationship must be established between the district vocational officer and the candidate.

It will be of value for the vocational adviser to review with the man the information given in the preliminary survey form. Not only will this afford valuable help to the vocational adviser in considering possible future vocations, but during the process of reviewing a great deal of the information as to the candidate's personal characteristics will be revealed.

In questioning a man as to his choice of a new occupation, the candidate should be encouraged to express his wishes freely, but the vocational adviser will not only enter the reasons given by the candidate for his choice, but will also endeavor to ascertain the man's real reasons. Quite often there are fashions in choice, due to the particular demand or example of the hour. Also it will be found that a man's choice is often conditioned by the fact of his having passed through a long period of enforced inactivity and by his present physical condition, which may improve.

Charge 2.—"We charge the board with inexcusable delay." As proof the following cases are cited.

"Joseph Furphy, 420 John Street, East Newark, N. J. He was wounded in several places and gassed. He was discharged March 3, 1919. He did not know of the board. He learned of it by accident. In June he applied for training. He met with a delay. In want, he had to appeal to the Red Cross. At last the board got him in training. That was on January 24, 1920. They kept him waiting for eight months."

The facts in the case are as follows: Prior to enlistment Mr. Furphy was employed as a clerk and cost accountant for seven years and a bookkeeper for three years. On discharge from the service the Army examining board found no disability, but the statement was made that Mr. Furphy had been wounded in action. Mr. Furphy's application for training was received and his case received prompt attention. However, his request for section 2 training was disapproved. The medical examiners of the New York office stated that he was suffering from a temporary minor handicap. At the instance of the Newark Red Cross Mr. Furphy's case was given further consideration, and section 2 training was approved by the eligibility squad on review of the complete evidence in the man's folder at that time.

"Theodore M. Lind, 316 Cumberland Street, Brooklyn. He was discharged in June, 1919. He did not know of the board. He learned of it by accident. He applied in July. On December 22, he was refused training with pay. He was kep waiting eight months."

The facts in the case are as follows: Mr. Lind was interviewed by a representative of the board at General Hospital No. 41 on June 21, at which time the Government rehabilitation plan was thoroughly explained to Mr. Lind. The records show that the New York office of the Federal board recommended that Mr. Lind receive training, and that this recommendation was disapproved by central office of the board.

Prior to enlistment Mr. Lind was employed as wood polisher. His disability consists of a reduction in the hearing of the left ear. The right ear is entirely normal. The central office of the board ruled that this reduction in hearing would not prevent Mr. Lind from carrying on successfully as a wood polisher, and for this reason it was ruled that he was not eligible for section 2 training and eligible for section 3 training only. Mr. Lind appealed from this ruling of the board, and the appeal was not allowed. He is not considered eligible for training within the meaning of section 2 of the rehabilitation act.

"Edward M. Kalish, New York City, awarded the croix de guerre. He applied to the board in April, 1919. In July he was told he could begin training 'next week.' Something went wrong. He was put off. After waiting 10 months he was reexamined by the doctor. He was then marked fit and refused training. He tore up his papers in the face of the man who told him that."

The facts in the case are as follows: The only sense in which Mr. Kalish "waited 10 months" was that his case has been repeatedly pressed for section 2 training, whereas from the first such training was denied.

Prior to enlistment this man was employed as a millinery salesman, stating that he earned $25 per week. His disability consists of slight chronic arthritis, according to medical report.

Army records at the time of the discharge, April 19, 1919, gave degree of disability "one-tenth at present." On July 18, 1919, the Federal board, after reviewing his case, decided that his disability did not entitle him to section 2 training. Mr. Kalish was immediately tendered transportation from his home to the New York office in order that he might be advised fully concerning this decision and his rights under section 3 of the act.

The case was again pressed for section 2 training in November and was denied under date of November 26. On December 29 such decision was confirmed.

On January 5 a final appeal was made, and our assistant chief medical officer confirmed former findings. The most careful consideration was given to this claim. Section 3 training is still open to Mr. Kalish at such time as he may choose to accept.

"Gordon M. Campbell, Middletown, N. Y. In February he had been waiting 11 months for training. The last action then was that he was to undergo another medical examination to see if he was not fit."

The facts in the case are as follows: When the man was discharged the Army medical examiners considered that his disability was not received in line of duty, and also rated the case as less than 10 per cent disability. On account of the fact that the case was apparently a minor handicap, no attempt was made by the board to follow the case actively. The records show that a letter was written to Mr. Campbell on June 30, on July 15, and again on October 1. Mr. Campbell replied to the letter of October 1, but did not reply to the other two letters. The case presented certain difficulties, and it was impossible to reach a decision concerning the eligibility for section 2 training without a medical examination.

"Henry B. Katzen, Newark, N. J. Discharged April 13, he applied to the board on May 12. On December 1 he went into training. He was delayed six and one-half months. The delay reduced him to penury. Married, he was in great distress and had to go to the Red Cross for help."

The facts in the case are as follows: The chronological record quoted in the Evening Post is approximately correct. Considerable delay was experienced in obtaining a satisfactory medical examination and in arranging training which was suited to the man's disability. The medical examination showed that he was suffering from a border line mental disability which was very difficult to diagnose and which did not constitute an obvious major vocational handicap. A satisfactory medical examination was finally obtained and Mr. Katzen entered training on December 1.

The committee should remember that cases involving mental disability are the most difficult to properly solve. The board is not charged with the medical care of men suffering from any disability. Before any training can be arranged for men suffering from mental disabilities, an accurate diagnosis of the case must be obtained in order that the proper training may be provided.

The above reply to the specific cases submitted by Mr. Littledale in support of his charges of neglect and inexcusable delay proves conclusively that he has failed to substantiate the same.

Charge 3.—"We charge that the Federal Board is responsible to no department of the Government and is top-heavy."

In support of this charge Mr. Littledale alleges that the Secretary of Agriculture is a member of the board but it is not responsible to him, likewise, the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of Labor, but the board is not responsible to either, and that the board is a creature of Congress, responsible only to Congress.

Digitized by Google

At the time the Federal Board was created, the matter of its personnel was carefully considered by Congress, and as created is composed of the Secretaries of Agriculture, Commerce, and Labor, the Commissioner of Education, and three lay members appointed by the President.

The heads of the Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, and Labor were chosen as members of the board because of the inter-relation which their departments held to the various phases of vocational education in the country. The Department of Agriculture is directly concerned with the agriculture and home economics education, the Department of Commerce is directly concerned with the problems of commercial education, the Department of Labor with the problems of trade and industrial education, and the Department of the Interior, through the Bureau of Education, with the problems of vocational schools.

The lay members of the board representing manufacture, agriculture and labor, were chosen for their special knowledge of the fields represented by each. The board has thus formed, it was believed, could serve the double purpose of effectively administering the law and of bringing together the work of these different departments. The purpose sought by Congress has been fully realized. Although it is admitted that the Federal Board's activities do not occupy the same status with respect to these secretaries as bureaus in their respective departments, all the secretaries are vitally interested in the work of the board. Prior to the transfer of Secretary Houston from the Department of Agriculture to the Treasury Department he was chairman of the board, and at the present time Secretary Wilson of the Department of Labor occupies this position.

Like all Government offices, the actual detailed administrative work of the board is vested in the heads of its various divisions, and Mr. Uel W. Lamkin is the present administrative officer in charge of the division of rehabilitation. The fundamental basic policies, however, which govern the work of this division are determined by the seven members of the board, and the lay members of the board, called the standing committee, acting through the chief of the division to carry out the policies as thus determined. Periodically regular meetings are held and exhaustive reports submitted to the full board by the standing committee, and all its activities are fully discussed and considered at these meetings. Instead, therefore, of the Federal Board being responsible to the head of no executive department, as charged by Mr. Littledale, it is in effect responsible to three, and the heads of each of these departments take an extremely active interest in its work and assist in the determination of its policies, and are in part answerable for the manner in which the duties imposed by Congress upon the board are performed.

Charge 4.—"We charge that 19 months after its creation the board is still organizing."

"Dr. Charles A. Prosser, who set up the Division of Rehabilitation, stated, and it can be found in the record, that the period of organization would cease in June, 1919, and from that time on the number of employees would decrease."

The facts are that the board is developing its organization as the needs of the service demand. The statement of Dr. Prosser was based on a much smaller number of men who would be entitled to training than has been found to be so entitled. A large number of men who have been discharged from the service with no disability are being found compensable and entitled to training because of disabilities incurred in or traceable to the service. This has required constant maintenance of a number of men whose duty it was to interview and advise these discharged soldiers. On the other hand, the board has not seen fit to employ a number of persons for supervision of training except as the demand required it. The general organization has been complete for some time. The reorganization complained of consists of such adjustments as are necessary from time to time to take care of its present and future responsibilities.

Charge 5.—"We charge the board with abandoning a post of duty. The board in July, 1919, withdrew its agents from the hospitals."

The facts are these: Under legislation passed by Congress toward the end of the fiscal year 1919, the board had no authority to pay salaries after July 1, 1919, except as prescribed by that legislation. It was necessary, therefore, to curtail greatly the number of persons employed at salaries exceeding $2,500; and after a careful survey of the field it was decided that since the hospitals were rapidly closing, and since we were perfecting our methods of reaching the soldiers after discharge from hospitals, the least damage to the work would be done by withdrawing men from hospitals, discharging those least qualified and replacing those not wholly satisfactory in other positions with those best qualified who had been working in the hospitals. Fortunately, by subsequent action of Congress, it was possible within three weeks to restore the hospital service. The so-called "abandonment" was made necessary by law.

Charge 6.—"We charge the board with needless duplication of effort. The 14 district offices throughout the country have no power."

The present organization allows district offices to determine eligibility for training. The eligibility man who is stationed in the district office is responsible direct to the central office at Washington on this question alone in order to insure the proper administration of the law. Men who have suffered major amputation, including loss of sight in one eye, can be approved for as much as four years' training by the district office without reference to central office. The only approvals which must be referred to Washington before final action are those of persons not suffering from major amputation who are awarded courses of more than two years in length, or who are awarded courses, the cost of which for tuition, books, and supplies exceeds $500 per year. The central office at Washington is thus trying to keep control over the financial obligations incurred in training men.

Bills are sent to central office for payment because it has not been deemed administratively wise to establish separate accounting and disbursing offices in each of the 14 districts. The number of clerks allowed to each district, together with a minimum and maximum salary for each class, has been fixed and the district officer allowed absolute freedom in the appointment of all clerical help, subject to civil-service regulations and the above limitations.

Charge 7.—"We charge that the board has no definite policy. In support of this charge are submitted two letters, one from Chas. H. Winslow, who resigned when the separate Division of Research was abolished, and the other from Arthur W. Griffin, who, for a year was in charge of the New York office and who was removed because of inefficiency on August 1, 1919. This lack of definite policy has resulted in two frequent changes in personnel."

The resignation submitted to the board by Chas. H. Winslow reads as follows:

"SEPTEMBER 8, 1919.

"Dr. C. A. PROSSER,
"Director Federal Board for Vocational Education,
Washington, D. C.

"MY DEAR DR. PROSSER: This is intended to convey formal notification of my resignation as chief of the Division of Research of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, effective September 30.

"Very truly, yours,

"CHARLES H. WINSLOW,
"Chief, Division of Research."

The alleged resignation as set forth in Mr. Littledale's statement is not the one received by the board.

It is noted that of six cases cited by Mr. Littledale in former charges, the names of two of these had been in the files of the New York office during Mr. Griffin's incumbency for four months, while a third had been there for three months during the time he was in charge.

It has not been a lack of definite policy which has resulted in frequent changes in personnel. There have been three different chiefs of the Division of Rehabilitation in Washington. The first, Dr. J. A. C. Chandler, left the service because elected to a responsible educational position paying a larger salary, and this board could not retain his services. The second, Dr. H. L. Smith, was on a leave of absence from the University of Indiana. His leave expired and the authorities refused to extend it. He could not longer remain in Government service. The present chief of the division, Mr. Uel W. Lamkin, can not be expected to remain indefinitely at the financial sacrifice which Government service involves.

As for the statement that there have been four district vocational officers in New York, Mr. Arthur W. Griffin, was removed on August 1, 1919, and was succeeded by Mr. S. E. Farwell on August 10, 1919. Mr. Uel W. Lamkin served for the 10 days pending Mr. Farwell's arrival. Early in January, 1920, Mr. Farwell resigned on account of business reasons and on account of the condition of his chealth, and was succeeded by Mr. Wm. A. Clark.

Charge 8.—"We charge James P. Munroe with failure to safeguard the interests of the disable soldier."

To support this charge Mr. Littledale submits a statement of Arthur W. Griffin, claiming that Mr. Munroe refused to remain in New York the short time necessary to sign a lease for required new quarters of the board.

Mr. Munroe has no recollection of such conversation as is reported by Mr. Griffin, but it is evident that under no circumstances could he have signed any contract with-cut authority of the board. Consequently, his remaining or not remaining in New York has nothing to do with the case.

As to the relations of the board with the Munsey Co., the payment of rents was held up because the Frank A. Munsey Co. refused to sign a lease made in such terms as to safeguard the Federal Government. The only way in which these bills could finally be paid was by the exchange of an offer and acceptance for the quarters at 280 Broadway. The statements which Mr. Littledale alleges the Munsey Co. circulated are without foundation.

Charge 9.—"We charge that William A. Clark, acting district vocational officer at New York, has engaged new quarters for $3.50 a foot that were offered to him at $2.50."

The facts in the case are these: The offices of the board in New York were too small for efficient work to be done. Larger quarters were absolutely necessary. It was also desired to have the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, Public Health Service, and Federal Board for Vocational Education all under one roof in order to have better cooperation in rendering service to the disabled men. After a careful and thorough canvass of all available buildings, space in the National Association Building, on Forty-third Street, was leased by all of these organizations. There is submitted herewith—

1. Affidavit from the president of the corporation who conducted negotiations.
2. Statement from him and to the amount of rental paid by other tenants.
3. Copies of paragraphs from a letter of Alfred Brooks Fry, copies of the complete letter having been submitted to the committee with another statement.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of New York, ss:

James T. Lee, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is president of the National Association Building Corporation, a corporation which owns the National Association Building, situated at 23–31 West Forty-third Street and 26–28 West Forty-third Street, in the Borough of Manhattan, city of New York.

Deponent has supervised and controlled the renting of the building from the beginning up to the present time and is completely familiar with all matters relative to the rental prices and negotiations for leases affecting space in said building.

Deponent further says that he is advised that statements have been made and published in the New York Evening Post that the space on the second, third, fourth floors rented to the Federal Board for Vocational Education, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, American Red Cross, and the Public Health Service have been rented at a price which was $1 per square foot higher than any other space in the building and higher than the space could have been rented for by these Government departments and bureaus.

Deponent further says that these statements are unqualifiedly false and that the facts in the matter are as follows:

When the first rental schedule for the building was published the rates for the entire second, third, and fourth floors were quoted to be $2.50 per square foot, but these rates were based on the ordinary form of lease running for a minimum period of five years and two months and in most cases leases for entire floors were expected to run for 10 years and 2 months. Under no circumstances was any lease taken for a period of less than five years and two months and none has been made in the building since, except those closed after March 1, 1920, which run for five years and one month.

When Pease & Elliman (Inc.), real estate brokers of this city, proposed to deponent that the Government departments above mentioned be taken as tenants for the second, third, and fourth floors, deponent refused to consider them for two principal reasons, first, that a Government department is an unsatisfactory tenant in that rent payments are invariably long delayed, and, second, because the Government is unable to bind itself beyond the end of the current fiscal year. It was later proposed, however, that in view of the circumstances the Government would be willing to pay $3.50 per square foot provided a lease for four months, namely, from March 1, 1920, to June 30, 1920, would be accepted with an option to the Government departments to renew at the same rate for one year additional, and it was urged upon deponent that the public necessity and the efficiency of the work for disabled soldiers required that the above-named Government agencies have offices adjoining in the same building and that nowhere else in New York City was sufficient suitable space available for the purpose. Just at this time the general schedule of the building was in course of revision and the new schedule which has since been strictly adhered to would have fixed $3.50 per square foot for this space for the ordinary commercial tenant. Under these conditions deponent made the leases, but only after a thorough investigation had been made by a representative of the Treasury Department, a certain Capt. Frye, supervising chief engineer of the port of New York.

Deponent further says that far from the rental paid by the Government being less than that paid by the rest of the tenants of the building, it is a fact that the Government rental is the lowest paid by any tenant except for several small spaces fronting on the interior court and relatively undesirable and which rent for $3 per square foot, for the remainder of the space in the building is rented at from $4 to $6.50 per square foot to responsible commercial tenants on long-term leases, with rent payable in advance in every case.

Deponent further says that the lease to the Government has, in addition to the disadvantages above named, a further disadvantage in that it terminates on June 30 of same year, which date is two months past the renting season, so that the owner of the building must be prepared for a large loss of rental from the date of expiration until a new tenant can be found, which, in a normal market might be 10 months later.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIELD FORCE,
OFFICE OF SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
New York, N. Y., December 27, 1919.

The SURGEON GENERAL,
United States Public Health Service,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In compliance with telephonic order from the department December 20, with relation to the matter of obtaining quarters in New York City for the United States Public Health Service, the Federal Board for Vocational Education, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and the American Red Cross, I have to report on the present status of this matter as follows:

1. Conference or communication has been had personally with the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the local director of said bureau, the supervisor of district No. 2, United States Public Health Service, with a representative of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, with practically all the real estate firms (through one channel or another) who specialize in the rental of large office and loft space in this city, with a considerable number of individual owners of such property, and certain municipal officials. The result of a great deal of effort up to the present date may be summarized thus:

2. Prior to December 5 the supervisor of district No. 2, United States Public Health Service, has made many efforts to secure the necessary space in a suitable location, including advertisement by circular letter and advertisements posted in post office and customhouse. He received, I believe, but one proposal, that of the National Association Corporation, 25 West Forty-fourth Street, New York City, who offered the entire fourth floor of a new 21-story office building now being erected and fronting on 23-31 West Forty-third Street and 26-28 West Forty-fourth Street, ready for occupancy February 1, 1920, said floors each containing 13,493 usable square feet, at $46,993 per annum per floor, which is approximately $3.50 per square foot, rent including janitor and cleaning service, heat and water, light extra at the same rates that would be charged by the New York Edison Co.; division, partitions, additional plumbing, etc., to be installed at the expense of the United States and to be paid for by an addition to the monthly rental of the current fiscal year. A similar proposal was made by the Federal Board for Vocational Education and the Bureau of War Risk Insurance with some incidental occupation of about 1,000 square feet by the American Red Cross interests that are akin to the service above named. See department letter December 4 addressed to the supervisor district No. 2, United States Public Health Service.

6. It was quite apparent to Assistant Secretary Moyle, yourself, and other department officials concerned that it was possible the proposed renting of the quarters named in building described might be adversely criticized, first, because of the rental, which is a rather high rate even for New York City at the present time, and second, because of the high character of this building and its very excellent location in the uptown heart of Manhattan and in the center of the club and hotel district; and, therefore, granting the desirability of said proposed quarters, it was apparent that we should make every effort to secure others elsewhere, and for the past week, including even Christmas Day, such efforts have been continuous on our part, and every source of available information and aid has been sought, including real estate agents and owners, the Lawyers' Title Insurance Co., officers having real estate experience connected with the third naval district, and municipal officials. Every available lead has been followed with very meager results. In nearly every case either owners refused to rent to the United States or locations were unsuitable, or the required space was not available. Among large areas considered were the second and third stories of the Municipal Ferry House, South Ferry, which was found too small (besides requiring elevators, plumbing, etc.), and the second floor of the Siegel-Cooper Building, Sixth Avenue, Eighteenth and Nineteenth Streets, lately used as an Army hospital, where there was an available area of 83,000 square feet and an asked rental of only $1.25 per square foot. However, this rate was based on a long lease, and on learning that occupancy proposed was for the United States the owner flatly refused to consider us as tenants, to the great disappointment of the agents concerned.

Respectfully,

ALFRED BROOKS FRY,
Captain, U. S. N. R., Supervising Chief Engineer.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION BUILDING CORPORATION,
New York, March 11, 1920.

FEDERAL BOARD OF VOCATIONAL EDUCATION,
New York City.

Attention of Mr. William A. Clark.

SIRS: We are giving you below, as per your request, prices of the rentals of the various floors in the National Association Building:

Fifth floor: $4 to $4.50, one small space renting at $3. Approximately 6,200 square feet to be rented at an average of $3.80 per square foot.
Sixth floor: $4 to $5 per square foot, one small space renting at $3.
Seventh floor: $3.30 to $4.45 per square foot, one small space renting at $3.
Eighth floor: $4 to $5 per square foot, one small space renting at $3.
Ninth floor: $4 to $5 per square foot.
Tenth floor: $4.25 to $5 per square foot.
Eleventh floor: $4.25 to $5 per square foot, one small space to be leased at $6 per foot.
Twelfth floor: Entire floor leased at $4 per square foot to one tenant.
Fourteenth floor: $5 to $6 per square foot.
Fifteenth floor: $5 to $6.15 per square foot.
Sixteenth floor: $5 to $6.15 per square foot.
Seventeenth floor: $5 to $6.50 per square foot.
Eighteenth floor: To be rented at $6 per square foot.
Nineteenth floor. $4 per square foot—space to be leased at $6.50 per square foot.
Twentieth floor. To be leased in its entirety at $5 per square foot.
Twenty-first floor. To be used by the National Association Building Corporation.
Twenty-second floor. To be rented in its entirety at $5 per square foot.

Trusting the above information is what you require, we remain,

Yours, very truly,

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION BUILDING CORPORATION,
JAMES T. LEE, President.

Charge 10.—"We charge that William A. Clark, acting district vocational officer at New York, holds office without civil service rating and that Isaac F. Becker, a clerk under Clark, is ineligible."

The charge is answered by the telegram from the Civil Service Commission quoted by Mr. Littledale and which is here repeated.

"Clark and Becker, temporary with approval of the commission. Clark papers not yet rated. Becker found ineligible.

"MORRISON, President."

In view of the fact that he failed to qualify under the rules of the Civil Service Commission, Mr. Becker has resigned effective March 15.

Salaries of temporary employees may be increased with the permission of the Civil Service Commission. Before any increase is allowed, consent of the commission is secured.

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

REPORT OF APPOINTMENT.

(To be forwarded in duplicate.)

To the chief clerk, through personnel officer:

The following appointment has been made in the Division of Rehabilitation, effective the 22d day of July, 1919: Name, William Anthony Clark; age, 51; title of position, placement officer; salary, $3,000; State from which appointed, New York; Harvard Club, 27 West Forty-fourth Street, New York City. Office to which assigned, New York District No. 2. Character of appointment (check one) (x):

1. Probational (from civil service register) ———
2. Temporary (subject to civil service examination), June 30, 1920.
3. Temporary (for "job" employment, without examination), date of expiration of appointment ———

There is attached hereto a biographical sketch showing the qualifications of the appointee for the position.

There is also attached a statement of the duties of the position.

Charge to V. R.

Fund No. 2.

Approved:

H. L. SMITH, Chief of Division.

Approved:

C. A. PROSSER, Director.

FEBRUARY 3, 1920.

From: Chief, Division of Rehabilitation.
To: Acting District Vocational Officer, District No. 2, New York City.

Personal.

DEAR SIR: 1. * * *

2. * * *

3. The first is in relation to the salary increase of Isaac F. Becker. I know you appreciate his work, but the suggestion has been made to me to-day that he has been turned down twice by the Civil Service Commission. If this is true, we, of course, should not have considered him at all for salary increase, inasmuch as we are refusing to make any salary adjustments until one has, at least, filed his papers.

UEL W. LAMKIN,
Chief, Division of Rehabilitation.

FEBRUARY 14, 1920.

From: Chief, Division of Rehabilitation.
To: Acting district vocational officer, district No. 2, New York City.
Re: Salaries.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of February 11, regarding the general question of salaries, I wrote you yesterday in regard to Mr. Becker. We certainly can not approve an increase for Becker or continue him at the increased rate if he has been rejected by the Civil Service Commission.

In regard to Adkins, I believe a $300 raise is about all we should expect for him at one time. If, on the other hand, he has qualified as training assistant, we may be able to put him at $2,000, which would be, as I understand it, a $500 increase. I understand that he is now carried as a clerk. The principle involved in the Adkins case is that he has changed from one position to another, for example, from clerk to training assistant. It is not an increase in the way of salary for the same work. If he retains his civil service status of clerk, a $200 or $300 increase is all that we believe justified. If he takes another position I believe we can give him $2,000.

Very truly, yours,

UEL W. LAMKIN,
Chief, Division of Rehabilitation.

Charge 11.—"We charge that the board is lax in the payment of just bills."

The statement is made that the board was indebted to the Post Graduate Hospital in New York for a period of eight months. The facts are that the first delay in payment of Post Graduate Hospital bills was due to the inability of the board to get a contract signed with them and further that said contract was held up in the offices of the board on account of the seemingly high rates charged for tuition. The contract was finally signed on December 18, 1919, and bills have been paid.

The charge is made that the board owes Columbia University approximately $10,000. With reference to this obligation in the Evening Post of March 10, the following statement is made: "He (Chas. S. Danielson, the bursar) also stated that the board owes almost $10,000 for Federal board students who have enrolled during the present semester, but no bill for this amount has been submitted to the board as yet."

The accounts which have been submitted properly attested and properly vouchered are being paid. As of April 10, practically all accounts which have been submitted to this office have been settled.

Charge 12.—"We charge that the following employees of the board drew two salaries from the Treasury:

"Charles A. Prosser, director	$10,000
"Charles H. Winslow, chief division of research	5,000
"C. E. Alden, chief clerk	2,780
"E. J. Aronoff, secretary	2,500
"H. F. Dolan, disbursing officer	2,500"

When the board was charged with the work of rehabilitation it had an organization which comprised the above-named men. They served both divisions of the board. The Comptroller of the Treasury was asked for a ruling concerning the payment of their salaries. See Volume XXV, Comptroller Decision, page 76. These men did not draw two salaries, but were paid partly out of each of the two funds, as their work belonged partly in each of the two divisions.

It is stated that Mr. E. J. Aronoff drew a third salary from the Elk's War Relief Commission. If Mr. Aronoff draws such a salary, it is as an individual custodian of a fund which never passes out of the hands of the Elks War Relief Commission except when it is delivered to a man entering training. The board has authority, specifically granted by section 5 of the rehabilitation act, to cooperate with any agency, public or private.

Charge 13.—"We charge that training is often a pretense"

To sustain this charge Mr. Littledale alleges:

"Men without even high-school education are sent to colleges where they do not understand the lectures. They are left to absorb anything, if they can."

"In trades, training is often no more than a pretense. The board gives a course of six months in linotype operating. The union requirement is four years. * * * In this matter of training I should like to mention that there is a man with 100 per cent heart trouble who is the wireless operator on a ship at sea. He is the only operator on that ship. The lives of all are in his hands. He has 100 per cent heart trouble."

In connection with the training of disabled men the attention of the committee is directed to the fact that the board is dealing with men and not with boys, ranging in education from illiterate to college graduates. Obviously it was necessary to arrange for the education of some of these men in special classes and to direct attention specifically to those subjects required in the vocation for which they were being trained.

Early the board determined to utilize existing educational institutions to full capacity in providing training facilities and resources for the benefit of disabled men under its supervision. That this was a sound and wise policy can not be questioned. To have established a complete system of separate schools throughout the country would have involved large expenditures, and would have retarded the work. Existing institutions have been requested to attempt all kinds of special arrangements to which they were unaccustomed, which constituted a burden, owing to the increased enrollment of regular students for the year 1919–20, but what would have been the situation if the board, instead of building on what existed, attempted to create an educational plant to accommodate thousands of men? To obtain places where effective training can be given and to establish satisfactory working arrangements is a task of great magnitude. To the credit of most educational institutions it should be said they have, for the most part, responded nobly and have felt the quickening influence that always comes in attempting to solve new problems under new conditions. It can be said without reservation that suitable training opportunities up to date can be provided for every man who has been awarded training, provided he will go where the training opportunity exists, but large numbers of men can not be trained near their homes and refuse training elsewhere. The training facilities there are inadequate, and in many instances employment facilities do not exist in the line which the man has requested that he be employed. This necessitates transfer of men from one point to another, and causes a loss of time which has never been taken into account by the public as a reasonable source of delay for putting men in training.

Digitized by Google

It has been the constant task of the Rehabilitation Division not only to educate its own staff, but to educate the staffs of educational institutions to the idea that the work is predicated on the principle of fitting a man to take a position as a wage earner, to set standards and suggest training courses, to assist institutions in enlarging their facilities, by providing the additional machinery, equipment and supplies, these have been a necessary part of the board's work in order that disabled men might be prepared for gainful employment after they have completed a training course. In passing, it can be said in all fairness that hundreds of men have discontinued their courses because they have found before their completion their occupational niche, and have preferred to go to work at an attractive salary or wage rather than complete the course which the board had prescribed and to which the man had agreed.

"The board gives a six months' course in linotype operating" is cited as evidence that "Trade training is often no more than a pretense."

Trade training is finished in all cases "on the job" directly in the operations which the man is to perform as a worker, and he thus demonstrates his ability to meet the requirements on the job before his training is completed and before training pay is discontinued. There is no grounds, therefore, for the charge that for trades the training given by the board is either too short or otherwise insufficient to prepare the man for the job.

Only one man has thus far completed training in linotype operation. This man had been a printer for 15 years previous to entering the service, and while he was approved for a longer course he was able at the end of two months training to engage as a linotype operator with the Atlanta Printing Co., of Atlanta, Ga., which position he has held since December 31, on which date he completed training.

Two men have completed training as monotype operators. Both of these men were printers; one for a period of two and one-half years and the other for three years prior to entering the service. Both of these men are now suitably employed as a result of their training.

A total of 118 men have entered training as monotype and linotype operators. Irrespective of what initial course is taken by these men, thorough training merging into employment will be provided in each case.

As to the statement there is a man with 100 per cent heart trouble who is a wireless operator on a ship at sea, it is noted that the board is not charged with any connection in the matter. The board has not wittingly handled such a case. From the circumstances cited, no case handled by the board can be identified.

Charge 14.—"We charge that 10 per cent of the men who begin training discontinue training."

For proof attention is directed to hearing on the second deficiency appropriation bill held on January 17, 1920, wherein Mr. Lamkin states that approximately 10 per cent of the men entering training discontinue.

The answer is that the statement is approximately correct. Forty-five per cent of these dicontinuances are due to recurrences of the man's disabilities and other illnesses. The remainder of the discontinuances are due to various causes, such as misconduct, disinterest, and to accept other employment. Twenty-five per cent of those who discontinue reenter training.

Charges 15, 16, and 17.—"We charge that 30 per cent of the men approved for training throw up their chances of training." "We charge that more than 13,000 disabled soldiers approved for training were not in training on January 17 last." "We charge that in district No. 2, the New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut district, for every man in training there is another approved but not in training."

It is not necessary to dispute these figures. We point out that the board was free to act in placing men in training without an award of compensation from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance only after July 11. At the end of June, 1919, only 3,606 men were in training. The following numbers of men were put in training since:

Entered training, July 1 to 31	1,548
Entered training, Aug. 1 to 31	2,617
Entered training, Sept. 1 to 30	2,865
Entered training, Oct. 1 to 31	6,195
Entered training, Nov. 1 to 30	4,517
Entered training, Dec. 1 to 31	2,538

1920.

Entered training, Jan. 1 to 28	3,461
Entered training, Jan. 29 to Feb. 28	2,648
Entered training, Feb. 28 to Mar. 12	2,368
Total	28,757

Digitized by Google

The other activities of the board during these months are described elsewhere.

The board is prepared to admit that at no time has over 73 per cent of the men approved for training actually entered training. The inference that this constitutes failure on the part of the board is false. The eligibility squad, referred to elsewhere, approved for training 12,782 cases. All of these men were at once notified and instructed to report for training. The analysis of approximately 5,350 of these cases 45 days after the eligibility audit was completed shows the following results:

	Per cent.
Now in training	28
Accepted training but deferred until a later date	4
Definitely declined to accept training	6
Training postponed on account of temporary illness	6
Awaiting acceptance from man	56

Refusing, deferring, or postponing training does not deny to a man the right to accept at a later date, and their cases are followed up through correspondence, through the Red Cross, the American Legion posts, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and other agencies, as it is undisputed that many who have been awarded training will avail themselves of it when their physical condition will permit, or when existing conditions change. This burden of follow-up work entails an enormous correspondence and field work, but yet is absolutely essential in order that the board may discharge the duties imposed upon it by Congress.

Mr. Littledale also charges that very few men have completed training and that only 43 have been trained and placed in district No. 2 (New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut).

This statement is approximately correct and tends to disprove the charge made elsewhere by Mr. Littledale that courses are too short. A total of 232 have completed training up to this date. There are more than 5,000 men, however, now finishing their training on the job where they will adjust themselves to employment requirements before being classed as completed.

Charge 18.—It is charged that the eligibility squad threw out cases wholesale.

It is charged that the eligibility squad throw out cases in a wholesale manner, and that by throwing out cases they reduced a total registration of 209,000 to 129,912. The official results of the eligibility audit, which were not available at the time figures were given to Mr. Littledale, show that the total registration was reduced from 238,623 to 135,643. This number, 135,643, added to 48,000 found ineligible, makes the total of approximately 185,000 registration referred to elsewhere.

The cases which Mr. Littledale charged were "thrown out" were actually handled as follows:

(a) Fifty-three thousand and fifty-one of these cases had been transferred to another district. The district receiving the cases was in a position to handle the men and the original district had dropped the case.

It is hard to see how any injustice can be done to a disabled man by dropping his case in one district when his case is receiving attention in another district. It would not be economy for the Government to have two or three offices in communication with the same man concerning the same matter.

(b) One thousand five hundred and seventy-five cases had been opened in the district office in error. A large proportion of these were dulpicate cases which had been consolidated into one case file.

No injustice can be done a disabled man by combining all the papers in his case into one folder.

(c) The eligibility squad closed 35,431 cases and 12,923 cases had previously been closed by central office, a total of 48,534 cases. The cases closed by the eligibility squad were closed for the following reasons:

The man had died.

The man had reenlisted in the service.

The man had not been discharged from the Army, but had been placed on the retired list, and was therefore not eligible for training.

The man stated that he did not desire training.

The man requested that his case be closed and that no more letters be written him.

The man was apparently not interested in training, as evidenced by his failure to reply to several letters.

The man could not be located. Inquiry at the office of the Adjutant General at Washington, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the local Red Cross, the American Legion, and other agencies had failed to discover his present address.

Digitized by Google

The man was carrying on successfully in employment and was not in need of training.
The man had no disability and claimed no disability.
The man's disability was a negligible handicap.
The man's disability was a minor handicap and he had stated that he was not interested in section 3 training. The disability existed prior to enlistment and was not aggravated by service and he was therefore not eligible for training under the act.
The man was in the Army only a few days, having been discharged from draft.
The information in the man's folder was so meager that contact with the man could not be made on the basis of this information.
The man had left the country.
The man had not been discharged under honorable conditions.
A case once closed may be reopened at any time.

In stating that cases were thrown out in a wholesale manner, Mr. Littledale apparently wishes to imply that injustice has been done to disabled men. It is apparent that no injustice could be done by dropping a case which has been transferred to another district or by combining all papers in one folder and all cases that were closed were closed for one or more reasons which were entirely sufficient.

Under this heading, "it is charged that the eligibility squad, which was composed of laymen, reduced the load of the board by changing the medical classification of a major case entitled to training pay to a 'negligible handicap' classification in which training pay was denied."

In proof of this extravagant statement, Mr. Littledale cites the following case:

"Case 670. The man has fallen arches. The medical decision is that the disability was aggravated in the service. Three doctors classify him as a major case. The eligibility squad overrules that classification. The squad gives him a negligible handicap and refuses him training pay."

At the time this case was reviewed by the eligibility squad, the folder contained two medical examinations—one by Dr. Tracy, of the New York office, and one by the Army medical officer, who examined the man at the time of his discharge. Dr. Tracy's examination stated that the disability was a major disability and constituted a major permanent handicap which was aggravated by service. The Army medical examiner stated that the disability was third degree flat feet, which was not aggravated by service.

On account of the conflicting medical reports, the central office case board representative had to choose between two suppositions The man's enlisment record showed that he was discharged from draft after being in camp only six weeks during the fall of 1917, and that he was never accepted for enlistment in the Army. Both medical opinions show that the disability undoubtedly existed prior to enlistment. The man carried on successfully before entering the Army in spite of his disability, which consisted of flat feet, and the record showed that for two years since being rejected from the draft he had been employed as a car painter and stenciler. In view of the undeniable evidence that the disability existed prior to enlistment, and in view of the fact that the man had successfully carried on for two years following his brief stay at a military camp, the central office case board representative ruled that the man was not eligible for training under the conditions of section 2 of the vocational rehabilitation act.

The handicap rating was not changed from major to negligible and the man denied training on the grounds that his disability was aggravated by service.

Mr. Littledale also cites the case 13192.

"Case 13192. The man's occupation is a clerk. He was wounded and is suffering from epilepsy. Medical opinion classifies him as a major case. The eligibility squad overrules that. The squad calls him a minor case and refused him training with pay."

The facts in this case show that at the time this case was rated by a member of the eligibility squad there was no evidence in the man's folder that he was suffering from epilepsy, and the file contained no rating by any member of the district medical staff. The folder contained an old medical examination stating that the man's disability was a slight limitation of the movement of his right arm. Inasmuch as the man prior to enlistment was employed as a clerk, it was not considered that he was suffering from a major occupational handicap and it was ruled that he was not eligible for section 2 training.

Mr. Littledale cites the following case:

"Case 27675. The man is suffering from dementia precox; medical opinion classifies him as a major case. The eligibility squad overrules that, calls him a minor case, and refuses him training with pay."

The facts in this case showed that no ruling was made by the eligibility squad, the decision having previously been made by central office. The official report from the Navy Department shows that the man was not discharged, but was placed on the inactive list on account of flat feet. The man was placed on the inactive list in December, 1918. An examination made 11 months later at the office of the Federal board showed that the man was suffering from hebephrenic dementia precox. There was some doubt as to the feasibility of training, even if the disability were aggravated by service, and there is no evidence to show that this mental disability was related in any way to military service. Inasmuch as this case presented many difficulties, it was forwarded to the central office in Washington for a ruling, and section 2 training was disapproved by central office because it was considered that the man's disability was not due to service and that the man was therefore ineligible under the conditions of the law. This ruling was made by the central office in Washington and not by a member of the eligibility squad, as stated in the Evening Post.

The figures given to Mr. Littledale were furnished by the board. They are given below, together with an analysis showing the manner in which the cases were "thrown out."

Charge 19.—"We charge that the eligibility squad marked all mental cases as insane."

Mr. Littledale states: "All mental cases were labeled 'Tickle 90 days.' That meant nothing was to be done for three months. But often the man had incipient tuberculosis as well. Lack of immediate attention aggravates the disease. For proof we offer the files of the New York office."

It is apparent that Mr. Littledale has misinterpreted the action of the eligibility squad in marking cases "M-90" and "TB-90." This rating, according to his interpretation, means that the district office was instructed to tickle the case at 90-day intervals, or bring the case forward every 90 days without taking action. No such instructions were given.

The following quotation from a letter sent to the district vocational officer of district No. 1, Boston, Mass., on December 11, 1919, shows clearly the meaning of these classifications and the instructions which were given:

"The eligibility squad, while working in the Boston Office, found a great many cases apparently suffering from active tuberculosis and a great many mental cases where the evidence in the file indicated that training at the present time was not feasible. The method of handling these cases has been discussed in the office and the following is recommended.

"It is the opinion of this office that the case folder of each man discharged from the Army with tuberculosis should show an examination made by an expert on tuberculosis and that the policy in regard to each individual case should be based on the result of that examination. For instance, if the examination shows that the man is an advanced active case and there is no possibility of arrest in the period of six months, that case should be tickled for six months. If, on the other hand, a man has practically recovered, his case should be tickled for one month. In every case, while the man is in the hospital, an effort should be made to obtain a certified copy of his discharge and proof of the relation of his disability to the military service in order that his case may be complete and final action taken as soon as the disease is apparently arrested. Instructions No. 20 governs in dealing with all tuberculous cases. It is suggested that you immediately take steps to procure the necessary specialist's report on all cases in your files.

"In dealing with mental cases, a very similar policy should govern. It is, of course, impossible to reach any decision on a mental case unless a psychiatric examination is in the file. On the basis of this examination it should be possible to tell at the present time whether or not the man is in need of training to overcome the handicap of his disability. If the man is not in need of training, the case should be stopped right then and there and no further action taken. If, however, a man is in need of training and training at the present time is not feasible, the case should be tickled ahead until such time as training probably will be feasible. The length of the tickle must be dictated again by the psychiatric examination.

"The cases in your files which the eligibility squad marked as 'Sick 90' should be tickled for the date of probable recovery as shown by the complete medical examination.

"A few cases in your files were labeled 'd 90' meaning 'not yet discharged.' A letter should be obtained from these men stating the probable date of their discharge and the case tickled ahead for that date. In the meantime, every effort should be used to complete this case prior to the man's discharge so that he may enter training the day he is discharged if he so desires."

From this letter it is apparent that the proper instructions as to the method of handling these cases were sent to the district vocational offices, and that Mr. Littledale's assumption as to the manner in which these cases were handled is intentionally misleading.

In proof of the extravagant statement quoted above, Mr. Littledale cites in the New York Evening Post of February 19 case 10520, which, according to his statement of that date, the eligibility squad classified as a mental case, although the man was suffering from tuberculosis. Case 10520 in the New York office is the case of a man whose disability is trench feet. Mr. Littledale further cites case 3047:

"Case 3047. The man's discharge paper says he is suffering from epilepsy. That no doubt is true. The eligibility squad marks him 'mental tickle 90 days.' That man was wounded and gassed. He has bronchitis. He needs treatment but the eligibility squad has hidden his case in the office files for three months."

The facts in this case are as follows: The official discharge records received from The Adjutant General of the Army showed that the man's disability was epilepsy which existed prior to enlistment. The records of The Adjutant General fail to show that the man was wounded in action. The man was discharged in October, 1918, at Plattsburg Barracks.

The examination made at that time failed to show that he was wounded and gassed and had bronchitis. The examination made at Plattsburg Barracks showed that the man was suffering from epilepsy which existed prior to enlistment. The man was again examined on June 27 by a physician employed by the Federal board. At that time, the diagnosis of epilepsy was substantiated and no evidence was discovered of any further disability. The man was again examined by the United States Public Health Service on December 17, and at this time the examination showed that he was suffering from chronic bronchitis. This examination, however, was made over a year after discharge from the service, and it is not certain that the bronchitis was due to service. Three examinations, one by the Army, one by the Federal board, and one by the United States Public Health Service failed to show that the man was wounded and gassed, as stated in the Evening Post.

In acting on this case the eligibility squad ruled that an examination by an expert psychiatrist was to be obtained, and that no action could be taken on the case until this examination was in the folder. It would obviously be impossible to arrange any course of training until the man's mental condition was known, inasmuch as the condition of epilepsy renders a man liable to industrial hazards. The man wishes to be trained as an electrician, which would be very hazardous in the light of his disability.

Charge 20.—"We charge that after 19 months nearly 80,000 disabled men (75 per cent of the total eligible for training) were waiting for the board to act."

In proof of this statement Mr. Littledale offers, in the first place, the figures of the board and, in the second place, a letter from the Chief of Division of Rehabilitation. Mr. Littledale takes the statement of the board that there were 129,912 live cases left on completion of the eligibility audit. To this number he adds 20,000 men as the number still in hospitals. The sum of these two figures is 149,912. This addition is correct and is the only item which is correct in Mr. Littledale's entire argument. After arriving at these figures, Mr. Littledale assumes that 110,000 of this group will be eligible for training. The problem of estimating the number of men who will be eligible for training which has been thus readily solved by Mr. Littledale has given experts who are familiar with the problem a great deal of difficulty. Mr. Littledale assumes that over 70 per cent of the men now in hospitals will be eligible for training. The present hospital population includes cases of influenza and other cases of acute diseases from which the men will quickly recover. It is probable that less than one-third of the men in the Army hospitals on any given date will be discharged for disability. It is also probable that not more than one-fourth of the men so discharged for disability will be eligible for training.

Digitized by Google

The number of men now in hospitals who will be eligible for training on discharge is probably not 20,000 as Mr. Littledale assumes. None of these men can be given training until they are discharged from the service. Mr. Littledale disregards entirely certain figures given him by the board. The figures show 19,431 men who had been rated ineligible for section 2 training and rated as eligible for section 3 training ouly. This 19,431 he includes in the 80,000 men still waiting training. These figures were given to Mr. Littledale by the board and the fact that he ignored this large group is typical of his ingenuity in misinterpreting and misconstruing facts.

It is apparent to any person who has studied the problem that all of the men who are eligible for training will not take training. Many of the men are satisfactorily employed and others to whose advantage it would be to take training can not be persuaded to take advantage of the opportunities given. On the basis of its previous experience the board estimates that not more than 55,000 men will take advantage of section 2 training. In considering this figure (55,000) it should be remembered that over 30,000 men have already entered training and that 25,000 others have been notified that they are approved or eligible for training. The statement that 75 per cent of the total number of men eligible for training are waiting for the board to act is, therefore, entirely without foundation.

As proof of his assertion that 75 per cent of the men eligible for training are waiting for the board to act, Mr. Littledale quotes a paragraph from a letter sent to all district vocational officers on February 10. This paragraph contained the statement that between 40 per cent and 50 per cent of the active cases in the district office were still unsettled. The term "unsettled" is apparently used by Mr. Littledale as synonymous with eligible, for he assumes that all of this group, plus 20,000 others still in hospitals, are unconditionally eligible for section 2 training. The facts in the case are that the board, in order to meet the task imposed upon it by Congress, has concentrated its efforts on the cases of the severely disabled men, and has first provided for the men whose disabilities constitute obvious major vocational handicaps. The cases of minor disability were allowed to wait until the more seriously disabled men had been cared for. The pending group which the chief of division mentions is composed almost entirely of border lines cases and cases in which there is considerable doubt concerning their eligibility for section 2 training. If these men had been eligible for training, their training would have been approved by the eligibility squad which was sent out for the purpose of clearing these cases. Over 12,000 cases were thus approved, and Mr. Littledale's assumption that the balance of the cases are entitled to training is obviously absurd. The reverse of this is true. This group consists almost entirely of minor disabilities, but the board has not informed the men that they are not eligible for section 2 training, as it desires to give these cases of minor disability the benefit of the doubt. A great many of these men have been medically examined and have been found to be without an occupational handicap. However, the board is unwilling to declare any man ineligible until after consideration of all the evidence which it may obtain.

Charge 21.—"We charge that there is no follow-up."

Mr. Littledale states: "The fact is that to follow up a man taking a commercial course, in Buffalo, for instance, an employee would have to be sent to Buffalo from the office in New York. As the district comprises three large States, follow-up is impracticable when that sort of thing has to be done."

This statement is false. The board has a branch office in Buffalo. Men can be and are followed up from that point as well as by agents who are specialists from New York City.

The principal function of the Buffalo office is to follow up men in training. There are other branch offices in the State of New York at Syracuse, Rochester, Albany, Watertown, Troy, and Utica. Other branch offices in district No. 2 are located at Newark, N. J.; Camden, N. J.; New Haven, Conn.; and Hartford, Conn. In addition to the 14 district offices, the board has 72 branch offices throughout the country established for the purpose of inducting men unto training and supervising them during the period of training without the travel and delay that would be necessary if such work were attempted from the district offices.

The principal work of these offices is like the one in Buffalo—to induct men into training and follow them up during training and locating them in employment. It is therefore not necessary to send men out from the New York district office to follow up cases in training as is charged. Follow-up ranges in frequency from daily contacts, in some cases, to regular bimonthly contacts in other cases. In district offices and branch office cities where approximately 80 per cent of the men in placement training are located, daily contact by phone is possible, in addition to the regular personal contacts. In making the necessary arrangements for training men on the job and inducting them into such training, it is necessary to make separate arrangements with the establishment in each case and this brings the officers of the board who handle this work into frequent contact with the men already in training.

That the board has a complete and adequate follow-up can not be maintained. The board has not the personnel, and is not likely to have a personnel large enough to give instant attention to every request made by men in training. The greatest task of the advisement and training sections of district offices, up to the present time, has been putting men into training, but this is by no means an admission that the follow-up and supervision has been neglected. Men in institutional training are followed up by the training assistants and training officers under the supervision of the supervisor of training in each district. These agents visit the institutions in which men are in training to ascertain whether or not they are succeeding in gaining knowledge and skill which will enable them to take positions as self-supporting citizens.

Every institution makes a monthly report to the district office of the progress of trainees in the institutions. These reports are kept on file in the district office and are carefully reviewed by a training assistant, whose duty it is to see that each institution is reporting properly regarding the men and that each man who shows negligence or who requires further advisement regarding his training receives proper attention.

The district offices have been advised that the first duty this year was to get men into training, so that they would be securing benefits to which they are justly entitled under the act, but the next great task was to develop plans for continuous follow up of the men and the institutions where the men are in training.

Individually students are given every opportunity to confer with the Federal board representatives on their visits to the institutions and to get from them whatever information they require, as well as frequent consultations with coordinators and counselors. In addition, through a cooperative arrangement with the Public Health Service, an officer is stationed at many institutions for such assistance as they may require. This is for the purpose of avoiding undue delay in correspondence and of giving the men more direct and immediate attention.

In the main this description applies to all district offices. There are differences in detail, made necessary by the size of the district, the ease of travel, the types of training being given, but it is the policy of the board to have in institutions remote from the district offices a permanent agent, known as a coordinator, if the number of students exceeds 100, and in the institution serving a smaller number a member of the faculty is appointed "counselor" to render special service and give advice, counsel, and help to the men in training on any matters affecting their welfare. If the institutions are in or near the district-office cities, it has directed that they shall be visited, inspected, and the work of the men supervised at least once a month by a qualified training assistant stationed at the district office. Such a man performs the duties assigned to a coordinator in the more remote places.

Should any further information be desired by the committee, additional information obtained from the original sources as to reports obtained and used will be submitted.

Charge No. 22.—"We charge that these disabled, ailing men are begrudged sick leave."

In support of this charge Mr. Littledale refers to paragraph No. 4 of a letter dated January 23, 1920. Paragraph No. 4 is as follows:

"So many extensions of the sick leave beyond the 30-day period are being made by the district offices, and so many requests for extensions are coming forward to central office that it will be necessary to rescind the authority granted in Instructions Nos. 37 and 150, revised, unless the district offices greatly reduce the number of extensions recommended and granted."

He did not quote paragraph No. 5 or No. 6, which are as follows:

"If a man is discontinued from a training status because of illness, central office will notify the bureau promptly in order that the man may receive compensation from the bureau in lieu of training pay from the board during the period of such illness, providing the man is entitled to compensation.

"Since the passage of Public, No. 104, Sixty-sixth Congress (Sweet bill), there is no difference in amount between training pay by the board and compensation by the bureau in the cases of men without dependents."

No sick leave was or is begrudged to any man in training, but hospital treatment is furnished by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance or the Public Health Service. If a man is under the care of the Public Health Service or the bureau for a period longer than 30 days, he is transferred from the pay roll of the Federal board to the pay roll of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. This is no neglect of the disabled men.

Charge No. 23.—"We charge that the board has failed to see the human problem involved in this work."

In support of the above charge, it is stated that the men have been approached with mimeographed letters having stamped signatures whereas personal contact is necessary.

The board has always emphasized the necessity of personal contact with the men, but where it has not been possible to reach the men by personal contact, follow-up letters have been sent. The board admits that individual letters, personally signed, are preferable, but again the saving of typing makes necessary the preparation of form letters. The form letters sent to Joseph Furphy has been submitted by Mr. Littledale. We ask that it be read again by the committee. In reading it should be remembered that Mr. Furphy was discharged from the Army with "no disability" on his discharge.

Instruction No. 90, paragraph No. 7, is quoted. The entire paragraph, however, is not given. It reads as follows: "The idea back of the program outlined in these instructions is that of giving service to the disabled men. If a man calls at a district office he should go out with a definite decision in regard to his case. Central office case board representatives are directed, however, not to interview disabled men. They are to pass on the actual evidence which is in the man's folder." It must be remembered that central office case board representatives are charged with the duty of seeing that the legal evidence necessary for the expenditure of Government money is in the man's folder. There are in every district office several persons who interview disabled men and who secure all the evidence necessary. If the central office case board representatives interview men, they can not do the work they are sent out to do, namely, see that the legal evidence is in the man's folder. It is not a system of paper work. It is a check on the filing of absolutely necessary evidence before Government money can be expended.

The same instructions, paragraph No. 6 states that the central office representative may pass on the same case any number of times. He may change the eligibility rating, providing he never changes a rating from eligible to noneligible, except where the eligibility rating is clearly an error and where the man has not been notified that he was eligible for training.

Charge No. 24.—"We charge that these men have been reduced to penury because of the board's delays."

For proof, Mr. Littledale points to the Elks' fund and quotes a letter of February 2d as follows:

"The Elks' fund, as you have been advised heretofore, is to be used in making loans in the nature of advancements to cover the monthly allowances due to the men in training but not received. On account of the great demand on this fund it was deemed advisable to supplement it, and this accomplished by the Red Cross funds W-Z-36."

There is nothing in the laws of the United States that permits the Federal Board for Vocational Education to make advance payments to men. As stated before, it was not physically possible for every man to have been interviewed and his eligibility for compensation or training determined at the time of discharge from the service. No provision was made by Congress for the carrying of men on the pay rolls of either the Army or Navy until such eligibility for compensation or training was determined.

In order to relieve the situation as far as possible, the Federal Board for Vocational Education determined to pay its beneficiaries twice a month. In other words, it is the only Government agency which has paid or is paying its beneficiaries more than once a month. The checks go out regularly to men in training, prior to the fifteenth and last of every month, and figures are submitted in a statement handed to the committee showing that the average length of time which elapses from the date a man enters training until his check leaves central office is 24 days, and in no case was the average length of time longer than 30 days.

To provide for the men during these 20 to 30 days, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Red Cross have each generously provided a loan fund which is not given to the board, but which passes from the organization direct to the man himself. So far, the Red Cross fund has not been used.

The motive in attacking the Elks' fund and the Red Cross fund is not understood.

The statement is made that the men find Government checks little more than scraps of paper. If this is true it is a charge against the Government of the United States, and against the banks who refuse to cash Government checks, and not against the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

The Federal Board for Vocational Education has no cash account to be used for the cashing of checks of men.

FINANCING MEN DURING THE FIRST MONTH OF TRAINING.

Owing to the fact that the statutes of the United States absolutely prohibit the use of appropriations made by the Government for advancement unless authorized by Congress, the financing of disabled men during the first month of training presented one of the most serious problems that confronted the board. Section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act authorized the board to receive such gifts and donations from either public or private sources as may be offered unconditionally, and it was believed that possibly this fund could be utilized in making advancements to disabled men to be used for their maintenance and support prior to the receipt of the maintenance allowance due them under the act. The statute authorizing the gift fund, however, limits its use "to defraying the expenses of providing and maintaining courses of vocational training," and consequently the question was submitted to the comptroller as to whether or not it could be used in making advance payments. As the decision of the comptroller was adverse and the problem of getting money in the hands of the disabled men became more and more pressing, it was necessary that some method should be devised to meet the situation in needy cases as a means to maintaining courses. The men in a large measure were without funds. A complete clothing outfit was necessary in practically every case before training could be commenced and unless some provision could be made under which the board could furnish these necessary articles and secure for the men a fund from which advances could be made great hardships would ensue and the program of rehabilitation seriously retarded.

Acting under the authority granted by section 5 of the act in which the board is authorized in its discretion "to cooperate with such public or private agencies as it may deem advisable in performing the duties imposed upon it" the board interested various private organizations in its work, and arranged with the American Red Cross, the Rotary Clubs of America, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, to make the necessary advancements direct to the men. Under the terms of the arrangement with the Elks the order agreed to set aside the sum of $25,000, afterwards increased to $200,000, to be used as a revolving fund in making loans to disabled men entering training, in order that they might be saved from privation and be assured of their training by the Federal Board. As custodian of this fund, it designated Dr. C. A. Prosser, director of the board, and later, after Dr. Prosser's resignation, Mr. E. J. Aronoff. The fund was deposited in the National Bank of Washington to the credit of the Elk's War Relief Commission for disabled soldiers and the district vocational officers of the board, as individuals, were authorized by the Elks to draw on this fund by means of sight drafts and to loan the money received to disabled men, obtaining therefrom a properly signed receipt and a promise to repay in installments upon receipt of the maintenance and support allowance due. All repayments of loans are made direct by the disabled men to the Elk's War Relief Commission, and as a matter of fact the only time that the money is out of its possession is during the period when loaned to the disabled men. At the time that this cooperative arrangement was negotiated, in order to reduce as far as possible the period to be financed by these loans, the board directed that the maintenance and support allowances due the trainee should be paid semimonthly instead of monthly; the added work occasioned thereby being deemed justifiable under the circumstances. At the present time a somewhat similar cooperative arrangement has been made with the American Red Cross, although it has not, up to the present time, been necessary to use any money from this source. The board therefore has through these cooperative arrangements made available to the men $275,000, which may be drawn upon during the first few weeks of training.

These cooperative arrangements have been referred to as in direct violation of the law and contrary to its spirit, whereas as a matter of fact these agreements are based upon specific authority granted by Congress to the Federal Board.

Charge 25.—"We charge that the board has adopted an attitude of hostility toward the disabled soldier."

In support of this charge alleged conversations with several employees are cited.

The reporting of isolated conversations by employees is no evidence of the attitude of the board or of its responsible agents. That attitude is fully shown in miscellaneous 150, and in letters of instruction and information sent out, as well as by repeated statements made by members of the board to individuals and to groups of its employees. As expressed by Secretary Redfield, the attitude has always been "pro-boy" and as repeatedly stated by Mr. Munroe, the agents of the board are to carry out the law but always "with a leaning to the side of mercy toward the disabled soldier."

Charge 26.—"We charge that the board exploited the disabled men in politics."

In support of this statement Mr. Littledale says that the board wrote a letter to mayors of American cities. A copy of a letter sent to mayors of American cities and also a copy of a letter sent to editors of newspapers is hereby submitted.

"C. L. 533, OCTOBER —, 1919.

TIPS TO EDITORS—CONFIDENTIAL.

What is the mayor of your town doing to help the returned wounded or disabled soldier, sailor, or marine? Kindly suggest to him that "The mayor is known to have the interest of our wounded heroes at heart." If the mayor is a good politician he will eagerly grab such a chance for popularity and votes by giving a feature story.

The Federal Board for Vocational Education is trying to get in touch with every returned soldier who suffered a disability handicap which will require vocational reeducation to overcome it. Your paper has influence. Won't you use that influence in this great cause?

Sincerely, yours,

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

C. L. 522, OCTOBER —, 1919.

The honorable MAYOR,
Municipal Building.

DEAR SIR: The Federal Board for Vocational Education wishes to come in contact with every veteran of the Great War who suffered a disability resulting in a handicap which will require vocational reeducation to overcome it.

The mayor can reach such cases in his community without much trouble. The newspaper boys are always asking the mayor for news. The fact that the mayor knows the method of reaching the Federal Board for Vocational Education and the further fact that the mayor is interested to the extent of giving some of his personal time, makes a corking good story. The local paper is glad to print such news. The public is gratified to know that the mayor is taking such interest in his community.

Will you cooperate with the board to see that every veteran who is entitled to vocational rehabilitation under the law, is given a clear understanding of the opportunity presented?

Sincerely, yours,

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

Charge 27.—"Finally, we charge that the following is part of a circular written in central office of this board."

Mr. Littledale states, referring to this circular, "I saw it—I copied it."

He should be required to state where he saw it, whether or not it was signed, and if so, by whom it was signed. The board had no knowledge of any such document until the statement concerning it made by the New York Evening Post, and the inquiry which it immediately instituted was satisfactorily answered by communications from

Mr. Lamkin, Chief of the Division of Rehabilitation, and Mr. C. C. Brigham, explaining that such circular was never issued as an order or instruction of the board or of its responsible agents.

TRAINING IN UNIVERSITY OF LOUISIANA.

Much has been made over the fact that a number of men have been placed in training at the University of Louisiana who, because of lack of previous education, did not fit into the institution. In the Evening Post of February 19, 1920, a letter was quoted commenting on the fact that these men were not well prepared by previous education to enter the unviversity, but stating that the university authorities had agreed to make suitable arrangements for them.

A list of the men in training at the University of Louisiana, together with a statement concerning their previous occupation, education, age, and disability, is herewith submitted. It will be noted that there are but 35 men in training in that institution.

Scott, Nap. Brown	6-79579	Agriculture; 1 year; student; 21 years; gassed, lungs affected; tenth grade.
Sevier, Henry C	6-10198	Law; 1 year; farmer; 23 years; gunshot wound left arm and left knee; 2 years university.
Thompson, Frederick J	6-32927	Law; 1 year; student; 22 years; bronchial pneumonia and weak back.
Judice, Didier Philip	6-11851	Agriculture; 1 year; carpenter; 23 years; amputated right leg, lower third; 1 year high school, transferred to Southwestern La. Ind. Inst.
Payne, Frank T	6-7556	Civil engineer; 1 year; student; 21 years; epilepsy; 1 year high school, discontinued May 31, 1919, health.
Kellum, Wm. Lewis	6-20476	Sugar chemistry; 1 year; student; 20 years; hernia ventral right, post operative; third year college. Man died Oct. 24, 1919.

As I have said, there have been brought here 14 or 15 disabled soldiers with real or fancied grievances, and they have been heard at considerable length. The board could bring, if it so chose, for every one of those witnesses with a real or alleged grievance, at least 1,000 men who would gladly testify that they have been treated with courtesy, with promptness, and with intelligence by the board, and that they are now securing a training from which they expect to get the highest possible benefits; but, of course, it would be absurd to spend the Government's money, and it would be a waste of those men's time to bring them down here, and therefore I will ask to put in as Exhibit B extracts from a number of hundred letters received from men, before this investigation was even talked of, and therefore were sent to us without any idea of their being used for this purpose. I will not read all of these extracts, but I will just read a few to give you an idea of the character of them. The first is from Henry W. Boggess, of the Central Business College, of Sedalia, Mo., under date of October 13, 1919:

I consider it a highly esteemed favor to be afforded the opportunity to express to the public my opinion of the high-grade work that is being conducted by the Federal Board for Vocational Education and given to the disabled soldiers of the world war. I regret that words will not express my appreciation of the laudable work of the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

Mr. A. V. Ludwig, on January 24, 1920, principal of the Central Business College, the same college, writes:

Of the five students which were placed here with us by the Federal Board three have good positions, Mr. Rodney Simmons has an office position with the Gate City National Bank, Kansas City, Mo.; George V. Wright has a general office position with the Aultman & Taylor Machinery Co., Kansas City, Mo.; Henry W. Boggess was placed by us directly with the Sinclair Oil Co., Tulsa, Okla., as stenographer and office man at $125 per month.

Mr. George W. Brunz, Seattle, Wash., under date of October 21, 1919, says:

I expect to make good as motion-picture machine operator unless my wound gives me more trouble. When I went into training six weeks ago, I also took a little elementary work, as you know, at the Y. M. C. A., but could not continue on account of my training taking all my time as an operator. I now have a position at a suburban motion-picture house paying me $30 a week for 3½ hours in the evening. I am promised within six months a house down town for not less than $50 a week for six hours a day six days per week.

On October 30, 1919, Perry Reed, of New London, Conn., writes:

There were only three days between the time of my discharge and my entry upon training under the Federal Board. I wish to thank the Federal Board through you for the prompt and careful consideration which my case received.

This was addressed to one of the D. V. O's.

On November 5, 1919, George Rowland, of Baltimore, Md., writes:

I wish to say that I appreciate what the Federal board has done for me in helping me to finish this course which I started July 1 at Fort McHenry. I am sure that any man who thinks he is out of luck does not need to think that way, as I thought the same thing when I first started. There are positions for first-class men ranging anywhere from $50 to $60 a week.

I am taking a position as an instructor at one of the United States general hospitals at a salary of $162 per month. I wish to say this about the Federal board, that they are as much interested in the men, if not more so, than we are, as they are always wanting reports to show how the men are getting along.

On December 23, 1919, John L. White, of Fullerton Avenue, Chicago, Ill., writes:

Immediately after being discharged I applied for vocational education and was given the exact course I wanted. I am taking a post-graduate course in medicine.

Julius Schnitzer and about 11 other men, at Massey's Business College, Birmingham, Ala., on August 12, 1919, write:

In view of the fact that within recent weeks sensational statements have been printed in a certain newspaper in one of our southern cities—

That was taken from the American Legion Weekly, I presume—designed to show that the Federal Board for Vocational Education has not kept faith with the disabled soldiers in the matter of vocational training, we are issuing this voluntary statement of appreciation of the service which this board has rendered us.

On May 15, 1919, Donald L. Baxter, of Syracuse, N. Y., writes:

My life's work as I had wished it would be electrical engineering, and the Federal board is making it possible for me to do this. I can not express my appreciation for the splendid work that the board is doing. Men don't overlook this splendid opportunity. They can help each man in any way that he needs it and are giving a square deal to everyone.

William Phipps, of Lexington, Ky., under date of October 28, 1919, writes:

I desire to reiterate my appreciation of the kind and courteous treatment accorded me by all agents of the board with whom I have come in contact.

Alva R. Hutchinson, of Emory University, Ga., writes under date of December 16, 1919:

I was discharged from the Army March 20, 1919, and on the 21st day of March, 1919—

One day after he was discharged—

I resumed my studies at Emory University leading into ministerial work under the supervision of the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

John B. Breazeale, Tulane University, New Orleans, La., under date of June 11, 1919, writes:

I am writing to thank you for your aid and advice for showing me the path to take and in the hope that it will help some other man to make up his mind and seize the opportunity that you offer. The year's work is finished and I wish to tell you how I made out at college, and to express my appreciation for all that the Government through the board has done for me.

Noble Stibolt, University of Illinois, writes, on December 6, 1919:

I applied for vocational training, hoping to reeducate myself for this work. I had very little trouble in securing this training. I received free transportation to the university, free tuition, free books, and every 15 days I have received a check of $40 to cover my living expenses.

Charles E. Stout, Gibson, N. Mex., January 19, 1920, writes:

I often wish I had done as you wanted me to and take something else. I insisted upon being a barber. I am running a shop here, and I just make a living and that is all. I can not stand on my foot long. If it is so that I can take training again I will be more than thankful.

Of course, under the law he can take training again.

William R. Caldwell, of Sterrett Street, Covington, Ky., writes, on May 23, 1919:

I am well satisfied with this course, and upon its completion expect to enter the lumber business as an office manager, and shortly will receive a far greater salary than I had before I enlisted.

Aaron Kozakowsky, of Yonkers, N. Y., on October 8, 1919, writes:

I am very thankful to you for the interest you have shown me. It surely was very fine of the board that they gave me an opportunity of learning this business. The Federal board deserves great credit for what they are doing for us boys who have been disabled for life.

Charles Keller, of New York City, on October 19, 1919, writes:

I am very thankful to you for procuring me this store, as I feel that I will be very successful. I am also grateful to the Federal board for their courteous treatment and for giving me this wonderful opportunity.

That is, we gave him a few weeks or a few months training and then helped him in starting in a store.

Matron W. Shepard, of Berwyn, Md., writes:

You have shown us soldiers every consideration and attention in your power. Speaking for the other men, I want to say that your interest has been as great in them, if not more, and we are well placed in your debt. We wish you to know that we appreciate the efforts you have made in our behalf.

August J. Martin, of Seattle, Wash., on May 26, 1919, writes:

I am still with the Hoskins Machine Co., 90 Jackson Street, at a wage of $4 per day. I am now getting the benefit of my intensive training. I am now where any other man would have to put in two years to get by the old apprenticeship system. I am holding down the job that a man of two years' training fell down on.

Mr. TOWNER. Are there many more you desire to read?

Mr. MUNROE. I was just going to stop reading these. I will put the others in the record, if I may.

Mr. TOWNER. How many do you desire to put in, Mr. Munroe?

Mr. MUNROE. As many as the committee is willing to print.

Mr. TOWNER. How many did you read, do you remember?

Mr. MUNROE. I think I read about 15 or 20.

Mr. TOWNER. How many more have you?

Mr. MUNROE. I think they are about 250 altogether. These are extracts.

Mr. TOWNER. I think the printing in the record of those you have already read with a statement of the fact that you proffer for the record 200 others will be sufficient.

Mr. MUNROE. Then, I will put in, as I have been requested to do so, the statement signed by about 200 students:

We, the undersigned students under the Federal Board for Vocational Education, believe that the Federal Board for Vocational Education is very efficient in its required duties, under the present conditions, and regret that it should at this time be a target of public criticism and contempt.

Digitized by Google

This is sent to me by Mr. Frank H. Meehan, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and is signed by—I have not counted the number, but I should say about 150 or 200 men.

Mr. ROBSION. What is the date of that?

Mr. MUNROE. It is of recent date, March 25, 1920.

Mr. TOWNER. The record will show the fact that that is a copy of the petition, but we will not copy the names because that will not be of any value. We want to save as much printing as we possibly can.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. But we want the board to have the opportunity to make a full record of the matters they think ought to go in the record.

Mr. MUNROE. As to the charge made by Mr. Littledale, that the Federal board is top heavy and is responsible to no one but Congress, it is not a question, of course, for the board to settle. I would like to call to your attention, however, the fact that the three members of the Cabinet who are ex-officio members of the board have always taken an active part in the framing of all general policies and were, as in a story which I will give later of a long struggle to secure freedom for the board and a square deal for the disabled soldiers, a tower of strength through that time. Of course, the board reports formally to Congress four times a year and, in addition, has made extended statements to the Committee on Appropriations when it has appeared before them.

As to the charge that the board is still organizing, we are very happy to say that it is. We are continually adapting our procedure to the very rapidly changing conditions of the work. We might in the very beginning before we had very many disabled boys to deal with have built up a large organization top heavy and expensive, but, on the contrary, we have tried to build up the organization as it was needed and to gradually extend it as the work itself has extended.

Of course, one thing that has not always been made clear is that the amendment to the rehabilitation act passed July 11, 1919, placed very many new responsibilities upon the board, the main thing, of course, which was placed upon us being the entire responsibility for paying the maintenance of the men while they are in training. That led, of course, to a very large increase in the appropriations and in the staff. This represented, however, merely a transfer of expenditure and of staff from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance to the Federal board.

The next charge made by Mr. Littledale, that the board abandoned a post of duty by taking men out of the hospitals, is not fact at all. When the Congress passed the sundry civil bill in the latter part of June, 1919, it would have required us in order to meet the salary limitations therein placed, to dispense with about 200 of our better-paid employees, but rather than disrupt the entire service we looked it over very carefully and decided that the best place in which curtailment could take place was in the hospitals which were then being very rapidly closed. Consequently, about 80 men were withdrawn from the hospitals and assigned to the diuties of other men whom we let go. But later legislation permitted us to restore, about three weeks later, that hospital service.

The charge that there is needless duplication of effort and that the 14 district offices have no power is absolutely without foundation. Our district offices since we were able to act freely under the legislation of July, 1919, are given practically absolute power except in the matter of placing men in schools where the tuition fee is more than $500 a year—there are only a few such, I am happy to say—and where it is a question of the man's course of training occupying more than two years. In all other cases it is in the hands of the district offices to settle without reference to central office, except, of course, to make a report so that our records may be kept clear.

The bills are paid through the central office at Washington in order to protect the Treasury. But the district offices, as I say, have power to put men into training and they have absolute power within the limits of a very liberal table of organization which we have put into their hands to appoint all their clerical personnel.

The next charge that Mr. Littledale specifically brought is that the board has no definite policy, and he put in two letters, one from Mr. Charles H. Winslow, and the other from Mr. Griffin. As to the letter from Mr. Winslow, he himself testified that that was not his letter of resignation; that letter was merely a formal resignation without giving any reasons for it.

As to the resignation of Mr. Griffin, without going into details, it is sufficient to say that it was decided to transfer Mr. Griffin for the good of the service. The cause of his transfer was not, as claimed, the fact that he was too sympathetic toward the soldiers, but one of the reasons was that he would spend an entire day with one soldier, going all over New York City, perhaps, to settle his case, and leaving hundreds of others that did not happen to get his personal attention, not properly cared for. They would have been cared for if this gentleman had had the ability properly to organize his office, but after giving him every possible chance to organize his office, it was finally decided that it was best to transfer him elsewhere, and thereupon he resigned.

The charge is made that I failed to safeguard the soldiers' interests by declining to remain in New York to sign a lease. It is not necessary to tell you gentlemen that a single member of a board like ours could not sign a lease without authority from the board itself. I looked into the situation very carefully, saw the agents of the building and assured them that every consideration would be given, and, as a matter of fact, the building was finally secured. The complications at that particular place were due mainly to the fact that the Air Nitrates Corporation were trying to unload their responsibilities for that building upon this board and I was doing every thing I could, and we finally succeeded, to prevent that.

As regards the story that has been told about the Munsey Building, where we were first located in New York, I know all about that, and the whole reason of the delay in payment of rent was because the Munsey Building owners absolutely refused to sign the kind of lease that the Government requires, properly safeguarding the Government. They insisted instead that we should sign a lease in which the Government should assume all sorts of obligations that it is not willing to and should not assume. We had a great number of conferences, at some of which I was present, and finally the only way in which the thing could be settled was by an offer and acceptance, thus avoiding signing the kind of lease which we were unwilling to sign. I authorized that to be done because we were safely out of the building and there could not be any complications. Nevertheless, the Munsey people attempted to blacklist the board all over New York City, and one of the great difficulties we have had in that New York situation is because of the stories which they spread about us, whereas we were simply safeguarding the Government's interests by declining to sign a lease which would have obligated the Government to things which it has no right to assume.

The allegations as to Mr. Clark and the high rental being paid at the present quarters have been answered by Mr. Clark himself and by the affidavits which he has filed, showing that we are paying no higher rental in that building than are any of the other tenants. We went to great trouble in the matter of that New York situation in order to bring together the four organizations that have to deal with the disabled soldier, namely, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the Public Health Service, the Red Cross, and ourselves, and if you gentlemen have had anything to do with New York real estate you know how very difficult it is to obtain satisfactory quarters of the size required for occupation by a pretty large organization. I personally gave a great deal of time to trying to find a proper place and we are satisfied that these quarters are the very best and cheapest we could obtain in New York City.

As to the charge that the board has been lax in the payment of bills, I shall later give testimony which will show the chief reason for these delays.

As to the Post Graduate Hospital charge which has been brought forward specifically by Mr. Littledale, I will say that I held that charge up myself for several months until I was absolutely satisfied that it was not exorbitant. On the face of it, it seemed outrageous and it was necessary for me to study the situation.

Mr. ROBSION. What are you referring to now?

Mr. MUNROE. The Post Graduate Hospital. One of the charges made by Mr. Littledale is that we held that bill up for a long time. That charge seemed to me outrageous and it was only due to the fact that a study of the situation showed that the particular work which this group of disabled boys wanted could be secured at no other place than at the Post Graduate Hospital that I allowed this account to go through. It does not seem to me that it comes with very good grace from this institution, that is receiving possibly the highest fee that we are paying anywhere, to whine about not getting payments promptly.

As to Columbia University, the testimony of the financial officer himself showed that we had paid everything that was due up to date. The $15,000 charge which has been brought forward was not due until the service should have been rendered to the boys at the expiration of the term, which is some time in June. Naturally, the Government does not pay its bills in advance but only when the service has been rendered, and knowing this, its financial officer had not even brought in his bills to the Federal board, as he himself testified. Consequently, that was not a very serious charge against us. As to the bookseller, Hartog, who said that we had been very lax in the payment of bills for supplies, we would not have patronized that service at all had it not been so tied up with Columbia University that there was no other way in which we could get those supplies. The reason his vouchers have been held up is because a great number of them have charges on them that was felt were not properly incurred. We are carefully looking into the matter and making sure that they are the proper charges before those bills are paid.

The next charge, made by Mr. Littledale, that certain employees drew two salaries is absolutely without foundation. We secured written authority from the comptroller, when the rehabilitation work was placed upon the Federal board, to split salaries between the work of vocational education and that of vocational rehabilitation, because a certain number of officers would have to do work for both, such as the financial officer, the director, and four or five others. We might perfectly well, under the law, have set up a second group of officials, paying the first vocational education group the same salaries they had had and paying this new group of seven or eight men equal salaries; but we chose to save money for the Government by asking these gentlemen to assume both duties, duties under the rehabilitation and duties under the vocational education, and allowing their salaries to be split. With three of the officers we made additions of two or three hundred dollars to their salaries because of the great amount of increased work which they would have to do under this arrangement. However, we saved in the whole a great many thousands of dollars to the Government by this arrangement.

The next allegation is that training is often a pretense, and there was brought forward the case of a linotype operator, and also of a man with 100 per cent heart trouble. A member of the committee himself stated that a man who had had training in the printing business could easily learn the linotype in six months, and the cases to which we have given linotype training are men who have had, some of them, quite long experience in the printing business. As to the man with 100 per cent heart trouble, it does not seem to me that he would need any training at all. I should think he would be dead.

Another criticism brought forward emphasizes the fact that this training that we are giving is not a pretense, namely Mr. Littledale's criticism that we had put less than 200 men into employment at the time that he testified. The reason we have not done that is because we are giving these men real courses of education either in schools or colleges or in actual industry or business itself. Five thousand men, for example, are in placement training and are getting their training right on the job, but they are not ready to go on to a job under salary, and, therefore, they have not yet been graduated.

At the time the testimony was given we had practically had those men in training only about six months, and as a rule the shortest training that we are giving averages about 10 months and most of the men are going to get at least a year's training and in many cases two or three years' training, so that they will be really equipped when they get through to go back on the job and be able to earn very much more in many cases than before they went into the Army.

The charge by Mr. Littledale that 10 per cent of the men who began training have discontinued is extremely gratifying in that the percentage is so small. As you gentlemen well know, a dropping out of only 10 per cent from a group of men following any course of education is a very small one. As a matter of fact, the percentage now of men dropping out is somewhere between 8 and 9, and of those, about 25 per cent, after they have received their health—dropping out being largely due to recurrence of the man's disability—25 per cent of those men go back into training later. So the net loss in that way is, therefore, not over 6 or 7 per cent, which is far better than the record of any educational institution in this country.

The next charge of Mr. Littledale, that 30 per cent of the men approved for training are not in training, is no reflection upon the board at all, because under our procedure it leaves the matter of taking training entirely voluntary with the man himself. We arrange the training for him; we take every possible means of making it clear to him how beneficial it would be for him to take this education, but, of course, we have no way of forcing him to take it. We have, however, done everything we could to persuade these men by getting the cooperation of the Red Cross, of the various soldier organizations, and so on, to put the thing up to the man and persuade him to take the work that has been laid out for him. Many of these men, of course, do not feel quite physically able to undertake the work that we have planned for them, and in the present demand for labor thousands of these fellows for whom training has been arranged are getting such high wages that they do not think it is worth while to go through the labor of getting training. They do not realize that this abnormal state of things is not going on forever. But when the time comes that these men see things in the proper light they can take up the training. There is no limit, within reason of course, to the length of time at which training opportunity is open to the men. Should we have an industrial depression, thousands of these fellows who are now employed would come and seek the training that we have arranged for them.

The next charge that the eligibility squad threw out cases is disproved by the figures that will be presented. The actual analysis of the handling of these cases that Mr. Littledale charges were thrown out wholesale shows that 53,051 of these cases had been transferred to another district. The district receiving the cases was in position to handle the men and the original district dropped the cases; therefore, they were thrown out as duplication. One thousand five hundred and seventy-five cases had been opened in the district offices in error; a large proportion of these men were duplicates and were naturally thrown out.

The eligibility squad, which is a body of men, as has been explained, made up of men who had been thoroughly well trained in this whole business of training and placement in the central office and are then sent out throughout the country to handle the work in cooperation with the district offices, this eligibility squad closed 35,431 cases, and 12,923 cases had been previously closed by central office, making a total of 48,534 cases. These cases are closed for the following reasons: Man had died; had reenlisted in the service; he had not been discharged from the Army but had been placed on the retired list and was, therefore, not eligible under the law; stated that he did not desire training; requested that his case be closed and that no more letters be written to him; was apparently not interested in training as evidenced by failing to respond to several letters. We always sent at least three letters to every man with return address so as to make sure that they are received. Also, if man can not be located, we make inquiry from the office of The Adjutant General, in Washington, and at the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the local Red Cross, and the American Legion, and other agencies, in the hope of discovering his present address. Of course, that, gentlemen, is really our greatest difficulty. These men are moving about so that it is very difficult to keep track of them. Men were carrying on successfully in employment and were not in need of training. There were thousands of cases in which the men had no disability and claimed none. The man's disability was a negligible handicap and therefore did not come under the law. The man's disability was a minor handicap and he had stated he was not interested in section 3 training, which was all we could give him under the law. There are thousands of such cases. All we can offer many men under the law is section 3 training, paying tuition and maintenance, and naturally many of these men can not take it up on this basis. Then there are the cases of men who were only in the Army a few days before discharge from the draft and they do not come under the law at all. Then there were cases where the information was so meager it was impossible to establish contact with the man. Or the man had left the country. Last, there were the cases of men who had not been discharged from the Army under honorable conditions.

Cases once closed can be reopened at any time and we are continually taking up cases when we get new data, or where we at last get hold of a man, we reopen the case and put him in training.

The next allegation that the eligibility squad, the squad already referred to, marked the metal cases insane would be serious if true. As a matter of fact, the board has gone far beyond the letter of the law in all such cases, and has done everything possible to deal with what you gentlemen will recognize as the most difficult and serious part of this problem. There were discharged from the Army thousands and thousands of men with active or arrested tuberculosis, thousands and thousands of men in a bad mental state, which may be permanent, which may be curable, and men with difficulties of one sort and another that make it impossible for them to take up training at this time. The most serious of these, of course, are the so-called mental cases, epileptics, men with so-called "shell shock," and things of that sort. In order that we may deal properly and humanely with these cases, it has been made the rule in all offices that these cases are to be tickled, so-called, in 90 days, 60 days, or 30 days, according to the man's state of health. If his recovery seems likely to take place soon, tickle 30 days when the case may be reopened and reviewed. If longer, 60 to 90 days, but never longer than 90 days. Every one of these men's cases must be reviewed at the end of 90 days in the hope that he may have got well enough to begin training.

Along those same lines we have established the closest cooperation with the Bureau of Public Health in the matter of hospitals for the tuberculous which they are establishing in various parts of the country. We are already carrying on in those hospitals training for half an hour a day, an hour a day, or three hours a day, as the case may be, under the supervision of the doctor, so that a man may make as much progress as it is possible for him to make under the condition of his health. In the matter of the so-called mental cases, we are establishing the same sort of relations with the hospitals, so that a man may be given some preliminary training in order that the moment his mental condition permits, we may take hold of him and give him vocational training outside the hospital. Consequently, the statement that we are neglecting these men is exactly contrary to the fact.

The charge that 80,000 disabled men are still waiting for the board to act is based upon a juggling with figures complicated by wild guesses. As I have already pointed out to you in the beginning of my testimony, so far as determining the eligibility for training and settling upon the training of the men who are out of the Army or out of the hospitals is concerned, we have practically taken care of 90 per cent of the task. Of the men remaining in the hospitals, of course we can not take hold of them until they are discharged from the Army. But a month ago the cases actually remaining undetermined were about 60,000. These were almost wholly minor disabilities regarding which we had not received from the man or from the proper authorities within the Army the necessary information as to his eligibility under the law.

At the utmost not more than a third of the 60,000 men are likely to be in any way eligible under the law, and under present conditions, judging from experience with others, not over 50 per cent of the one-third would avail themselves of the opportunity were it offered to them. At the outside, therefore, not over 10,000 training cases of men who are eligible for training were undetermined on March 1, and, of course, since that time many of those cases have been taken care of. Therefore, before the end of this fiscal year the eligibility of all men who are in a condition to take up training will have been settled by the board, and the job, so far as eligibility goes, will have been settled; but, of course, other additional new cases will arise.

Mr. ROBSION. When will that be?

Mr. MUNROE. Before the end of this fiscal year; that is, the first day of July?

Mr. TOWNER. It will be necessary for the committee to adjourn at this time. It will be impossible to have a hearing this afternoon on account of the work in Congress, but we will have an evening session at 8 o'clock. The committee will be adjourned until that time.

(Thereupon, at 11.50 o'clock a. m., the committee adjourned to meet again at 8 o'clock p. m., April 29, 1920.)

NIGHT SESSION.

The committee reassembled, pursuant to recess, at 8 o'clock p. m., Hon. Horace M. Towner presiding.

Mr. TOWNER. The committee will come to order. Mr. Munroe, you may resume your statement.

STATEMENT OF MR. JAMES P. MUNROE—Resumed.

Mr. MUNROE. The character of the next charge is made evident by the statement that "to follow up a man taking a commercial course in Buffalo, an employee would have to be sent to Buffalo from the office in New York." The board has long had a branch office in Buffalo, as well as at Syracuse, Rochester, Albany, Watertown, Troy, and Utica. Not only are schools and other training places regularly inspected, but they are required to furnish a monthly report. At all the larger centers of training there are counsellors and coordinators whose duty is to look after the daily progress of the disabled men.

I would like to put in the record here, Mr. Chairman, if I may, a list of the 100 suboffices that we have, in addition to the 14 district offices, to show that we are not negligent in the matter of looking after the local interests of the men.

Mr. TOWNER. Without objection it is so ordered.

(The list referred to is as follows:)

District offices.

No.	District vocational officer.	Address.	States.

Mr. MUNROE. The charge that the board begrudges men sick leave is not only wrong but foolish, because since the passage of the Sweet bill it makes no difference whether the man takes training under us or under the War Risk Insurance Bureau on leave. He gets the same in each case. When a man is ill more than 30 days, we generally transfer him to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, where he is taken care of until recovery and retransfer to us.

The charge that the men were reduced to penury in the earlier months of their experience under the act will be taken up by me later. The Elks' fund and similar funds given by the Red Cross were devices of the board to relieve a very bad situation. By the board's prompt action the Government was saved from a condition little short of disgraceful, but for which the board was in no way responsible. Why the generosity of the Elks and the Red Cross should be regarded as a charge against the board is difficult to see.

Digitized by Google

In this connection, I would like to explain a little more about the Elks' fund. The Elks made an agreement with us, agreeing to set aside a sum first of $25,000, which they afterwards increased to $200,000, to be used as a revolving fund for making loans to disabled men entering training, where provision was made for their training by the Federal board. That was afterwards increased and has been a most beneficial thing, because, as the committee are aware, even under the promptest service there must always elapse two weeks. Of course, as you know, we pay the men twice a month instead of once a month, and there must always elapse that period of two weeks after a man goes into training before he can get his first pay. As a matter of fact, the average time, even in the remoter regions, is not more than 20 days, but many men, when they go into training, have not any surplus funds at all, and this Elks' fund has been very valuable in helping these men over the intermediate time, and the committee will be interested to know that the honesty of the men in returning these loans is something really remarkable. I have not the exact figures, but I think I am safe in saying that between 80 and 90 per cent of the loans are returned promptly when the man gets his regular pay under the law.

The letters to mayors and newspaper men used to bolster up the charge of exploitation were one of many devices that the board had to use to get in touch with disabled men because, as you know, tens of thousands of these men had been discharged, before the law was passed at all, from camps in this country, and then for reasons which I will show later it was a good many months before we could get information even to men in hospitals as to the law and so a good many men were discharged from the hospitals without any knowledge of the situation. Therefore, it was necessary for us to resort to all kinds of devices in order to make the men aware of what the Government was ready to do under this rehabilitation law. The letters to mayors was one of these devices, and to show that it was efficacious I have here copies of letters from mayors all over the country expressing the greatest interest and assuring us of their cooperation. The result has been that probably hundreds, if not thousands, of the men that have come to us, have come through the steps that we took in regard to letting the mayors know.

As to the so-called "hard-boiled" order, Mr. Littledale himself proved his own statements to be not so, by acknowledging that, in the hands of some person whom he refused to name, in a city which he declined to locate, he had seen a typed sheet with no address, no heading, no date, and no signature, on which he had read certain phrases later built up by him, in newspaper scareheads, into an alleged order sent out by the Federal board. No order containing any such phrases was sent out by the board or any official of the board. The language of the alleged order should have been sufficient to disprove that the board could have sent out anything of the sort. The manufacturing of a hugh slander upon the board, it seems to me, out of material like this, is a very questionable proceeding.

In addition to his 27 specific points, Mr. Littledale made several other accusations in the newspaper which he represents, which it seems to me should receive attention. He asserted that the board is not employing ex-service men. It could not do so, of course, in the beginning, but as early as January 25, 1919, the following letter was sent out by Dr. Chandler, who was at that time Chief of the Division of Rehabilitation:

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION,
OFFICE OF THE BOARD,
Washington, January 25, 1919.

From: Chief Division of Rehabilitation.
To: All district vocational officers.
Re: Further appointments on staff.

1. In view of the fact that many soldiers and sailors are now being discharged from the military and naval service of the United States who are well qualified for positions in the Rehabilitation Division of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, the plan has been adopted of making all further appointments, so far as possible, from this class of applicants.

2. District vocational officers will kindly keep this in mind in making recommendations for appointment and in transmitting data concerning applicants for positions.

Very truly, yours,

J. A. C. CHANDLER,
Chief Division of Rehabilitation.

Then, on August 25, 1919, "Information No. 11" was sent out, stating--I am now quoting:

We feel that it would be well to have on our rolls as large a proportion of ex-service men, both disabled and nondisabled, as it is practicable to employ, with due consideration to the efficiency of the service.

As of March of this year, nearly half the male employees are ex-service men, and of those, 96 are known to have been disabled. The central office case board, which passes on all cases referred to Washington and on all appeals, is made up of 10 laymen and 6 medical officers. Of these 16 all but 1 are veterans of the World War, and the remaining 1 served in the Spanish-American War.

In the Post has often been repeated the wild assertion that the board pays $111 in salaries for every $6 paid for tuitions of disabled men. This is, of course, purposely misleading, since the tuition fee is only one of the smaller items of expenditure for the disabled men. As a matter of fact and despite the great complexity of the undertaking, the average cost of administering the rehabilitation law from the beginning—and it was, of course, relatively greater in the early stages—is only 19 per cent, and for the month of March, 1920, the administration cost was only 11.9 per cent. This percentage, as the number of men in training increases, will materially diminish.

In this connection I would like to put in the record the statement made by the auditor on the 10th of April, 1920, in which he shows that the total administration expense was $637,698.59, while the total direct expenses of the disabled men—that is, money paid on account of the disabled men—was $4,756,213.29. From that I get the 11.9 per cent.

Mr. TOWNER. You are not offering that whole paper in detail? All you want is the statement you have made, do you not?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; the figures that justify that statement.

Mr. TOWNER. Proceed.

Mr. MUNROE. The charge was made in the Post that men are not allowed money for essential tools and supplies. This statement is not true, because an ample allowance is made, and in the case of a man taking a course in jewelry work he is allowed $250 for the necessary tools. No reasonable request, backed up by a statement of the employer as to the necessity of the man having these tools, is ever refused.

Finally, much has been made of the great numbers in the University of Louisiana who are unfitted for the work there. The details as of March are submitted and show that only 35 men were at that university, most of them taking special work, and with a background of previous experience fully warranting their attendance.

I have gone hurriedly over a good many of these charges, Mr. Chairman, because I did not wish to occupy too much time of the committee with this statement. I have here details as to the cases of the eight men that were referred to in a general way, giving the facts in the cases of each of them, and I would like to place that in the record, as I think it is essential to answer the charges made by Mr. Littledale.

Mr. TOWNER. It may be included in the record.

(The statement referred to is included in an exhibit incorporated in the record in the morning session of this date.)

So much for the specific charges made by Mr. Littledale; but, as I said in the beginning, while those have been disposed of by the testimony which I have given, there might still remain in the minds of the committee a feeling that the board did not exercise due zeal and activity in carrying out the work that was assigned to it. So I feel it is essential in order to clear up the situation and to dispel any such feeling that might be in the minds of the committee or any other person, to go somewhat in detail into the history of the long struggle which the Federal Board for Vocational Education made to clear up all sorts of difficulties that existed in the way of giving full and prompt justice to the disabled soldier.

From the passage of the law on June 27, 1918, to the amended sundry civil bill on July 19, 1919, a period of nearly 13 months, the board experienced every difficulty in securing cooperation and in carrying out the provisions of the law in the liberal spirit intended by Congress.

Finally, when cooperation in certain quarters proved impossible, the board had to get the law amended in order that it might give the soldiers a square deal, and when that square deal was given there were over 8,000 disabled soldiers who had been waiting anywhere from two weeks to five or six months to get into training, through no fault whatever of the Federal board.

With your permission, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I will go back rather early in the history of this situation in order to show that the Federal board has not only exercised ordinary zeal and interest in this matter, but has been one of the great active forces in bringing about the whole rehabilitation program and in carrying it through to what we believe to be a very successful issue.

If I may put in a personal word, as early as the first week, I think it was, in May, 1917, I was down here in Washington for the purpose of placing the resources of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, of which I am an officer, at the service of the Government; and I took occasion to call on the Secretary of War, and I ventured to say to him that it seemed to me that among the great problems which would have to be dealt with would be that of the rehabilitation of the disabled soldiers and that of the training and furnishing of the great number of mechanics and technicians that would be necessary in order to maintain a fighting force. He expressed great interest, yet for one reason and another legislation providing for the rehabilitation work was not passed until 13 months later, and the preparation of mechanics and technicians in a formal way and under authority of law was not taken care of until March of the following year, so that while it has been said that I did not have much vision in this matter, it seems to me that I had at that time a great deal.

However, the Federal board was organized, as you gentlemen know, in early August of 1917; and immediately upon its organization it took up this question of the rehabilitation of disabled soldiers, because even at that early date a large number of men had been discharged, disabled in one way and another, from the camps. It first endeavored to bring about a cooperative plan, that should not need sanction of law, with the Surgeon General's Office, and week after week, and I might almost say day after day, various officials of our board held conferences with authorized officials of the Surgeon General's Office to see if we could not arrange for carrying out, in the great scheme of hospitals that was then being planned by the Surgeon General, a plan of rehabilitation which should be continuous, the man being given training from the moment that he arrived at the hospital so far as he could undertake it, and then gradually being turned over, under military authority, to the Federal board to undertake his actual training for reentrance into industry. However, it did not seem possible to bring about an informal arrangement that would be satisfactory to both sides. Therefore, on September 17, 1917, the Federal board brought the matter to the attention of Assistant Secretary Rowe and Judge Mack, who, as you gentlemen know, were the chief sponsors, outside of Congress, of the war-risk insurance act. We pointed out to them the inadequacy of section 304 of that act, which promised rehabilitation to the disabled soldier without providing either administrative machinery or money to carry out the cost of it; and it was stated to us at that time that it did not seem possible to embody anything further in that act. Nevertheless, we prepared and proposed an amendment in October, 1917, to the war-risk insurance act, which, if it had been accepted by the sponsors of that act would have put rehabilitation into effect eight months before it was actually made law. I would like to put this proposed amendment into the record, as it is an essential part of the history of this matter. Under this proposed amendment the training would have been administered, as a continuous process, under an unpaid board representing all the different interests, said board to be appointed by the President. This would have carried the plan out along the same lines now being advocated as desirable.

(The statement referred to is as follows:)

AMENDMENT TO SECTION 305 OF H. R. 5723.

Amend section 305 of H. R. 5723, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes.

SEC. 305. That in cases of dismemberment, of injuries to sight or hearing, and of other injuries commonly causing permanent disability, the injured person shall follow such course or courses of rehabilitation, reeducation, and vocational training as the United States may provide or procure to be provided, but this shall not apply in the matter of vocational training if such injured person is able to follow without such training a gainful occupation. In order to provide such a course or courses effectively a form or reenlistment shall be required which shall bring the injured person into the military or naval service. Such reenlistment shall entitle the person to full pay as during the last month of his actual service, and his family to family allowances and allotment as hereinabove provided, in lieu of all other compendation for the time being.

In case of his willful failure properly to follow such course or as to reenlist, payment of compensation shall be suspended until such willful failure ceases and no compensation shall be payable for the intervening period.

The President shall designate or create a board to be known, for the purposes of this section, as "The Board for the Rehabilitation and Vocational Training of Disabled Soldiers and Sailors," which shall be charged with the duty and responsibility of administering the provisions of this section. The members of such a board, if such board be designated, shall serve without pay other than their actual expenses incurred in the performance of their duties on such board. If such board be created, the President shall fix the compensation of the members thereof. The President shall from time to time assign such duties and give such power to such board to carry out the provisions of this section as he may deem necessary and shall provide for such cooperation between the work of such board and the Army and Navy Departments as he may deem advisable.

Plans for such reenlistment and for the discipline of such injured persons while following such course or courses of rehabilitation, reeducation and vocational training shall be made by the Army and Navy Departments which when approved by the President shall be put into effect subject to such changes from time to time as he may direct. Injured soldiers shall, while following such a course or courses, be subject to the discipline of the Army Department and injured sailors to the discipline of the Navy Department; but such board shall control and administer such a course or courses of rehabilitation, reeducation and vocational training.

The Federal Board for Vocational Education shall and is hereby authorized to make studies and investigations with regard to the vocational training of disabled soldiers and sailors and to incur such expenditures as may be necessary for such studies and investigations out of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1917–18 made by Congress by an act approved February 23, 1917, entitled, "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education; to provide for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such education in agriculture and the trades and industries; to provide for cooperation with the States in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure."

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section there is hereby appropriated, out of the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, for the payment of all expenses incident to the work authorized under this section including salaries of the board, of a director, and of such deputies, assistants, accountants, experts, clerks, and other employees in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, as such board may deem necessary, traveling expenses, rent, and equipment of offices, typewriters and exchange of same, purchase of law books and books of reference, printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office, and all other necessary expenses. With the exception of the director, and such special experts as the board may from time to time find necessary for the conduct of the work of the board, all employees of the board shall be appointed from lists of eligibles to be supplied by the Civil Service Commission and in accordance with the civil service law.

There is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of ——— million dollars to be known as the soldiers and sailors rehabilitation and vocational training appropriation for the payment of all expenditures incurred in connection with the establishment and operation of such course or courses for rehabilitation, reeducation, and vocational training, but the expenditures authorized under this section shall not include those of any moneys for the traveling expenses, services, allowances, compensation, pay or subsistence of such injured persons or for the reenlistment and discipline of such persons as herein provided.

REASONS FOR PROPOSED CHANGE IN SECTION 305 OF H. R. 5724.

1. The section is buried in a bill every other of whose many sections deal with the war risk insurance. Apparently it was inserted as a promise by Congress that the rehabilitation, reeducation, and vocational training of injured soldiers and sailors would be made. Naturally, under these circumstances, this work which is a very difficult and highly specialized problem is committed under the general terms of the bill into a scheme of organization and administration which while admirably adapted for war risk insurance is inadvisable for the proper care and education of injured soldiers and sailors.

Digitized by Google

Section 305 should be taken from the bill and its purpose dealt with adequately by a separate measure or it should be redrawn so as to cure the defects as to organization, cooperation, and support in its present form. Because of the short time available, the latter course is undoubtedly more advisable.

2. The bill carries no appropriation to meet the expense of carrying on the course or courses for the rehabilitation and vocational training promised by the section. All the appropriations are for insurance, compensation, allowances, funeral expenses, and similar items, but none for rehabilitation, reeducation, and training. With the bill in its present form Congress would be placed in the position of having made specious promise to our enlisted men without providing a dollar to carry it out. Outside of a small part of the $100,000 appropriated for the administration of war risk insurance which might possibly be used for section 305, though in what way is not clear, the section is meaningless for want of funds. This would have to be remedied by Congress at a later session when every consideration demands immediate planning and action. Otherwise this great national duty and exigency will be left to private philanthropy and control, which the American people will never tolerate and a procedure which has not with signal failure among our allies.

3. Naturally, and probably rightly so, the director of the Bureau of War Risk will be chosen for his ability and experience in dealing with problems of insurance or pensions and not for his experienced fitness to deal with the complex problem of rehabilitating and educating disabled men and placing them in our complex social, industrial and economic life. Indeed there is no one man in the world to whom such an enormous and critical task should be intrusted. The proper handling of this task requires a proper administrative board of men well versed in the many problems involved, a scheme of cooperation which will utilize the knowledge and experience of all who have anything to contribute, including Army and Navy officers, physicians and surgeons, and civilians well versed in the problems of vocational education and of the industrial life of our country. The staff of such a board should be chosen for its ability to deal not with war risk but with the highly specialized task of restoring our injured soldiers and sailors to physical well being and economic independence.

4. Section 305 in its present form places in the hands of one man practically the entire control over the movements and the actions as well as the welfare of what may be hundreds of thousands of handicapped men. It is regrettable that such power has to be lodged in any centralized authority but there is no other way for the Government to discharge the task properly and meet its obligation to those injured in its service. But this authority should rest primarily in the hands of the President of the United States, Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy who because he is directly responsible to the suffrage of the nation should be the only person to whom such power and grave responsibility should be intrusted.

The section should be redrawn so as to locate this power and responsibility with the President and to give him the administrative board to which he may delegate such duties and powers as are necessary.

On November 22, 1917, and again in January, 1918, the board called together, through the cooperation of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, a number of leading employers from all over the country in order to interest them at the earliest practicable date in this problem of rehabilitation of disabled soldiers, so that whenever legislation might be put through the employer would be ready to cooperate in the fullest way. I have here, but will not put it in as part of the record, the report of the first of these conferences, which was quite largely attended and carried on in the office of our board.

Nothing coming from the conferences with the Surgeon General's Office, the Cabinet members brought the matter to the attention of the President, and he suggested to the Secretary of War that a conference be called by the Surgeon General, in January of 1918, of all the persons who might possibly be interested in this matter of rehabilitation. This conference, called at the office of the Surgeon General, was in session a number of days and appointed a subcommittee to draw up a suitable bill for presentation to Congress. That committee, after a number of days' session, reported back to the full conference a measure substantially like that which was subsequently made law in June, 1918, by Congress, except that the rehabilitation work was to be administered by a commission of five persons representing the Surgeon General of the Army, the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery of the Navy, the Department of Labor, the War Risk Insurance Bureau and the Federal Board.

This plan was adopted by the full conference and the Surgeon General, who presided over the conference, was instructed to bring it, through proper channels, to the attention of Congress. Three months went by, however, and nothing was done. Therefore members of this subcommittee, which had made this report to the larger committee, brought the proposed bill before the Council of National Defense, making, however, the single change that instead of it being administered by a representative body of five, it should be turned over to the Federal board, an existing body, rather than to create a new commission. It is understood that the Council of National Defense adopted this proposition unanimously and presented it to the President and Cabinet, through whom it was brought to the attention of Congress.

I should like to put in the record this report of the committee on that conference, because it is a short report and shows just how the matter first took shape.

(The report referred to is as follows:)

EXHIBIT G.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO CONFERENCE ON RECONSTRUCTION AND REHABILITATION OF DISABLED IN MILITARY SERVICE.

The committee appointed by the Surgeon General at the conference on reconstruction and rehabilitation which met in his office on Monday, January 14, desires to submit the following report:

The committee was composed of the following representatives:

Dr. P. P. Claxton, chairman, representing the United States Bureau of Education.

Maj. Edgar King, Maj. James Bordley, Maj. Harry E. Mock, representing the Surgeon General's Office.

Maj. Franklin Martin, representing the Council of National Defense.

Past Assist. Surg. Eaton, representing the Medical Department of the Navy.

Mr. Charles A. Prosser, representing the Federal Board of Vocational Education.

Mr. James P. Munroe, representing the Federal Board of Vocational Education.

Mr. R. D. Jones, representing the War Risk Bureau.

Mr. Charles Fraser, representing the advisory committee of the War Risk Bureau.

Mr. R. M. Little, representing the United States Employees' Compensation.

Dr. Wm. A. White, representing the insane hospitals of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. W. Frank Persons, representing the Red Cross.

Dr. J. W. Schereschewsky, representing the United States Public Health Service.

Mr. J. W. Sullivan, representing American Federation of Labor.

Mr. Walker, representing United States Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. N. B. Williams, representing American Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. Royal Meeker, representing the Department of Labor.

Dr. Wm. Edsol, representing civilian, medical profession.

Maj. Mock of the Surgeon General's Office was elected secretary of the committee.

Five meetings of the committee were held, and as a result the following report was prepared, with recommendations that it be submitted to the conference. The report follows:

The conference recommends that the Surgeon General return the memorandum of the Secretary of War, by authority of which the conference was called, with the following report, said report expressing the plan which the conference recommends be adopted as a proper plan for the physical reconstruction and vocational rehabilitation of sick or wounded members of the military service.

1. As regards the undischarged member of the military or naval forces of the United States, all medical and surgical work necessary to give, as far as possible, functional and mental restoration shall be directly under the executive control of the Surgeon

Generals' Offices of respective services. It is understood that when such medical aids as curative work shops and vocational training are needed to accomplish the above, this is included in the medical and surgical work.

2. That when, in the judgment of the medical department, the disabled member has reached as complete a state of physical and mental rehabilitation as possible, he is to be discharged from the service, if unfit for further service, full or restricted, and will pass under the control of such other agency of the Government as is or may be provided to carry on his continued rehabilitation.

NOTE. It is the sense of the conference that the facilities for treatment in military and naval hospitals should include everything required to enable members of the military and naval service to receive full mental and physical restoration in all cases where this is humanly possible, prior to their discharge from the service, and that, save in exceptional cases, this discharge should not take place prior to such full restoration or until its accomplishment seems to be improbable. No regulations should be made, or legislation enacted, to prevent the use of Army facilities by the Navy, by proper arrangements between the two departments, or vice versa, or to prevent the return of discharged members of either service to service hospitals for further treatment.

3. That a board shall be appointed by the President of the United States for the control and discussion of the work hereinafter described.

4. This board shall have executive control over the phases of the work, represented in rehabilitation of the disabled after the medical and surgical work is complete; namely, continued vocational training, when necessary; placing in employment; economic and social supervision, to see that rehabilitation is complete and so remains. It may act in an advisory capacity to the vocational officers on the Surgeon-Generals' staffs, with the view of coordinating all vocational training during convalescence, with any continued vocational training that is necessary after the man is discharged from the service.

NOTE.—Paragraphs 1 and 2 with the note under 2 indicate what in the opinion of the conference are the proper functions of the medical department of the military and naval service with regard to the matter under consideration. Nothing in any legislation which may be required to carry out the provisions of paragraphs 3 and 4 should be susceptible of an interpretation contrary to the sense of paragraphs 1 and 2 with the note under 2.

5. The following tentative draft of a bill is submitted as indicating the legislation necessary to carry out the work which will be required for members of the military and naval forces after their discharge

NOTE.—Attention is specifically invited to that part of the plan which makes the reeducational facilities available for certain civilians, not in the medical service, who may require them.

6. It is recommended that this tentative draft of the bill be adopted by the conference with whatever suggestions and amendments that the conference may see fit to offer, and that it then be referred back to the committee in order that the committee may consult with the legal advisers of the War, Navy, and Treasury Departments, and with any other departments it may wish to advise with in order that the bill may be drawn in a finished form without changing the sense of the bill. It is then to be returned to the Surgeon General with recommendations that it be referred to the Secretary of War with recommendations that it be introduced into Congress.

This was brought to the attention of Congress, and a joint meeting of the Committees on Education of the Senate and the House was held—a two days' session—at which very interesting testimony was presented, and at which the director, who at that time was Dr. Charles A. Prosser, appeared as representing the Federal Board, and pointed out both the need of legislation and the need of haste, calling attention to the thousands of men who were being discharged from the camps in large numbers. I will read a few lines of Dr. Prosser's testimony. He says:

Now, my last point is the need of haste. The War Risk Insurance Bureau is my authority for this statement. Up to this time—up to 10 days ago, at least—up to this time, approximately 15,000 men have been discharged from the service in the cantonments of this country. Of those 15,000 men, 5,000 have been discharged for causes other than disabilities and 10,000 for disabilities. Of those 10,000 discharged for disabilities, 4,500, or 45 per cent of the total disabilities, were discharged for tuberculosis. Now, these disabled consumptive men are going back home without the opportunity to be trained away from their old occupations where many incurred the disease.

This hearing was held in the latter part of April, 1918—

Then he goes on with his statement. At that time—in April, 1918—10,000 disabled men had already been discharged from the camps.

Mr. TOWNER. You do not ask that all of that be reprinted?

Mr. MUNROE. No. Under the general authority granted it by the vocational education law, the Federal Board, seeing that this legislation was bound to be passed sooner or later, began making studies of the problem and published three bulletins, one in February, 1918, a number of months before the law was actually passed, entitled "A Preliminary Study of the Vocational Rehabilitation of Disabled Soldiers and Sailors"; another, in the same month, on "The Training of Teachers for Occupational Therapy," and, with the cooperation of the American Red Cross for the Disabled, in May, 1918, on "The Evolution of National Systems of Vocational Reeducation," setting forth the experience of other nations.

Therefore, when the law was finally passed, there was available a considerable body of literature. Furthermore, when it seemed fairly certain that Congress would pass rehabilitation legislation, the Federal Board secured the generous collaboration of the American Red Cross Institute for the Disabled in sending a group of interested persons to study the Canadian work for rehabilitation so that there might be no delay in starting should the proposed act become law.

As a matter of fact, most of the persons who went on the preliminary trip through Canada afterwards came into the employ of the board so that we had a small body of informed persons with which to start our work.

The rehabilitation law was passed, as you gentlemen know, June 27, 1918. Two days later a letter was sent to the Surgeon General asking his cooperation, as the act enjoins, in securing a continuous process of rehabilitation by admitting agents of the board to the hospitals to talk, under proper regulations, with such disabled men as were slated for discharge. This authority, despite repeated conferences with Army officials and almost daily urging from the board of the fact that, to make the law effective, disabled boys should be seen and "bucked up," was not given until December 11, 1918, nearly six months later. I would like to put in the record letters to the Surgeon General.

Mr. TOWNER. Perhaps one would be sufficient.

Mr. MUNROE. They follow the thing up so as to show that we were not negligent in trying to get his cooperation. As late as October 26, the director of the Federal board could not even get an accurate list of the hospitals in which men with whom we were charged with responsibility for under the law were to be found.

Mr. TOWNER. What year?

Mr. MUNROE. 1918. I would like to put in the record a letter in which we asked for that information.

From: Chief Division of Rehabilitation.
To: Dr. L. D. Coffman, Surgeon General's Office, United States Army, Washington, D. C.

DEAR DR. COFFMAN: Might I ask you to furnish us with a list of all hospitals which are supposed to carry on reconstruction work? Among the several lists which we have there are none from which we can bring together all of the hospitals carrying on reconstruction work with any degree of certainty of it being an accurate one.

Therefore, we find ourselves under the necessity of making the above request, and hope that you will be able to give it to us without too much trouble.

Very truly, yours,

JUNE 29, 1918.

From: The Director, Federal Board for Vocational Education.
To: The Surgeon General, War Department, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the bill placing the responsibility for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled soldiers and sailors upon the Federal Board for Vocational Education was duly signed by the President on Thursday last, June 27, 1918.

[1] Hospitals in which reconstruction work has been started.

As it will take a little time to complete our organization throughout the country, and as cases of disabled men requiring vocational reeducation are already being brought to the attention of this board, it is proposed that, pending the completion of our general organization, each case shall be dealt with directly by this office.

I beg, therefore, to make the following requests:

1. That an order be issued whereby a properly accredited representative from the Federal Board may, at any time, have access in a hospital to any case which appears likely to be a subject for reeducation or placement under the powers and duties of the Federal board under the act.

2. That an order be issued whereby the Federal board will receive notification of the probable date of discharge from a reconstruction or other hospital of all men who may be subjects for the services of the Federal board, whether for reeducation or placement in some position in civil life, not less than 21 days previous to the probable date of discharge.

Your early attention to these requests will be appreciated.

Yours, very truly,

_____,
Director.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SURGEON GENERAL,
Washington, July 3, 1918.

From: The Surgeon General, United States Army.
To: The Director of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, Washington, D. C.
Subject: Issue of orders for representatives of the Federal board giving authority to interview disabled soldiers in military hospitals.

1. The Surgeon General directs that the statement be made to the Director of the Federal Board for Vocational Education that his letter has been received, and that the subject has been referred to the proper authority for consideration and reply, which will be made on or before the 8th or 9th of July, 1918

FRANK BILLINGS,
Colonel, Medical Corps, National Army.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SURGEON GENERAL,
Washington, July 15, 1918.

From: The Surgeon General, United States Army.
To: The Director of the Federal Board of Vocational Education, Washington, D. C.
Subject: Delay in reply to letter dated June 29, 1918.

1. Referring to letter of the Surgeon General of July 3, 1918—Subject: Issue of orders for representatives of the Federal board giving authority to interview disabled soldiers in military hospitals.

2. I am directed to say that the matters therein mentioned have been found to require more extended consideration than was at first thought; that a definite reply will be given you at the earliest date practicable.

For the Surgeon General:

FRANK BILLINGS,
Colonel, Medical Corps, National Army.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SURGEON GENERAL,
Washington, September 25, 1918.

From: The Acting Surgeon General, United States Army.
To: Commanding officer.
Subject: Cooperation with the Federal Board for Vocational Education in the reeducation of disabled soldiers.

1. The Federal Board for Vocational Education is charged by act of Congress, approved June 27, 1918, with the reeducation of certain men after their discharge from the Army. Such work is optional with the men. Those eligible for reeducation are indicated by the following portion of section 2 of the act:

Digitized by Google

"Every person * * * who, after his discharge, in the opinion of the board, is unable to carry on a gainful occupation, to resume his former occupation, or to enter upon some other occupation, * * * shall be furnished by the said board, where vocational rehabilitation is feasible, such course of vocational rehabilitation as the board shall prescribe and provide."

2. It is to be noted that the work of the Federal Board begins with men after their discharge from the Army. The board is not directly concerned with the educational work in the hospital. This is fully under the charge of the Surgeon General whether given for therapeutic purposes or for vocational preparation for special or limited army service.

3. All necessary cooperation with the Federal Board for Vocational Education is desired in the case of men who, after hospital treatment, will be discharged from the military service. The board has already been given permission to have representatives visit several hospitals to give to such patients as are sent to them information regarding the possibilities in reeducation. It is expected that similar permission will be given for other hospitals as soon as satisfactory persons are selected.

4. The representative of the Federal board in his work in a hospital will be governed by such regulations as the commanding officer may make, his action being based on this letter of instruction. The representative may, of course, be withdrawn at any time by the Federal board, and permission for his entry may be withdrawn by the Surgeon General if sufficient reason for such withdrawal develops. It is suggested that duplicate copies of any recommendations he may make to the board regarding patients be requested for the hospital files.

5. The plan already in operation for cooperation with the Federal board agent at Walter Reed General Hospital has been approved. He is given a place in a convenient office to interview patients. Patients, as soon as recommended by the S. C. D. Board for discharge to civil life, are sent to this office to confer with him. Information relative to each man's educational and occupational history is furnished by the chief educational officer of the hospital; also a statement of the educational and vocational work done by a patient in the hospital, and any recommendations relative to the future education or occupation of the man that the educational officer desires to make. Neither the military nor the medical history of the man is furnished to the representative of the Federal board as this is contrary to regulations. The representative of the Federal board is not given permission to interview patients in the wards nor are any patients sent to him for interview or conference except those already recommended for discharge by the S. C. D. Board.

6. This letter governs until further orders.

By direction of the Acting Surgeon General:

ROBT. E. NOBLE,
Brigadier General, Medical Corps, United States Army.

Mr. MUNROE. Meanwhile, by the special favor of certain commanding officers and by the zealous endeavors of Col. Billings, of the Surgeon General's Office, we were able to get, on sufferance, into one hospital here and another hospital there, and to talk to a few of the boys that they were positive would not be needed for any kind of service, since they were so far disabled that there was no possibility of their doing any kind of military service. But this was only on sufferance, and as I say it was not until December 11, nearly six months after the law was passed, that we were given authoritative admittance to the hospitals at all.

Therefore, we sent three men over to the other side in the hope that we would be able to get into hospitals there, and bring to the attention of disabled men the plan which the Government had made for their rehabilitation. These men were sent over in the fall of 1918, and were hospitably received by Gen. Pershing and his officers, and through them we got in direct contact with between 50,000 and 60,000 disabled men in the hospitals abroad, and through the cooperation of the Red Cross we got the word of what the Government was proposing to do in the way of rehabilitation to practically every man in the foreign hospitals, and also on the transports coming back. If it had not been for this move on our part, many, many thousands of men would have been discharged from the hospitals without any knowledge whatever of the rehabilitation law.

In the hope that the armistice would remove the main objection to our entrance to the hospitals, the board on November 15 addressed a communication to the Secretary of War, asking for such admission. This was replied to cordially on December 5, and on December 11 the order already noted was issued. Even then, however, many commanding officers, on the plea that civilians were not properly admissible to military hospitals, refused to admit the agents of the Federal board, so that as late as January 2, 1919, we had to send a telegram to all our districts confirming the authority for their men to go into the hospitals.

The armistice resulted, however, as you know, gentlemen, in a scramble to get out of the Army; and one of the chief delays in getting disabled men into training has been because thousands of those boys, to get out of hospital, took oath that they had no disability. We have been, therefore, in the curious position in thousands of cases of having to prove that the boy did not tell the truth when he swore, in order to get out of the hospital, that he was not disabled. So we have had to go to all the work of not only getting hold of the boy but of proving that he ought to have training under the law.

Furthermore, we were assured, even as late as some time after the armistice, that the number of discharge points would be only 15 or 20. Yet the scramble to get out of the Army was so great that they kept increasing those almost daily, until at one time, in the State of New York alone, there were 120 discharge points from which disabled boys were being sent out. It was our job, as far as we could do it, to try to cover all that great multiplicity of unexpected discharge points. Finally, on December 31, 1918, the War Department issued a general order, permitting any man to leave the hospital if he could procure witnesses to the effect that he would be taken care of, no matter what might be his state of disability. I would like to put that in the record because it is an important exhibit.

(The order referred to is as follows:)

EXHIBIT M.

Circular No. 188.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 31, 1918.

INTERPRETATION OF INSTRUCTIONS RELATIVE TO THE DISCHARGE OF DISABLED SOLDIERS.

1. In order that the provisions of paragraph 2, section 11, Bulletin No. 36, War Department, 1918, may not unduly retard the discharge from the service of men clearly unfit for military service, the following interpretation of the spirit of this paragraph is published:

(a) Subparagraph (a) is intended to provide for the complete cure or maximum restoration of men incapacitated because of military service. Subparagraph (b) is intended to provide for the retention in the service of such disabled men until such time as their maximum restoration has been obtained. There will be many cases that will not be benefited by further sojourn in hospitals, convalescent centers, or development battalions. These should be promptly discharged. The surgeon who has the case in hand must be the judge as to whether or not maximum restoration has been secured, or if, after treatment in the hospital in which the patient is located is completed, the case will be further benefited by transfer to another hospital, convalescent center, or development battalion. Cases which, in the opinion of the surgeon, will be further benefited should be promptly transferred.

Digitized by Google

There will, furthermore, be many cases of disabled men who either possess funds or who have relatives or friends in position to afford them specialized care after discharge. In these cases disabled men may be discharged, but not until the responsible commanding officer has fully determined that continued treatment and care is assured. The fact that a man (his continued treatment and care being assured) is being discharged, either at his own request or at the request of the relative or friend, will be noted on the report rendered in connection with the soldier's physical examination prior to discharge. This notation will include the names and addresses of the persons assuming responsibility for such continued treatment and care.

The provisions of paragraph 2, section 11, Bulletin No. 36, War Department, 1918, as interpreted above, will govern both for officers and enlisted or drafted men. In this connection, convalescent centers and development battalions are intended for enlisted or drafted men only.

(b) The provisions of paragraph 1, Circular No. 93, War Department, 1918, intend that the cases of all men who have acquired a lower physical standard than that given them when they entered the service, shall be promptly acted upon by the board of review in order that men may be discharged immediately after the board of review certifies that the maximum improvement has been obtained or that physical disabilities have not been exaggerated or accentuated as a result of service in line of duty. Instructions on page 4, Form No. 135-3, A. G. O., should be harmonized accordingly.

2. During the demobilization of the present Army, commanding officers of general hospitals will dispose of patients in such hospitals who are enlisted or drafted men, as follows:

(a) Men who entered the service since April 1, 1917, and who, after hospital treatment, are fit to return to full duty, will be sent for discharge to the demobilization center nearest their place of entrance into service as indicated in Circular No. 106, War Department, 1918, amended by Circular No. 122, War Department, 1918.

(b) Men, without regard to date of entry into the service, who have since become disabled, or who had disabilities prior to their entrance into the service which have been aggravated or made worse by service, said disabilities not being due to their own misconduct, will be transferred to convalescent centers as prescribed in Circular No. 90, War Department, 1918, amended by Circular No. 183, War Department, 1918, providing further benefit can be expected by additional treatment, training, and hardening processes.

(c) Men, without regard to date of entry into the service who have become disabled either prior to or since entry into the service, due to venereal disease and who need further treatment but do not necessarily require hospital care, will be transferred to the development battalion nearest their place of entrance into service.

(d) The cases that can not be benefited by further treatment in hospitals or by transfer to convalescent centers or development battalions, will be discharged on Form No. 17, A. G. O. (certificate of disability), in accordance with existing instructions. Existing instructions will govern in the discharge of all cases of disability due to their own misconduct.

(e) Men who entered the service on or before April 1, 1917, who become fit for full duty, will be returned to their organizations if said organizations belong to the Regular Army and are stationed in this country. All other such men, except those belonging to the Cavalry and those whose branch of service is not represented in the Regular Army, will be sent to the nearest appropriate units of the 8th and 20th Divisions inclusive, or to the nearest appropriate unit in the Regular Army in the United States not in those divisions. The names of such enlisted men in the Cavalry will be reported to the commanding general Southern Department for assignment. Those whose branch of service is not represented in the Regular Army will be sent to the nearest depot brigade. Men of these classes transferred will be assigned or attached to appropriate organizations in their present grades.

(f) Commanding officers of general hospitals are authorized to transfer direct the cases enumerated in subparagraphs (a), (b), (c), and (e), above, and such other cases as may need treatment which can be given only in another hospital.

3. Whenever Form No. 17, A. G. O., is used in lieu of Form No. 135-3, A. G. O., a carbon copy will be prepared and transmitted to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, as provided for in paragraph 2, Circular No. 73, War Department, 1918.

4. The designation "Oversea convalescent detachments," as provided for in Circular No. 90, War Department, 1918, is hereby changed to "Convalescent centers." They will be used as concentration points, not only for oversea convalescents but for convalescents from the forces in this country, including the few remaining cases in development battalions whose disabilities are not due to their own misconduct. The quarters selected for convalescent centers should be selected in an attractive part of the camp, and, whenever practicable, should be near the various welfare centers conducted by the Y. M. C. A., the American Red Cross, and other civilian organizations.

5. In view of the signing of the armistice, and of the above provisions, the necessity for development battalions, as organized under General Orders No. 45, War Department, 1918, ceases to exist except for the further treatment of venereal cases and for men held for reasons other than physical disability who are awaiting discharge. Experienced personnel no longer needed in development battalions should be utilized in convalescent centers. In this connection, as stated in paragraph 4, Circular No. 90, War Department, 1918, it is only by thorough cooperation on the part of line and medical officers that the best results can be obtained. The results desired are the maximum restoration of these men in the shortest time possible. Therefore, the assignment to physical drill, exercises, fatigue, the granting of passes or furloughs, etc., should be made only after consultation between the responsible line and medical officers.

(220.811, A. G. O.)

By order of the Secretary of War:

PEYTON C. MARCH,
General, Chief of Staff.

Official:

P. C. HARRIS,
The Adjutant General.

Mr. MUNROE. That, of course, resulted in thousands of boys getting out of the hospitals in every possible physical state and with practically nobody to look after them. The result was that in January and February, 1919, there would have been—and there were, I am sorry to say, a few instances—there would have been thousands of instances of disabled boys begging on the streets if we had not secured the active cooperation of the Red Cross and the various other agencies to take care of these boys until we could get authority to look after them. It was at that time that we persuaded the Elks to establish their fund as one means of taking care of those disabled boys who were coming out of the Army and whom we could not take hold of under the law until they should be judged compensible by the War Risk Insurance Bureau. We were perfectly helpless since we could not touch those boys until the bureau had decided that they were compensible under the law.

Meanwhile the board had established, without any difficulty, close cooperative relations with the Navy Department and with the United States Employment Service of the Labor Department. That, as you know, gentlemen, later was made less effective by the fact that the appropriations were very seriously cut down, so that they had to greatly reduce the number of their offices.

I want to say that from the beginning we had absolutely splendid relations and have kept them up ever since with the Navy and with the Department of Labor.

One of the things that we did at this time in order to try to get hold of the boys—but pardon me for going back. Another reason we sent those men abroad was in the hope of getting at the boys, even though in many cases we could not reach them at all in the hospitals, and so we had issued and sent out between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000 pieces of literature, using every possible agency that we could find in order to bring this literature to the attention of the disabled boys. We are still cooperating with agencies such as the American Red Cross, the Elks, the Y. M. C. A., the Knights of Columbus, the National Catholic War Council, and the Jewish Welfare Board. All of these agencies have cooperated with us most magnificently from the beginning.

Digitized by Google

One of the things that we tried as a means of getting the details before the boys was to send communications to the clerks of all the local draft boards throughout the country asking for lists of disabled men, and we sent at the same time a package of cards asking them to send us on these post cards the names of any disabled boys that they might be in the way of knowing about.

So much for the general situation. As to our dealings with the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, I am very loth to present this statement, because had it not been for this investigation we would not have brought it out. Yet it seems essential, as a part of the story of what we have been through, to give a detailed statement of our relations with the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. The law of June 27, as you know, provides that every person "entitled to compensation under article 3 of the war-risk insurance act" should have attention from the Federal board, and that when a course of training is provided he "shall, while following the same, receive monthly compensation equal to the amount of his monthly pay for the last month of his active service."

From the beginning we contended with the War Risk Insurance Bureau that the plain meaning of the law was that we should take hold of a man for his vocational rehabilitation whenever it was clear that he had suffered such injuries as to be compensable under the law. The bureau, however, took the attitude that we could not do anything, could not touch that boy, until he was actually in receipt of compensation from the bureau. Furthermore, we maintained that the real meaning of the receiving "of monthly compensation equal to the amount of his monthly pay for the last month of his active service" was that he should receive the pay and allowances which he received in the Army, permitting him to maintain himself. The bureau, however, took the attitude and maintained it strenuously, although we brought the thing up to them again and again, that it should pay the man simply the $30 a month, the actual money that he would have received in the Army. This, we contend, was quite other than the meaning and intention of Congress in passing this law. Because of the bureau's interpretation we had to set up a double system of payments for these boys.

That is to say, we had to establish a system of reenforcement of the $30 received from the War Risk Insurance Bureau so that that boy could live while he was taking training under us. Of course, like any dual system, that resulted in very great delay and all sorts of complications, especially as we could not, as I think I said, do anything for that boy in the way of training until the bureau had actually decided that he was entitled to compensation. In order that the boy might be able to live, we had to set up a system of additional payments. First, we made it $35 and then we raised it to $45, making a total of $75, and then, finally, by the Congress, it was raised to $80.

We presented this matter to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance even before the law was passed. On June 24, 1918, we called attention to our interpretation of the law and maintained that, if the law were to be made a workable thing, the bureau would have to pay the boy the full amount necessary to maintain him. The War Risk Insurance Bureau, however, persistently refused to accept this construction of the law, with the result, as I have said, that no man could be placed in training until the Bureau of War Risk Insurance was actually ready to pay him compensation. This original refusal of the War Risk Bureau to interpret the law in the liberal spirit which the board urged, and its later refusal, under the directorship of Col. Lindsley, afterwards one of the founders of the American Legion, to cooperate in getting quick action for the soldiers by placing War-Risk agents in the district offices, resulted in conditions such that, when relief was finally obtained through the amendment of July 11, 1919, over 8,000 men were waiting to be placed in training, many of them having been denied training for months, because the congestion in the War Risk Bureau had made it impossible for their compensable status to be determined. Day after day these men would come to the board's offices only to be turned away by us with the utmost regret because the War Risk Bureau had not yet authorized their compensation and we could not undertake their training.

In regard to the placing of War Risk Insurance agents in our offices we brought the matter to the attention of Col. Lindsley again and again. They, as you know, at that time had only a central office here in Washington. We said, "if you will put your agents in our district offices and suboffices with authority to pass upon perfectly evident cases, such as those of amputation, cases where there was absolutely no doubt whatever, we will even go so far as to pay the salary of those agents, and if you will put a medical man to pass upon medical problems, we will go so far as to pay for that if the War Risk Bureau has not the money to compensate them. But this was refused, and so the situation got worse and worse. It got so bad, finally, in the spring of 1919 that we, for awhile, practically ceased trying to make plans for the vocational rehabilitation of the soldiers because the crowd of discontented men for whom the training had been arranged, were getting desperate and until an award was made by the bureau nothing could be done for them. That crowd was getting all the time larger and more discontented and it did not seem desirable to simply increase that discontent by arranging training for thousands of men when we knew it would be impossible, under the situation in the War Risk Bureau, to get them into training. Hundreds of the more desperate cases of need under this situation were taken care of through help either from the Elks' fund or by the device which we got up in the spring of 1919, namely, that of the receiving stations. We so far stretched the law as to take those fellows who were in a desperate situation and put them into receiving stations on the plea that their cases needed examination and study. While in the receiving station we supported them out of our funds.

In that way we kept hundreds and even thousands of boys off the streets. It is to be noted, however, that in many cases where the board put a disabled soldier in some temporary employment to tide him over, the bureau used the fact of his employment as a reason for refusing compensation, thus placing a premium on idleness. Moreover, in many cases of placement training in which the practice of the shop allowed the learner a nominal wage, the bureau reduced compensation by the amount of that wage.

If we advised boys to get something to do until compensation should be awarded or helped them to get it, in hundreds of cases, that was used as a reason for not giving them compensation, thus placing, as I said, a premium on idleness, for there was no question, if they stayed idle, of their being awarded compensation, provided the other conditions permitted of it.

Moreover, in cases where we put boys in placement training in which it was the practice of the shop to allow the boy some little amount of money in the way of a wage, the bureau actually reduced the boy's compensation by the amount that he was receiving in the shop. Furthermore, they frequently harassed disabled soldiers whom we put in training by ordering them to have a new physical examination and threatening to take away their compensation on the ground that they had recovered from their disability or that, as I have stated in these other cases, where they were earning a little wages; thus actually usurping the authority of the Federal Board.

The board was in almost constant conference with various officials of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, both individually and collectively, striving to clear up this bad situation. It helped thousands of boys to get compensation. It is a small estimate to say that the cost of helping boys to make out their claims for compensation under the War Risk Insurance Bureau was at least $100,000.

The board resorted to all kinds of subterfuges in order to take care of the boys until the bureau should determine their compensability statuts. It made all sorts of offers to help the bureau, but finally the situation became so intolerable that there was nothing to do but to ask for the divorce legislation, which we did ask for.

I will just run over hurriedly some of the steps taken, to show you this.

On September 5, 1918, we made a suggestion that there be a joint committee to bring about cooperation between all these different agencies. The other boards did not accept it.

On September 17 we asked for a conference with Assistant Secretary Love, of the Treasury Department, who had special charge of the War Risk Bureau work, with a suggestion of procedure, which, if followed, would largely have remedied the situation. I would like to emphasize that, because it shows that the situation could have been handled.

From September to November, 1918, we brought about an informal arrangement between Mr. Houlihan of the War Risk Insurance Bureau and Dr. Prosser, the director of the board at that time, under which a great many cases were put into training through the checking by the bureau of a slip which we sent to them. That was, in cases that we believed compensable and that we knew ought to have vocational rehabilitation, we would make out a slip and send it over to Mr. Houlihan, who would check it as a permit for us to go ahead with the boy's training and implying that sometime that boy would be awarded compensation. This went on for several months and was a fairly satisfactory arrangement, so far as an underhand arrangement of that sort can be satisfactory. But unfortunately, later when it was discovered by officials higher up, it was repudiated and many of these pink slips were sent back as not being compensable under the law, and great embarrassment to us and to the boys arose.

On November 15, 1918, a formal agreement was signed by Mr. Houlihan, representing the bureau and Dr. Chandler, who was at that time in charge of the rehabilitation work for our board, for the prompt exchange of certain forms which would have permitted 24-hour service in putting thousands of cases into training. I would like to put in the record that agreement because it is absolutely essential to the whole thing.

EXHIBIT V.

MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE WAR RISK INSURANCE BUREAU AND THE FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION, COVERING PROCEDURE UNDER THE VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION ACT.

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION,
Washington, November 15, 1918.

1. Immediately upon receipt of application for compensation from disabled men, Form 77–A will be prepared by the bureau and forwarded to the board in duplicate. When additional information is received, or changes occur in data given, such additional information or changes shall be reported to the board in duplicate, on supplementary Form 77–B, by the bureau. Questions on Forms 77–A and 77–B, identical to questions appearing in physician's report, will be answered in the exact language contained in such report.

2. When representatives of the board obtain contact with disabled men who have not already submitted application for compensation, such representatives will have man execute Form 526 of the bureau. To this application will be attached a copy of the honorable discharge of the man, certified by a responsible official of the board, together with a report of the physical examination of the claimant made by a Government official, as required by the war risk insurance act. If it be impracticable to have such examination made by a Government medical officer, the claimant may appear before a reputable physician, selected by the bureau or the board, for the purpose of making the required examination, and the report of same may be rendered on Form 504, or in terms stating the results of such examination as ordinarily employed in making the reports of physical examinations.

3. A representative of the board will be permitted to examine the files and indexes of the bureau under the direction of persons in charge thereof, and copy from such files such information in regard to cases as may be desired by the board. A similar privilege will be granted by the board to a representative of the board.

4. The bureau will advise the board immediately on Form 77–B when final determination has been made with respect to the allowance or disallowance of any claim for compensation. Upon the request of the board, in emergency cases where application for compensation, certification of discharge and physician's report have been received by the bureau, determination as to whether or not the case is compensable will be expedited and decision rendered within 24 hours.

5. When disabled man commences training, Form 107 of the board, "Notice of commencement of course," accompanied by Form 116–A, "Application for family allowance," will be forwarded to the bureau by the board, and within 48 hours after the receipt of this notice the bureau will either approve or disapprove the payments indicated on such notice to be paid by it and advise board of its action. When approved, payments will be made monthly and first check will cover period from date of commencement of course to first of ensuing month. In cases where course has been commenced prior to the first of the month and notice is received subsequently to the first, check covering period from date of commencement of course to first of month will be forwarded immediately.

6. If it should develop that the payments to be made by the bureau should be changed for any reason, the board will advise the bureau of this fact on Form 107–A.

7. Upon completion of course of disabled man, the bureau will be advised of this fact by the board on Form 107–B.

8. As it is the duty of the bureau under the war risk insurance act to furnish artificial limbs, trusses, and similar appliances to disabled men (sec. 302, par. 3), and the duty of the board, under the vocational rehabilitation act, to furnish necessary mechanical appliances in special cases, it is understood that the bureau will furnish such artificial limbs, etc., as may be necessary on account of injuries received in the service, and the board will furnish such special appliances as may be required by the disabled men in the performance of the vocations for which they have been trained. When cases come to the attention of the board wherein it appears that artificial limbs or other appliances are needed because of war disabilities, notice of such cases will be furnished to the bureau by the board.

H. C. HOULIHAN,
Chief Compensation Division, Bureau of War Risk Insurance.
J. A. C. CHANDLER,
Chief Division of Rehabilitation, Federal Board for Vocational Education.

Paragraphs 2 and 8 approved.

CHAS. E. BANKS,
Chief Medical Adviser, Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

Mr. MUNROE. That agreement, if carried out, would have straightened out the whole thing. This agreement that Mr. Houlihan of the War Risk Bureau and Dr. Chandler of our board drew up provided for the exchange of certain documents although the actual compensability of the boy had not been determined upon, for the exchange of certain forms so that our putting the boy into training would have been legalized; and if that had been carried out it would have permitted in many cases 24-hour service. But, as a matter of fact, this plan was never lived up to by the bureau and the 24 hours stretched into weeks and sometimes months.

On January 14, 1919, Dr. Chandler sent a communication to Col. Lindsley urging that a responsible official of the bureau be placed in each of our district offices to determine compensability and that a doctor, appointed by the bureau, be placed in each of those offices to decide the boy's disability status. The board agreed to pay these officials. This offer was, however, declined. I would like to put that in the record because that is a very essential part of it, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. You have stated just exactly what that is. I am trying to save this record as much as I can. Is there any necessity for that to go in?

Mr. MUNROE. If you think my statement is sufficient.

Mr. TOWNER. If anybody challenges your statement, you have the document to prove it.

Mr. MUNROE. On March 27, 1919, another formal communication was sent to Col. Lindsley, who was at that time head of the bureau, pointing out the difficulties of the situation and suggesting remedies. After some weeks this letter was answered, declining to adopt the recommendations.

On April 23, 1919, the vice chairman sent a formal letter to Assistant Secretary Shouse, accompanied by seven communications specifying in detail the intolerable difficulties which the attitude of the bureau had brought about and asking for immediate and specific action and rulings. I think it would be rather desirable to read that letter because that sets forth the situation, and I think it is quite essential to read it.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE (reading):

EXHIBIT Y.

APRIL 23, 1919.

HON. JOUETT SHOUSE,
Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In accordance with your request that I send for your consideration and that of the Secretary of the Treasury a formal communication covering substantially the points brought forward in our interview of Thursday, April 17, I beg to say that, in our opinion, the very serious delays which are taking place in getting disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines into the training prescribed and provided for by the Congress are largely due to inadequate functioning between the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

These delays are fomenting widespread dissatisfaction and complaint among disabled men, their relatives, and friends, are arousing anxious inquiry on the part of Members of Congress as to the reason therefor, and are giving color to rapidly growing feeling that the Federal Government is showing indifference toward the present and future welfare of young men who have not only put their lives in jeopardy, but have actually suffered wounds and disease in the defense of their country. These unhappy conditions are being further aggravated by seemingly needless delays in the transmitting to men adjudged compensable and placed by the Federal board in training, of checks due them, under the law, from the War Risk Insurance Bureau.

Since disabled soldiers, their friends, and the public in general do, and can, make no distinction among various departments of the Government, failure on the part of any governmental service to function either within itself or in cooperation with others reflects upon the efficiency of the entire Federal machine, and all of us suffer in common a condemnation, which is growing every day more serious; the impression is rapidlyly gaining ground that the Federal Government in this important matter is both inefficient in its methods and ungrateful in its attitude.

Feeling convinced that the delays which are engendering this unfortunate state of the public mind are due mainly to an inadequate carrying out, both in letter and in spirit. of the express provisions of the vocational rehabilitation act, to the absence of specific rulings and decisions as to the procedure of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, to reversals of or changes in rulings arleady made by the bureau, and to failure to carry out certain definite agreements between the bureau and the Federal board as to procedure, we sought, late in March, an interview with Col. Lindsley and certain members of his staff, on which occasion a number of suggestions tending, in our opinion, to the remedying of these difficulties were brought forward. These were subsequently embodied in a communication addressed to Col. Lindsley by Dr. Prosser, director of the Federal board, under date of March 27 (copy appended marked "Exhibit A").

On April 9, Director Prosser being absent from Washington, Dr. Chandler, chief of the division of rehabilitation, and I, were asked to confer with Col. Lindsley in the presence of various members of our respective staffs. This was for the purpose of considering item by item a proposed reply to the communication of March 27, which reply has, however, not yet been received by Dr. Prosser.

While highly appreciating the courtesy of Col. Lindsley in giving us opportunity to discuss his projected answer, Dr. Chandler and I felt constrained to dissent rather vigorously from the proposed decisions embodied therein, and I ventured to state that while, of course, we must accept whatever decisions as to cooperative procedure the War Risk Insurance Bureau might make, I felt it incumbent upon me to call Col. Lindsley's attention to the rapidly rising discontent with the Government because of its slowness in dealing with the disabled soldier, and to warn him that very serious consequences might flow out of those decisions.

More than a week having elapsed after this interview with Col. Lindsley without that proposed, or any other, reply to Dr. Prosser's communication of March 27 having been received, and the situation throughout the country as reported by our 14 district and 7 subdistrict offices, becoming every day more serious, my colleague, Mr. McIntosh, and I called upon you on April 15 to place before you what seems to the Federal board a very grave situation. The main points which you so courteously allowed us to present at that interview are as follows:

1. Owing to the fact that, despite repeated requests on our part and our expressed willingness not only to assume the expense but also to find the physicians, the bureau has not considered it possible to place, in our 14 main district offices, a medical man acceptable to the bureau and clothed with authority to pass upon the many medical questions every day arising in those offices, weeks and even months may go by and do go by without our receiving any decision as to a soldier's medical status. At the meeting of April 9 it was stated by Col. Banks that physicians of the Public Health Service are to be found in 12 out of the 14 cities in question, that such medical officers would be placed in the remaining two and that he had, within a few days, issued a general order giving these physicians authority to represent him, thus avoiding the necessity of sending all medical questions to Washington for decision. While agreeing that the clothing of these Public Health officers with authority would expedite matters, we called attention to the fact that these physicians are usually located at some distance from our regional office; that they have many other duties besides that of dealing with disabled soldiers, and that they are entirely out of touch, not only with the procedure of our rehabilitation office, but with the vocational, social, and other problems deeply involved in every case of soldier disability. In other words, these officers of the Public Health Service deal with a soldier purely from the medical standpoint and with little or no understanding of or regard for his social or vocational future.

2. A large proportion of the delays experienced in getting disabled soldiers and sailors into training could, in our opinion, be avoided were there placed in each of our district offices a representative of the War Risk Insurance Bureau competent to pass, in all ordinary cases, upon the compensability and the degree of compensability of all disabled men presenting themselves at the office, the action of these men to be based upon specific rulings and decisions as to procedure formally issued by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. Such an agent would of necessity refer complicated cases to the Washington office of the bureau, and his decisions would always be subject, of course, to review, and especially to reversal through discovery that the disability had not been incurred in line of duty. For the sake of expediting matters, the board has expressed itself as being entirely willing to assume responsibility in all cases erroneously decided by such a district agent of the War Risk Bureau, and to carry men finally decided to be noncompensable upon the special fund provided by the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. At the meeting of April 9, Col. Lindsley expressed himself as being totally unwilling to delegate even partial authority and as making it a fundamental condition that every case be first passed upon by the Washington office of the bureau.

3. The centering of all authority and responsibility in the Washington office of the bureau, and the requirement that one official in each department give personal attention to every question of compensability, no matter how routine or even trivial, has resulted in a congestion which causes many and serious delays not only in determining a man's compensability but also in getting the machinery of training in motion after he has been declared compensable. (In this connection, see attached Exhibits B, C, D, and E.)

4. A further effect of this congestion is shown in the delays in receiving their checks experienced by disabled soldiers whose compensability has been affirmatively passed upon, who have been placed in training, and in regard to whom Form 107 has been approved by the War Risk Insurance Bureau. (See Exhibit F.) Owing to the fact that it has not seemed practicable to transmit these checks through our district offices, it is impossible for us to secure any accurate data as to this question of delay in receiving checks; but I can personally vouch for the fact that a large part of the time of our district vocational officers is being given to attempts to mollify disgruntled soldiers who have not received their checks, and in securing temporary financial aid for them from the American Red Cross or in arranging loans to them from the Elk's fund. While I would not vouch for the accuracy of the following statements, they are characteristic of what I have found in all our offices that I have visited. When I asked the district vocational officer of Atlanta, week before last, how many of our 57 men then in training had received their war-risk insurance checks, he replied, "Not one." Yesterday, when I asked the district vocational officer at Boston how many had not received them, he replied, "I can not say how many have not received them, but I know of only three who have, and I am, every day, besieged by men, declared compensable and in training, who have thus far received nothing from the War Risk Insurance Bureau." In addition to the general bad feeling which this is creating, it is having the further serious effect of inducing many men to give up training in order to secure immediately remunerative work, notwithstanding the fact that such men can not without training successfully compete with normal workers.

In not a few instances such men have declined loans from the American Red Cross or the Elks fund on the ground that since the Federal Government owes them sufficient money to meet their needs, they will not accept it from any other source.

5. Although the law is specific in regard to the fact that a soldier, adjudged compensable and placed in training by the Federal Board for Vocational Education, comes during the period of that training within the terms of the vocational rehabilitation act, and not within those of the war-risk insurance act, many of the disabled soldiers in training are kept in a state of uncertainty and restlessness through the receipt of communications from the War Risk Insurance Bureau, ordering physical reexaminations, questioning them as to earnings, and raising various doubts as to their general status under the Federal law. (See Exhibits G and H.)

6. Although Form 107, which is the formal statement by this board to the War Risk Insurance Bureau that a man declared compensable has been placed in training, needs only an approval as to the amount of compensation payable by the bureau, and although we have the repeated promise, verbally and in writing, that this form will be returned to the Federal Board within 48 hours after its receipt by the War Risk Insurance Bureau, there are delays of days, weeks, and even months beyond the agreed period. (See Exhibit I.)

7. The delay in determining compensability results in disabled men, whose course of training has been laid out for them, spending day after day in fruitless visits to one or another of our offices asking if the necessary red tape which will permit of their beginning that training has been taken care of. Many such men become discouraged, take up temporary work, and lose, probably forever, the training opportunity which the Congress intended them to have. In this connection, there are a number of instances where men, rather than remain idle during this period of waiting, have taken temporary employment, only to have their compensation taken away because they were earning, while those who chose to spend the period of waiting in idleness have received their compensation without any question. This is, of course, the very reverse of the attitude which the Government should take.

In addition to the above difficulties, which are largely problems of cooperative procedure, the work of placing disabled soldiers and sailors in training is delayed through a failure of the War Risk Insurance Bureau to make rulings on fundamental questions submitted to it by our legal adviser. Among such problems are those relating to the tuberculous man; to the compensability of high-school and college boys who were not earning before entering the service; to the soldier once declared compensable and afterwards having his compensation cut off; to the status, under the amendment of October 6, 1917, to the war-risk insurance act of men accepted in camps although probably disabled before going into the service; to the status of a man adjudged compensable who has, meanwhile, received money damages in law; to the limitations of vision constituting real blindness, etc. (See Exhibit J.)

In accordance with your request, these questions, which are not problems of procedure but which involve decisions fundamental to the carrying out of the vocational rehabilitation law, are submitted herewith by our legal adviser in the form of inquiries asking for specific rulings fron the Secretary of the Treasury.

Trusting that these, as well as the suggestions as to procedure contained in my letter and in the earlier letter of Dr. Prosser, may receive serious and prompt attention, I am, with high appreciation of your personal interest,

Yours, very faithfully,

JAMES P. MUNROE, Vice Chairman.

[Exhibit A.]

MARCH 27, 1919.

Col. H. D. LINDSLEY,
Director Bureau of War Risk Insurance,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COL. LINDSLEY: In carrying out the duties intrusted to the Federal board, under the vocational rehabilitation act, this office recognized at the outset that the very closest and most cordial cooperation must exist between the Federal board and the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. With the desire of having the most friendly relations with all divisions of the bureau, we have had frequent conferences and much progress has been made. On November 15 an agreement was made between the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the Federal Board for Vocational Education covering the procedure under the rehabilitation act, copy of which agreement is attached hereto. We respectfully request that your bureau comply with articles 1, 4, and 5. The Federal board stands ready to comply with the obligations placed upon it by the said sections. In addition to that, the Federal board will carry out section 2 and also try to furnish special medical information received from the Army on what is known as Form 144, copy of which is attached. It will be noted that Col. Banks, chief medical officer, approved sections 2 and 8. We are ready to furnish the information to the bureau provided in section 8 and to furnish the medical information as provided in section 2.

Experience gained through strenuous effort to administer the vocational rehabilitation act successfully has revealed to the board the necessity of making further cooperative arrangements with the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. I am glad, therefore, in accordance with your suggestion, to write out in concrete form the difficulties encountered by the Federal Board for Vocational Education in making effective and rapid connection with the Bureau of War Risk Insurance in administering the vocational rehabilitation act. I am also suggesting, in accordance with your wishes, plans which, from the point of view of the Federal board, would materially remedy the situation.

Digitized by Google

There are six phases of the work, in which the Federal board feels the necessity of modifications in the present procedure in cooperation between the Federal board and the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

First. (a) Statement of difficulty.—In the field of medical care there is at present too long a delay in emergency cases before action can be taken, since authorization for action must be received, according to the present procedure, through the Washington office of the Medical Division of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. The Federal Board, under its act, is authorized to give medical care, if such care is needed, during the period of training. On the other hand, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is authorized to furnish medical care in case of a recurrence of a war disability. It is often difficult to determine whether an illness is in any way related to the war disability or whether it is entirely independent of such. Some arrangement needs to be made whereby an immediate decision in regard to this point could be made on the spot without the necessity of going through the Washington office.

(b) Suggested remedy.—From the point of view of the Federal Board the remedy for this situation would be the immediate appointment of at least one physician in each of the 14 district vocational offices of the board, whose judgment the Medical Division of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance would accept. Later on it may take more than one physician in certain of the 14 districts and the services of physicians on a whole or part time basis may later be needed also in certain of our subdistrict offices. In case these physicians are appointed a decision could be made immediately on each medical care case, the necessary attention could be given without delay, and the bills could be presented later to the appropriate Federal organization, either the Bureau of War Risk Insurance or the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

(c) The board would welcome the appointment of these physicians by the Medical Division of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the detail of them for full-time work at the various district vocational offices. If the bureau, however, can not legally pay for the services of such physicians, the board would be willing to have these physicians nominated by the Medical Division of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, trained by that division, and paid by the Federal Board. In either case it is understood, however, that the recommendation of any physician would have the authority that the recommendations of any physicians in the employ of the bureau would have. In other words, the statements of these physicians would be final, except as they would be reviewed in the medical division of the bureau for errors, etc. Delay in securing these physicians, in our opinion, is fatal, and the Federal Board, if requested to do so, will gladly find the physicians and nominate them to you.

Second. (a) Statement of difficulty.—Often the applications for compensation that are prepared by disabled men under the direction of the district vocational offices of the Federal Board are not complete enough for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance to base action upon. As a consequence, the bureau has to delay its decision as to compensation until it can have further correspondence with the man. In the meantime the man's educational program is consequently delayed, and with every delay there is the accompanying danger that the course of training may be given up entirely by the man, because of discouragement or because of a growing indifference. Moreover, the resulting privation and humiliation to which the man is subjected causes him to become disgruntled with the whole Government program.

(b) Suggested remedy.—The remedy for this situation would be the detail of an examiner of the Compensation Division of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance to each of the district vocational offices, who could speak with authority from the point of view of the bureau, and who could state rather definitely to the man and to the Federal Board representatives whether the man should or should not expect an award of compensation. These examiners would, of course, be trained by the bureau in the standards that the bureau applies in determining compensability. The Federal Board would be willing to enter into the same arrangements in regard to these examiners as suggested above in regard to physicians. It would welcome the detail of these examiners from the office of the bureau, or if the bureau could not legally pay salaries under these conditions it would be willing to have these examiners nominated by the bureau, trained by the bureau, and paid by the Federal Board, or we will detail to this work, if desired, vocational advisers in the field already in the employ of the board. It is possible that physicians might function both as physicians and as examiners. In that case, cooperation would be needed only in the appointment of physicians. If there were such an examiner, however, either in the person of the physician or in the person of a regular examiner, and if, in addition to that the bureau, in the absence of an official military statement in regard to line of duty status, would accept a sworn statement by the man telling when and where his injury was received and under what condition, upon this information as a basis, a judgment as to the line of duty status could be rendered and action could be taken immediately because this agent of the bureau could speak authoritatively on the question of the degree of disability and the question of line of duty, and the man could be placed immediately in training with full assurance that his compensation would be forthcoming without delay.

Third. (a) Statement of difficulty.—There is considerable confusion in the minds of the men in training in regard to receipt of their checks from the compensation division of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and from the Federal Board. With our present arrangement payments are not made at the same time by the two divisions. If a man receives his check from the Federal Board for $35 before he receives his check from the bureau of $30 he jumps to the conclusion that the Government is not paying him all that he is entitled to. He thinks of his money as coming from the Government and does not differentiate between the Federal Board and the bureau. If the whole sum could be paid at the same time, or in the same check, this difficulty could be overcome. Moreover, experience has shown that checks have been forwarded in some cases by the board and not by the bureau, which necessitates a report by the man to our district vocational office, transmittal of this report to the case officer, who in turn transmits it to the bureau to be in turn transmitted to the disbursing officer of the bureau.

(b) Suggested remedy.—This difficulty could be overcome if an arrangement could be made whereby the Federal Board would pay the full amount to which the man is entitled, both from the bureau and from the Federal Board, and later render a bill to the bureau and receive reimbursement therefor through a transfer settlement by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance for its portion of the moneys so expended.

Fourth. (a) Statement of difficulty.—It is desirable that both the bureau and the board know definitely to whom they should go for information when one organization has a matter to take up with the other.

(b) Suggested remedy.—The remedy here suggested is the appointment of a liaison officer, who would be responsible to Capt. Barton and who is authorized to handle all matters of the Federal Board in order to advance them promptly, in accordance with this and previous agreements. The Federal Board will take similar action. It is asked that this machinery be put in operation by April 1.

Fifth. (a) Statement of difficulty.—There are still several thousand applications for compensation that have been received by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and of which the Federal Board has not thus far been notified. These cases are largely old cases and could not be reached sooner on account of the crowded conditions of the bureau.

(b) Suggested remedy.—It is suggested by the board that, since the bureau is now in more commodious quarters, a force of clerks should be put on this work to clean up all back cases. The Federal Board, if agreeable to the bureau, would be willing to place its own clerical force on this job, under the supervision of the bureau. It is asked that this arrangement be made by April 1.

Sixth. (a) Statement of difficulty.—Under the present practice of the bureau every man in training is obliged to report periodically as to his physical condition and his earnings. Recent correspondence would indicate that in those cases where a man taking, for instance, training on the job is receiving apprenticeship wages during his period of training, these wages will be considered by the bureau in connection with his compensation, which will be reduced or disallowed accordingly. Furthermore, there will be vacation periods between sessions of the school. Often a disabled man will be urged by the agents of the board to take on some employment, during this vacation period, in the line of work for which he is being trained, to gain practical experience. It is obvious that, as a ward of the board, no reduction in his total support should be made during this short period, which is really a part of his education.

Aside from this difficulty, men in training as wards of the Federal board are already being greatly confused by communications from the bureau which keep them in a state of fear regarding the continuance of their compensation and support while in training. The Federal board takes the position that compensation having been awarded and training provided, these men are the wards of the Federal board for purposes of training, which may include in some cases apprenticeship wages in shops and factories while they are learners, and that the bureau should look entirely to the Federal board to protect the Government in these matters.

(b) Suggested remedy.—The Federal board is, so to speak, the guardian of all men in training, and any communications with respect to these men should be addressed to the Federal board. No change should be made in the compensable status of any man during the period of training, except on request of the Federal board, and during his period of training the usual reports which the man is required to make under the war-risk insurance act the bureau shall be suspended. It is also deemed advisable that it shall be understood that when a man is once determined compensable by the bureau his eligibility for training, so far as this fact is concerned, shall be affirmatively established, and the board may at any time thereafter proceed with his training, if deemed necessary, notwithstanding the fact that at the time training is commenced the man may not—for some reason—be actually receiving compensation.

It is also desired that in a case where compensation is not awarded because of the present earnings of the man, and the board deems training necessary, that an arrangement be perfected under which such men will be carried as a compensable case during his period of training.

In addition to the adjustments necessary in the six phases of our work, mentioned above, I desire again to call the attention of the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance to the fact that, even with these six steps adjusted satisfactorily, it is absolutely essential that the agreement of November 15, copy of which is inclosed, and which was referred to in the earlier part of this letter, shall be carried out promptly and to the letter, namely, immediate reports by the bureau on Forms 77–A and 77–B, immediate action on Form 107 by the bureau, and immediate action on the part of the board on Forms 107–A and 107–B when these forms are required.

Of course, it is understood that nothing in these arrangements shall in any way negative the procedure with regard to prompt action in awarding compensation, approved by Col. Lindsley in a series of communications, copies of which correspondence are attached.

In the opinion of the Federal board all these arrangements are absolutely necessary for the efficient discharge of mutual responsibilities and the proper care and training of disabled men. If these arrangements could be immediately effected the obstacles to placing men in training would be almost wholly removed, and the ground for complaints that are coming to us at the present in large numbers would be cut away. As a result, both the Federal board and the Bureau of War Risk Insurance would be relieved of a lot of adverse criticism and, what is of more vital concern still, the attention that they are worthy of and that they are entitled to under the vocational rehabilitation act.

Very truly, yours,

C. A. PROSSER, Director.

Mr. ROBSION. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. MUNROE. April 23, 1919. Nothing coming from this, the vice chairman, on May 16, 1919, sent a letter to the chairman of the Federal Board, Secretary Houston, and Secretary Houston wrote a letter to Mr. Glass urging that something be done.

That practically covers the same ground as the other letter, so I will not trouble you with reading it. As a result of this, it was jointly agreed by the bureau and the board that an amendment to the law should be asked for, and this amendment was heard before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor on May 29, 1919. At this hearing the director of the bureau acknowledged that the thousands of disabled soldiers then awaiting training were kept out of it by the failure of the bureau to determine their compensability.

Mr. Shouse stated at this hearing that the Treasury Department absolutely indorses this bill.

The Treasury Department absolutely indorses this bill. It is a happy solution of a very vexed question that has arisen between the two governmental agencies, and has been before us for months. We are just as enthusiastic for this bill as is the Federal Board.

I would like to quote this from the hearing:

The CHAIRMAN. Under the present law he can not go ahead with his vocational training, until he has some compensation, and you will have you take a good deal of time in order to determine the matter of compensation.

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And you are now 4,000 behind, as I understand it?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And you are running more behind every day, are you?

Mr. JONES. No; we are catching up.

Digitized by Google

The CHAIRMAN. Well, now, does that mean that there are 4,000 soldiers, sailors, and marines who want to take this vocational training, who can not take it because it has not been determined whether or not they should secure compensation?

Mr. JONES. And to what extent they should secure the compensation.

The CHAIRMAN. And how long have some of those soldiers, sailors, and marines been waiting to take this vocational training?

Mr. JONES. Oh, it is a matter of months.

The CHAIRMAN. A matter of months; would you say several months?

Mr. JONES. That is from the information that we get from them.

The CHAIRMAN. And what is their condition of mind at the present time in regard to this matter? How do they feel toward it?

Mr. JONES. Well, I think that they are pretty hot.

The CHAIRMAN. And they are not in a very good frame of mind, would you say?

Mr. JONES. No; they are not in a good frame of mind. I think that it ought to be expedited, and they think it ought to be expedited.

Senator WALSH. Are there many cases without the proper medical proof?

Mr. JONES. No; when they are discharged, they have their certificate from the Army. We have now 4,968 cases where we have said they are not compensable. There are nearly 5,000 where they are not compensable. But the decision is the same, and it is entirely up to the vocational board if they can take those men who need the training, and put them in training and make them into better citizens. It is an entirely different thing with the vocational board than it is with the War Risk Insurance Bureau. As you can all see, it is not the very best thing in the world for these men. The temper of the men is not so good because of this delay, because a man will say that he can not wait. But the principle of establishing the fact that the man was injured in line of duty is the same for the board as it is for the bureau, and it is the only thing that concerns the board, but is not the only thing that concerns the bureau. It is but one of the things that concerns the bureau. The matter of how much he is getting while he is in training is a very important detail, but it is something in addition to the particular point that we are trying to overcome now.

The CHAIRMAN. How long do you think it would take your bureau to cover the cases of these 4,000 men, and to get them into vocational training under the old law?

Mr. JONES. Now?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Well, in those cases that are clearly compensable when they are received, it takes approximately 30 days; with those requiring additional evidence it takes approximately 90 days. Take a man who is discharged in such a case, and where it is eventually proven that he is compensable, if he has to wait 90 days it is a pretty long time.

In this connection I would like to call your attention to the same hearing, Mr. Chairman, because it takes up a matter which I would like to bring up later.

Mr. MUNROE. I wish to call the attention to a number of soldiers disabled in the allied armies belonging to other countries who are in this country needing training, and in the same way our boys, many of them, have married French and English wives and are staying on the other side, and require the training. We had some conferences some months ago with representatives of those countries, and we decided to try to enter into some reciprocal arrangement, to take care of these boys, and all we need is authority from Congress to treat these members of the allied armies with the understanding that all of the expenses will be paid by the countries that the boys belong to, so that it involves no expenditure on the part of the Government, and I have taken the liberty to bring here a rough draft of proposed legislation and put it on as an amendment to this bill

The CHAIRMAN. I thought that it ought to go on this bill.

Senator JONES. I do not see why it should not go on this bill.

(The proposed amendment is as follows:)

"In order to provide for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled members of the military and naval forces of the United States resident in foreign countries, and disabled members of the military and naval forces of the countries allied with the United States in the recent war with his Imperial German Majesty, resident in the United States, the said board is also authorized and empowered to enter into a cooperative arrangement with the agencies in charge of the work of vocational rehabilitation in such allied countries under the terms of which the said board shall prescribe and provide courses of training for the disabled members of the forces of such countries resident in the United States including their support and maintenance during training and the support and maintenance of their dependents, if any, and the said agencies shall prescribe and provide training for the disabled members of the military and naval forces of the United States resident within their respective territories, including their support and maintenance during training and the support and maintenance of their dependents, if any; the cost of such training and support to be borne in every instance by the country whose disabled men are thus vocationally rehabilitated; and the said board is hereby authorized and directed to use so much of the appropriation hereby provided and so much of the appropriation provided by the Vocational Rehabilitation act approved June 27, 1918, or that may be hereafter provided for the rehabilitation of disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, as may be necessary for the vocational rehabilitation of such disabled persons and for their support and maintenance and the support and maintenance of their dependents, if any, during training: Provided, however, That for the rehabilitation of disabled members of the forces of said allied countries, the appropriation so used shall be reimbursed by the country in behalf of whom such service has been rendered."

That was legislation by which there would be reciprocal treatment of those boys in the allied countries, all of which, I think had taken similar action, but as yet nothing has been done in this country.

Meanwhile, on May 19, the board appealed to the Attorney General for rulings as to the points on which the board wished to interpret the law liberally and the bureau to interpret it narrowly. The bureau put in a counter statement contending for the narrow interpretation. As this, though very important, is a legal matter, the solicitor of the board will deal with it in his testimony later. Meanwhile, during the winter of 1918–19, the board, being unable to secure cooperation from the bureau in the matter of medical advice and assistance, appealed, on February 19, 1919, to the Surgeon General of the Army for the assignment of 15 Army surgeons, and again, on April 5, 1919, for the assignment of certain specialists then about to get out of the Army and who would have been glad to work with the Federal Board. Both these requests were refused and because of that we could not get the surgical help that we needed in our work. As a result it was not possible to organize the medical service which the board should have had from the very beginning until the fall of 1919.

Further difficulties which the board encountered were due to defects in the law itself. Shortly before the passage of the rehabilitation act, the board was called upon to budget the proposed appropriation of $2,000,000, and in spite of its protests that it could not determine in advance how the money should be divided, it was compelled to put in a budget plan which was, of course, merely a guess. Unfortunately, rather than make it entirely a guess, the board based the budgeting upon Canadian experience, where the Government has thought it necessary to build special schools for the disabled men and to employ teachers. Consequently, large portions of the appropriation were set aside for these purposes and later, after the board had found it possible to save hundreds of millions for the Government by utilizing existing schools and colleges, and when the board was in dire need of money to pay its employees, these practically untouched funds could not be used. On December 7, 1918, this unfortunate situation was brought to the attention of Congress, but owing to pressure of business, the act giving the board authority to coalesce its funds was not passed until February 26, 1919. Meanwhile, the board had to appeal to private agencies to maintain its staff of employees.

In October, 1918, the board prepared its estimates for the fiscal year 1920 on the basis of the meagre experience which it then had had, and on January 1, 1919, it sent to Congress, as on every other quarter, a list of its employees with their salaries. Although the board asked for $4,000,000 in the above-noted estimate, the Appropriations Committee, in the last weeks of the Sixty-fifth Congress, cut this down to a million and a half, which figure was raised on the floor to $2,000,000. The committee also placed salary limitations, none having been in the original act, based upon the skeleton organization of December 31, 1918, when, because of the difficulties above recited, and because the soldiers had not yet returned from abroad, the work of rehabilitation had not really begun. I think I stated that we took every pains to keep our estimates down as far as possible, based only on what we actually needed.

The sundry civil bill did not reach action in the Senate before the expiration of the Sixty-fifth Congress. Immediately upon the convening of the Sixty-sixth Congress the matter of appropriation was brought to the attention of the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations by a formal letter. Meanwhile, the proposed amendment to section 2 of the war risk insurance act had been brought in, and also the Army appropriation bill, with which, of course, the Federal board had nothing to do, bearing an appropriation of $5,500,000 for vocational training in the Regular Army. Of course, that is entirely outside our province.

In the great pressure of legislative matters and in the commendable desire to conserve the public funds, both Houses of Congress got into a serious tangle over these three appropriations, not seeming to realize that the appropriation for carrying out the amendment to section 2 of the rehabilitation act was merely a transfer from the War Risk Bureau to the Federal board. Members of the board did everything humanly possible to straighten out the misunderstanding; but, notwithstanding, legislation was enacted under the sundry civil bill which provided a sum far below that necessary even to maintain the disabled soldiers under the amendment to section 2 of the act, and which so limited salaries as to involve the immediate dismissal of at least 200 of the most competent employees. Confronted with the necessity, should this legislation prevail, not only of declining to put more boys in training but of taking out of training many of those who had already begun, and faced with the further responsibility of carrying on even this restricted work with a new, untrained staff, it was a great relief when the President vetoed the sundry civil bill.

The $2,000,000 originally appropriated, even though supplemented by $77,000 in gifts from the American Red Cross and the National Catholic War Council, began to approach exhaustion in May, 1919, just at the time when the size of the appropriation for 1919–20 began to appear very problematical. Therefore, from some time in May until the passage of the amended sundry civil bill in late July, 1919, the board had to hold up practically all payments except to soldiers and employees. Other bills accumulated, of course, in great number, and because of the frightful crowding at the Maltby Building, these could not be properly handled until some months later.

This explains the delays in the payment of certain bills which have been complained of.

The vetoed sundry civil bill took away the authority of the board to rent quarters in the District of Columbia which had been granted in the original act. The amended sundry civil bill passed in July, 1919, restored this authority, but limited expenditure to $15,000 a year. At least 50,000 square feet were needed for the rehabilitation work, the Maltby Building was required for the work of the Vocational Education, and the Committee on Public Buildings, to which we appealed again and again, could find nothing for us in Government-owned property. So it was necessary to find a privately owned building, where we could get 50,000 square feet of space for $15,000. Convention Hall was finally secured for that sum in September, 1919, but proved so cold and otherwise unsuitable that at times fully half the employees were too ill to work there. Only since February 1, 1920, when the Government at last gave us space in the temporary building at Nineteenth and D Streets, has the board had adequate housing to carry on the rehabilitation work.

With the passage of the amendment to section 2 on July 11, and with that of the revised sundry civil bill on July 19, the board, after nearly 13 months of ceaseless endeavor, was at last in a position to act freely and to put into training the more than 8,000 men who by that time were waiting because of the action, or, rather, the failure of action, of the War Risk Insurance Bureau. The Congress had still insisted upon salary limitations, requiring a very drastic reorganization of the staff and, as has been frequently indicated in the hearings, placing a serious handicap upon getting the best service for the disabled soldiers. But, with the exception of a few matters to which attention will be called later, the board has had a free hand since early in August, 1919, and in that eight or nine months has practically disposed of its problem, so far as determining eligibility and putting men into training is concerned. To show this, let me read you the following comparative figures, the first column being July 11, 1919, when the amended act was passed, and the second column April 15, 1920:

	July 11, 1919.	Apr. 15, 1920.
Registered	110,000	200,000
Approved, section 2	7,994	58,000
Approved, section 8	.....	36,000
Closed	676	51,000
Entered training, section 2	4,439	35,872
Entered training, section 3	.....	1,976
Completed training	41	407
Discontinued training	475	3,314
In training	3,923	34,127

It will be noted that section 3 of the act had not taken effect at the earlier date.

That shows considerable progress for the eight months after our hands were free. The details of the progress of that work since the early months of the fall of 1919 will be dwelt upon by the chief of rehabilitation. So far as settling eligibility of existing cases, that will be cleared up in a few weeks, and new cases as they come out of the hospitals or as the district offices learn of them otherwise will continue to be handled with the utmost promptness. Among other things the board is now sending squads of competent men, including physicians, from district offices to a number of the large centers to which by previous notification by letter and advertisement and through local cooperation of the American Legion, the Red Cross, etc., men will be brought, at Government expense, on a specified series of days. This is now going on in the State of New York with the utmost success.

There still remains the task of inducing men who have been awarded training to avail themselves of it and that of following the men up in the schools and establishments in which they are in training. In regard to the former task, the board is utilizing every agency available, especially the organizations of ex-service men, to get hold of the men. To the task of follow up, the vocational advisers and others will be transferred as rapidly as their existing duties will permit, and new men will be assigned as rapidly as occasion demands and as they can be secured.

To expedite the work still more, Congress, besides seeing to it that the deficiency appropriation for $8,000,000 is provided early in May, since existing funds are getting very low, and that the appropriation of $98,303,000 for the fiscal year 1921 is passed with such additions as will be necessary if the Darrow bill, which raises the amount of money for a man without dependents from $80 to $100 and others correspondingly, becomes law. It seems to us that if this work is to be carried forward as Congress wishes it should be carried forward, the salary limitations placed in the rehabilitation law by the amendment of July 11, 1919, should be removed.

There has been brought out again and again in these hearings the very intimate and important character of this work of advising and the follow-up of disabled men. As it is now, under the law, that work has to be placed in the hands of men to whom we can not pay more than $2,400, and at the present time you gentlemen know it is extremely difficult to get the type of men that we ought to have for that figure. It seems to us that if the salary limitations were taken off, we could be trusted not to squander that money and to get the type of men that one can get for a larger figure than $2,400, which is absolutely essential to giving the very best service to these disabled men.

Secondly, it seems to us that Congress should pass the so-called Kahn bill giving authority to the War Department to transfer equipment, buildings, and so forth, not needed by that department to the Federal Board. In this connection, I would say that a long time ago we called the attention of the Secretary of War to the fact that there was an immense amount of equipment absolutely suited for the schools that were giving this training to our boys and which these schools did not have, and could not, in the present state of the market or the state of their funds, procure. The Secretary of War promptly issued an order giving authority for that equipment and those tools and so forth to be transferred to the board for the use of the disabled boys in schools.

A later ruling of the Attorney General, however, was to the effect that that order of the Secretary of War was without warrant of law, and although meanwhile we had secured about $250,000 worth of material and distributed it to these schools in which our boys were being trained, the order was that should all be given back and, of course, that decision at once put an end to our procuring any more of this material. My colleague says that it was the Judge Advocate General of the War Department who made that ruling, not the Attorney General. I was mistaken.

Meanwhile, therefore, we brought the matter to the attention of Congress, and there has been pending in Congress for a long time the so-called Kahn bill, which would give authority to the War Department not only to transfer this equipment which is now being rapidly sold or transferred to foreign Governments, to the hundreds and thousands of schools in which our boys, disabled boys, are being trained. The Kahn bill would also give authority for the transfer to us of certain camps or hospitals that are about to be given up by the War Department and which would be admirably suited for the training of these boys. I speak especially of Fort McHenry, which is soon to be dismantled, I understand, and in which there is plenty of equipment for teaching in quite a number of industries and which the War Department would be very glad, indeed, to turn over to us if they had the authority of law to do so, and which would greatly reduce the expense of training of a large number of these boys.

I would also venture to suggest that Congress pass legislation which has been several times asked for by this board, permitting it to extend the rehabilitation law to the great numbers of American citizens who served in the armies of the Allies. As you gentlemen know, great numbers of our boys, before we went into the war, volunteered in the armies of the Allies, were disabled therein, and under the law we have no authority whatever to give them any training. I venture to suggest also that legislation be passed which has also been several times asked for. I refer to allowing the Federal board to enter into reciprocal relations with the Allies for the vocational training of their disabled men in this country with the understanding that they will train our disabled men who are in Great Britain or France.

I would venture to suggest further, as has been referred to in this hearing a number of times, that a revolving fund be appropriated for, such as that so generously given by the Elks, not only to take care of men between the period of assignment to training and the receipt of their first training pay check, but to provide for small emergency loans, which can not now be taken care of under the rehabilitation law. That would be a very great relief because, as I have already pointed out, no boy can be paid until at the earliest two weeks after he is put into training, and there are many things the boys need money for just to tide them over. A loan fund of that sort established by Congress would be a very valuable thing.

Finally, I would venture to ask that the pending bill making appropriations for hospitals and sanatoriums to be used by the Bureau of Public Health Service for the disabled soldiers be passed as promptly as possible. That meets, gentlemen, one of the most serious problems, I think, that this board is confronted with, the problem of men with tuberculosis, tens of thousands of them; men with some abnormal mental condition, tens of thousands of them, and various others, severe heart cases, and things of that sort, where it is absolutely impossible to put the man at school, or to put him in training of any sort, but yet where it is desirable and practicable to give him under medical supervision a certain amount of training in the hospital.

Digitized by Google

Now, if the Public Health Service is given the money which it has asked for, for establishing the additional hospitals, which I understand it very greatly needs, it is our intention to carry out the plan which is already under way of establishing in many, if not all of these hospitals, vocational training under medical supervision, so that a man may take one or two or even four or five hours a day training under medical prescription from the doctor and will be that much further toward vocational rehabilitation when he finally becomes cured of his malady. This is, of course, especially desirable in the case of men afflicted with tuberculosis.

I would ask permission to consult with the acting chairman as to putting in the record some exhibits, as it seems to me some of them should go in the record that have been referred to.

Mr. TOWNER. I will examine them.

Mr. MUNROE. If you kindly would; yes.

EXHIBIT R.

SEPTEMBER 3, 1918.

Mr. WM. C. DELANOY,
Director War Risk Insurance Bureau,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. DELANOY: It seems clear that the vocational rehabilitation act, which became a law June 27, 1918, puts a joint duty upon the War Risk Insurance Bureau and the Federal board in the care and training of disabled men discharged from the hospitals. The welfare of these men is a matter of keen interest to the public upon which a great deal of attention is already being focused. Every consideration requires the establishment of working relations between the bureau and the board which will enable them to discharge this joint duty in a way to not only avoid public criticism but meet hearty public approval. Under the declared policy of the War Department only those men are to be discharged from the hospital who are unfit for restricted military service. This means that the men discharged for the present will be those with grave disabilities. In many cases they will not be able to undertake employment without training. Since they have no source of income other than that which they receive under the War risk insurance act or the vocational rehabilitation act, they constitute a particularly helpless class for whom prompt relief must be furnished; otherwise public criticism will be severe indeed.

In order to do the best possible for the disabled man who is slated for a discharge, it is necessary for the Federal board to handle his case and come to a determination as to what it will be best for him to do before he leaves the hospital. We have no authority under the vocational rehabilitation act to proceed with the case in any certain way until after the War Risk Insurance Bureau has determined whether or not he is a beneficiary.

Digitized by Google

The experience of all foreign countries goes to show that unless every step is taken with the man preliminary to his training before he leaves the hospital, he is in the majority of cases certain not to undertake the training after he return to his home. The liberal scheme which the Federal Government has provided for his vocational rehabilitation will fail utterly therefore unless some scheme can be arranged between the War Risk Insurance Bureau and the Federal board, so that the two acts of determining whether or not he is to be a beneficiary of the War Risk Insurance Bureau and a student for training with the Federal board can be performed before he is discharged from the hospital.

In order that these ends may be accomplished, it will of course be necessary that the bureau secure the application of a man who is a prospect for discahrge, a considerable time in advance of his discharge, and establish the machinery necessary to determine by quick action whether the man is to be a beneficiary of the bureau.

It will also be necessary, in order that a disabled man may not be in position to make an election as to whether or not he desires training by the board, for your bureau to make an early ruling in regard to the amount of compensation to be paid men while undergoing training. It is quite evident that it was the intent of Congress to properly support the disabled man during this period. Practically all of them have absolutely no other source of income, and from the standpoint of wage earning are total disability cases. The experience of the Canadian Government shows that it is not possible for a man to support himself as a student in training on less than $50 per month. It is also quite evident that a strict interpretation of the provisions in section 2 of the vocational rehabilitation act regarding the compensation to be paid during training will not provide anything like adequate support for at least 90 per cent of the men undergoing training. It is therefore suggested that in order to carry out the intent of Congress in this regard, a liberal interpretation be made of the term "pay" in the voca-vocational rehabilitation act, or the term "supplies" in the war-risk insurance act, whichever course the board determines most desirable to pursue.

It must be remembered that these disabled men were while in the military service, not only in receipt of a monthly check as base pay, but they received other compensation in the form of money for all such things as service across seas, skill in target practice, and the performance of all kinds of extra duties. In addition they were fed, clothed, and quartered at the expense of the Government. These facts, in my judgment, should be considered and the term "pay" should, if possible, be construed to include all of these extras and allowances.

If, however, it is believed that the interpretation as above indicated might operate so as to provide unnecessary increases in some cases, it is suggested that adequate compensation could be furnished in proper cases, by a liberal interpretation of the word "supplies" in the war risk insurance act. The bureau may, by a ruling, prescribe that in cases where the compensation paid to any individual under the act, is less than $50 a month, an additional amount sufficient to make this sum will be paid to such men as "supplies." This is an interpretation which it is submitted the bureau would be justified in making, because of the fact that the man while in training is subject to unusual expenses, is deprived from all opportunities of wage earning, large or small, and is therefore a case of total disability, and additional aid absolutely necessary.

Either interpretation would provide adequate support to men undergoing training, and thus fulfill the manifest intent of Congress, besides producing the following benefits:

The man would be adequately provided for from the day of his discharge from the hospital.

Public criticism because of real or alleged neglect of the case would be avoided.

There would be no hiatus between hospital care and training.

A man would have a definite basis upon which to decide whether or not he desired reeducation.

The bureau would avoid confusion in attempting to make a hasty judgment as to the amount of compensation payable, and would have ample time while the man was in training to carefully investigate the case and determine the amount of compensation to which he would be entitled at the close of the period of training with the Federal board.

In submitting these suggestions the board does not wish to be understood as attempting in any way to dictate the policies or procedure to be adopted by you in carrying out the duties placed upon your bureau by the vocational rehabilitation act, but merely desires to indicate a plan, which, in the opinion of the board, is the most feasible method of discharging the joint duties imposed by the act. As it is imperative that some working arrangement should be established immediately, it is requested that you advise me as soon as possible whether or not in your opinion the suggestions here submitted are practicable.

On the 12th day of August the acting chairman of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, Hon. William C. Redfield, sent to the Secretaries of the Treasury, War, Navy, and Labor Departments, respectively, a tentative draft of the regulations which the Federal board, as the main agency concerned in the administration of the vocational rehabilitation act, has drawn up for the approval of the different departments. In the letter of transmittal to the Secretary, attention was called to those particular regulations with which the department addressed was more immediately concerned.

For your information there is attached hereto a copy of the letter sent to the Secretary of the Treasury, to which no reply has been received, together with a copy of the regulations as submitted. I shall be very glad to confer with you concerning these tentative regulations, or other matters contained in the foregoing communication.

Cordially, yours,

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF WAR RISK INSURANCE,
Washington, September 6, 1918.

Dr. C. A. PROSSER,
Director Federal Board for Vocational Education,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR DR. PROSSER: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favor of the 3d instant, and in reply would say that the general proposition that you advance is self-evident, and the undertaking which Congress has committed to the Federal Board for Vocational Education is deserving of every encouragement and support.

If I may be permitted to say so, I doubt whether it is wise that persons who are to be made the subjects of vocational education should be first discharged from the Army and thereby deprived of their pay status.

So far as the powers of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance are concerned article 13 of the war risk insurance act specifies and limits the extent thereof. It goes without saying that the provisions of this act will continue to be liberally construed and as liberally administered. The amounts to be paid by way of compensation are scheduled in article 3 as amended June 25, 1918, and it goes without saying that no amount in excess of that so scheduled can lawfully be paid by this bureau. If, as you outline, these amounts are likely to prove insufficient, the fault lies in the plan of depriving these men of their pay status in the Army. Subdivision 3 of section 302 does not embrace and confers no authority to provide funds by way of additional compensation or as a substitute for pay. The word "supplies" appeared in the light of the illustrative phrase which follows it, can not by any possibility be construed to authorize the payment of moneys to the men by way of funds for support or as a substitute for pay. Power in that behalf can only come from supplemental legislation.

Sincerely, yours,

WILLIAM C. DELANOY, Director.

Mr. HENRY B. LINDSLEY,
Director Bureau of War Risk Insurance,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The work of the Federal Board for Vocational Education in retraining disabled, discharged officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines is so intimately linked up with the work of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance that it can not be successfully carried out without the closest kind of cooperation with the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

2. We have a working agreement with Capt. Houlihan whereby many points of cooperation are adequately provided for and efficiently carried out. Additional improvement along the line of cooperation, however, could be made, provided the Bureau of War Risk Insurance were willing to adopt the following policies, which, from the point of view of the Federal board, seem feasible, but which, from the point of view of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, may present difficulties:

(L) The present excellent arrangement whereby as soon as a man has been recommended for discharge by a medical board (S. C. D. made) officers of the Army Medical Corps fill out his Bureau of War Risk Insurance Form 504 (physician's report) and other officers assist him in filling out Bureau of War Risk Insurance Form 526 (application for compensation) could be still further improved upon, to the saving of considerable time. These forms are now held until the recommendation for the man's discharge has been forwarded for approval to the headquarters of the military department in which the hospital where the man is being treated or held is situated. Quite often a considerable length of time is bound to elapse before authroity to carry out the man's military discharge is received at the hospital from the headquarters of the military department, but the man's application for compensation is not forwarded to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance until his military discharge is carried out. Could it not be arranged that as soon as a man is recommended for discharge by a board of medical officers (S. C. D.) his application for compensation, together with Form 504, be sent immediately to the bureau for consideration, whereupon the bureau could notify the Federal board whether the case would be compensable upon discharge, The Federal board would then know what procedure to take with the case. I am informed that it is only in very rare cases that the department headquarters does not concur in the recommendations of the S. C. D. Board, especially now that the war is over and all men are being discharged as soon as their condition permits.

Digitized by Google

(2) By cooperation between our vocational adviser and the hospital authorities, it could easily be arranged that the applications of all men who appeared to be subjects for vocational reeducation at the hands of the Federal Board be marked in some way so that, as already arranged by the compensation branch, the medical branch of the bureau could give them priority in consideration over cases not likely to need vocational training after discharge. This would involve the detailing by the medical branch, Bureau of War Risk Insurance, of officers to deal especially with all such potential reeducation cases so as to expedite decision as to their compensability. The compensation branch has already detailed certain of its officers for this work.

(3) It is highly important that compensation cases that are placed in training receive their compensation without delay. Possibly this could best be done by having a separate section of the disbursing office handle vocational rehabilitation cases.

(4) Might not the Bureau of War Risk Insurance use our district vocational offices as centers from which various ones of their officers might work out into the field, such as field examiners, etc. The Federal Board would be willing to provide office space for such purpose. Under such an arragnement a quick exchange of information on cases could be provided for that would facilitate the work both of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

(5) I am of the opinion that in the field, the medical services of the bureau and of the Federal Board should be joined. From the making of the man's application up to the time his training is completed questions will constantly be arising as to the responsibility for medical treatment; i. e., whether it shall be provided by the bureau or by the board. At present, if a disabled man who is undergoing vocational training, or is being considered for it, needs medical attention, the bureau provides it, if his illness results from his war disability. If his illness is from some other cause, the board provides medical attention, but this arrangement is bound to result continually in questions as to the cause of the man's illness, to decide which authority shall provide treatment. Canadian experience is that men who have been disabled will continue to need medical treatment through the period of vocational training, and afterwards. This and every other consideration strongly indicates that the medical services of the bureau and the Federal Board should be one organization.

(6) A well qualified medical officer (perhaps more than one) is needed in each district vocational office. Our offices are becoming more and more centers to which disabled men apply for help and advice on every possible subject and this should be encouraged. If the medical services of the bureau and board were one, the medical officer in the district vocational office could settle many questions which now have to be referred to Washington, with consequent delays, irritation, and suffering from the disabled men and dissatisfaction on the part of the public which is watching the work of the bureau and board very closely.

Very truly, yours,

J. A. C. CHANDLER,
Chief Division of Rehabilitation.

MAY 17, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: As I am confident that you can not be aware of the situation, I venture, as chairman of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, to call to your personal attention the very serious difficulties confronting this board in performing its duties under the vocational rehabilitation law, arising out of, first, the interpretation of that law in relation to the war risk insurance act as made by the bureau; second, the slowness of the War Risk Insurance Bureau in deciding compensability, in paying compensation, and in carrying out its necessary daily relations with the Federal board; and third, the absence of fixed policies and of settled rates of compensation, on the part of the bureau, resulting in great confusion and uncertainty, not only in the minds of the Federal board and its agents, but in those of disabled men seeking the benefits of Federal legislation.

Although the vocational rehabilitation act declares that the Federal Board for Vocational Education is responsible for soldiers, sailors, and marines, "disabled under circumstances entitling them to compensation," the War Risk Insurance Bureau is continually ruling that only men actually in receipt of compensation are entitled to training under the vocational rehabilitation act, that when the bureau decides that compensation should cease, training must also cease, and that a disabled man who takes temporary employment, pending decision of his case by the War Risk Insurance Bureau, is, by the fact of earning money, debarred from compensation. Such decisions as these are in effect declarations that the vocational rehabilitation act is to be administered by the War Risk Insurance Bureau instead of by the Federal Board for Vocational Education, and, if carried to a logical conclusion, would mean that the decision as to whether or not a disabled man is to receive training is in the hands of the former instead of, as the law prescribes, in the hands of the latter body.

While this attitude on the part of the bureau results in great uncertainty and irritation on the part of men placed, in good faith, in training, but whose status is subsequently questioned by the War Risk Insurance Bureau, it is of relatively minor consequence as compared with the country-wide discontent due to delays in the bureau both in deciding compensability and in sending monthly checks to men declared compensable. Through the 14 district offices and 7 suboffices of the Federal board, we have registered to date nearly 88,000 soldiers, sailors, and marines claiming to be compensable under the war-risk insurance law, and have surveyed carefully more than 56,000 of these. Our records based on reports to us from the bureau and from these men show compensation awarded to only 9,144 men of the total of approximately 87,000, leaving 78,000 men without compensation, practically all of whom believe they are entitled to it.

Yesterday the bureau reported that a total of 66,711 applications for compensation had been received and that 17,941 awards had been made. Making allowance for rejections it would appear that practically 50,000 men, handicapped with disabilities, are without the compensation for which they asked in many instances months ago. Furthermore, the bureau is receiving new cases at the rate of 6,000 per week and making awards in only about 500 cases.

While, of course, not all of these men are compensable, many thousands of them are men with amputations and other perfectly obvious disabilities, and the delay in reaching their cases not only is making it impossible for the Federal board properly to carry out its duties of determining upon and providing training for disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, but is giving color to a belief rapidly growing throughout the United States, that the Government in whose service these men have been injured is not keeping faith with them. While it is not to be expected that the War Risk Insurance Bureau can keep absolutely up to date in its handling of this large problem, at least its service should be increasing in efficiency; yet statistics seem to show that while in the six weeks ending April 26, the speed of the Federal board in dealing with its problem has practically doubled, that of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, in the same period, has fallen off by more that 50 per cent. The average surveyed each day in that period by the board is 611 as compared with an earlier average of 332, while the daily average of cases undetermined by the bureau has increased from 449 to 689.

Moreover, this widespread dissatisfaction already referred to is emphasized by the fact that men declared compensable by the War Risk Insurance Bureau are not receiving promptly, and in many cases are not receiving at all, the compensation checks due them under those decisions. At this date, the Director of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, empowered by a special gift from the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, is carrying on his books 1,034 men declared compensable, placed in training, and paid in part under the law by the Federal board, but who, through failure to receive their War Risk Insurance Bureau checks and through their inability to support themselves on the partial payment made by the Federal board, are obliged to seek the aid of this private philanthropy. Moreover, a considerable number of men in training have relinquished it, upon failing to receive their bureau checks, rather than to borrow from the Elks' fund.

A clear delimitation of the respective administrative fields of the War Risk Insurance Bureau and the Federal Board for Vocational Education, and a speeding up of the work of the former organization are fundamental to the proper working of the vocational rehabilitation act. In addition, there are a number of minor difficulties in cooperation, most of which are embodied in communications addressed by Mr. Munroe, vice chairman of the Federal board, to Assistant Secretary Shouse on April 26. Those communications did not overstate the confusion which results from the uncertainty shown by the War Risk Insurance Bureau in its decisions concerning compensation. In regard to one disabled man it will rule favorably, while in the case of another man seemingly similarly placed, it will rule adversely. Moreover, it has not as yet published and, judging from the decisions made, it would seem that it has not yet established a scale of ratings.

The members of our staff charged with the details of this rehabilitation work have not only exercised the utmost patience in attempting to carry out cooperative relations with the bureau, but at an estimated expense of not less than $100,000, they have done much of the actual work of the bureau in the field, in seeking out disabled men, assisting them to make out their papers and helping them to secure the variety of affidavits required by the bureau. But the situation has reached a point where the work will break down unless fundamental and drastic action is taken, especially in the matter of speeding up the determination of compensation. Furthermore, it has become a matter of national discussion and wide dissatisfaction, and only prompt and far-reaching action can save it. Therefore, I have ventured, as I said in the beginning, to acquaint you with some of the conditions concerning which you could not be expected, in the great pressure of your duties, to have personal knowledge.

Very truly, yours,

DAVID F. HOUSTON,
Chairman.

MEMORANDUM CONCERNING VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION LAW.

The war-risk insurance law and the vocational rehabilitation law were enacted by the Congress and signed by the President in the belief, doubtless, that close coordination between the War Department, the War Risk Insurance Bureau, and the Federal Board for Vocational Education would assure, under those measures, uninterrupted care of the disabled man from the moment of injury to his return, should such return be possible, to an effective position in the economic world.

The three stages of that journey are (1) complete hospital (including convalescent) treatment; (2) determination by the War Risk Insurance Bureau, immediately upon the man's discharge from the hospital, of his eligibility for compensation and the amount thereof, if any, together with its assumption of responsibility, when necessary, for the care of social dependents; and (3) training by the Federal board of all men needing it in order to enter or reenter upon civilian employment, together with placement by this board, so far as possible, of all disabled men desiring such aid.

Experience makes it clear, however, that certain steps must at once be taken to render such coordination possible and to put an end to the spectacle of men disabled in war, or in preparation for war, thrown back, without compensation or training, upon their families or even, their maimed limbs uncared for or their diseases unchecked, actually begging upon the streets of Boston, New York, and Washington itself.

The Federal Board for Vocational Education makes, therefore, the following statement:

There are, in fact, two bodies of discharged, disabled soldiers and sailors: one made up of those sent out of hospitals before the war-risk insurance law machinery got under full headway and the vocational rehabilitation law was passed, and the other made up of a rapidly increasing number of men discharged from the hospitals since June.

The first body, thousands in number, is made up almost wholly of men out, disabled or diseased, from the cantonments or other Army posts in the United States. About a third of these have tuberculosis: and as a rule, these men are at large, their disease uncorrected, and with no teaching as to its treatment. Many of them, of course, are active centers of contagion. Of the remainder, some are in civilian or United States Public Health Service hospitals, under support by the War Risk Insurance Bureau, but a large number have been scattered to every corner of the United States. All those entitled to compensation under the war-risk insurance law must be. and are being. picked up, one by one, by the Federal Board for Vocational Education, in order that they may be offered the training provided for in the vocational rehabilitation law.

Doubtless many of that group, especially the tuberculous, were disabled before entering military service; yet having been accepted by the draft boards and having been taken into service, it becomes a complex question as to the responsibility of the Government. Many of these cases were undoubtedly aggravated, if not produced, by the hardships of camp life, yet great numbers of these men are debarred from the receipt of compensation because their discharge papers state that their disability "was not incurred in line of duty or when employed in the active service."

Even more grave than the situation presented by this group discharged before the passage of the vocational rehabilitation law is that with which the Federal board is every day confronted: Soldiers and sailors, many of them from overseas, who have been discharged from the military and naval hospitals without any provision having been made for either their physical care, their vocational training or placement, or their compensation under the law. Were it not for the vigilance of the American Red Cross and other agencies for relief, these cases would almost all be public charges or beggars upon the streets. Among them are mildly insane men sent under military escort to their homes and there abandoned, feeble-minded and epileptic cases unprovided with guardianship or institutional care, maimed men with their stumps not yet shrunk and therefore not furnished with artificial limbs, venereal cases still in the active stage, and, as already noted, tuberculous men turned out with the disease uncorrected and with no provision made for sanitorium care. Men in this last group especially are dying off rapidly in civilian hospitals and private homes.

Moreover, men have been turned out, in many cases, with two, three, or even six months' military pay still owing to them, and with no resources, therefore, except public or private alms.

In connection with the above statements see the typical cases appended hereto.

This deplorable situation is due to the fact that, under the law, the War Risk Insurance Bureau can take no cognizance of a disabled soldier or sailor until he makes formal application for compensation; that most of these men have little or no knowledge of their eligibility for compensation; and that, in most cases, no steps have been taken, either in the Army and Navy or in the hospitals, to acquaint the men with their rights.

Furthermore, the Federal Board for Vocational Education can not, under the law, assume responsibility for a disabled man until it is clear that he is entitled to compensation under the war-risk insurance law. With the result that, while these two Federal bodies stand powerless to act or to interfere, helpless men are being sent out every day from the military and naval hospitals on the plea that, since nothing more can be done for them medically or surgically, their places should be surrendered to more hopeful cases, and are being thrown upon local charity, many of them in a penniless condition, many of them broken and ill, many of them urgently needing asylum or institutional care, and all of them unprovided, perhaps for months, with the support and training that the Congress intended they should receive.

It is inconceivable that the Congress and the Administration would knowingly permit any handicapped soldier or sailor to suffer for one instant in this needless way, or that they would countenance any hiatus between discharge from the hospital and the placing of the man on the straight road to effective industrial life, if he be competent, or in the proper asylum or sanitarium if he be mentally or physically broken. This clear intention of Congress and the President, expressed in definite law, is in many cases being nullified because:

1. The War Risk Insurance Bureau can not award compensation until the disabled man asks for it; the Federal Board for Vocational Education can assume no responsibility until the man's eligibility for compensation has been determined; and there is no adequate system for bringing the man and the bureau and board, which stand ready to help him, into immediate relation.

2. The War Risk Insurance Bureau, even when the man knows his rights and asks for compensation, is denied direct access to the findings of the hospital surgeon, upon which its decision must be based and, before it can even consider the man's case, must await the slow process of securing the findings of the military discharge board through the devious channels of the Adjutant General's Office.

Through that same channel the bureau must also ascertain, before it can make award, whether or not the disability was "incurred in line of duty or when employed in the active service." Meanwhile, in most instances, the man has perforce left the hospital and must subsist as best he may for weeks, or even months, while the data essential to a determination of his compensation status are being secured and the amount of that compensation determined.

3. The Federal Board for Vocational Education, which has usually secured contact, meanwhile, in the hospital with the disabled man, and has enlisted his interest in being trained for economic efficiency, can give him no help until it has been decided by the War Risk Insurance Bureau that he is entitled to compensation. In the interval between discharge and that determination, either the man has been driven by poverty to take any job that comes along, or his interest in training has entirely evaporated.

Because of this lack of coordination, a lack easily remedied by legislation or by presidential order, there is being created a dangerous discontent (1) upon the part of the soldiers and sailors and their friends, who can not understand the reason for such neglect; and (2) on the part of those who, eager to criticize the Government and its administration, find in these mistreated men a living text.

As the numbers of disabled returning from the other side increase and the necessity for rapidly clearing the hospitals becomes acute, this regrettable situation will grow worse unless immediate steps are taken to permit the War Department, the War Risk Insurance Bureau, and the Federal Board for Vocational Education to get together as the Congress intended that they should, in a joint endeavor to give continuous supervision and support to every disabled man requiring help.

After prolonged conference on the subject, the War Risk Insurance Bureau and the Federal Board for Vocational Education unite in urging the putting into immediate effect of the following procedure. It is their belief that, by taking these comparatively simple steps, the condition that has been pointed out can be promptly remedied:

(a) Immediately upon the preparation of the hospital examining surgeon's report recommending discharge, carbon copies of that report should be furnished to the War Risk Insurance Bureau and to the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

(b) The Army and Navy should designate or detail in every hospital a special medical officer whose duty in this connection will be to secure such facts and to make such recommendations concerning every man about to be discharged with an existing disability as will assist the War Risk Insurance Bureau and the Federal Board for Vocational Education in making their decisions as to compensation and training, respectively.

(c) It should be the duty of such officer, or of some other designated person in each hospital, to inform every disabled man of his rights under the war-risk insurance and vocational rehabilitation laws, and to assist him, should he desire it, in making out his formal application for compensation under the former act.

(d) Immediately upon the preparation of the hospital medical officer's recommendation for discharge, an authorized representative of the Federal board should be given access, as a matter of right and, of course, under existing hospital rules and regulations, to all disabled men so recommended, in order that he may study their cases, advise them as to their opportunities under the vocational rehabilitation law, and form an opinion as to the nature and extent of the vocational training required.

(e) Following action by the military discharge board, every man with a surgical or medical disability should be detained, either in a military or naval hospital, or in a discharge depot under military or naval control, until such time as the military or naval authorities are notified by the War Risk Insurance Bureau and the Federal Board for Vocational Education that definite and satisfactory arrangements have been made for the disposition of each case so held.

Finally, steps should at once be taken to enable the Federal Board for Vocational Education to extend the benefits of the vocational rehabilitation law to two large and increasing classes of disabled soldiers and sailors now excluded, viz:

(1) American citizens who, having originally enlisted in the Canadian or other foreign allied service, do not meet the requirement of "discharge from the military or naval forces of the United States."

(2) Men disabled through service in the military or naval forces of an allied nation other than the United States, who have come, or will come, to this country as returning residents or citizens, or as prospective citizens, and who are also, under the law, debarred from receiving aid. It is suggested that, if possible, reciprocal relations or understandings be set up, in this matter of vocational rehabilitation, with those allied nations in which similar work in vocational rehabilitation is being carried on.

STATEMENT FROM THE OFFICE OF THE FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION, RELATIVE TO SENATE 5038, REFERRED TO THE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION OF THE HOUSE, DECEMBER 7, 1918.

The Federal board asks two things: First, favorable consideration of this bill in order that the board may have authority for a more liberal use of gifts and donations under section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act of June 27, 1918; and, second, the amendment of Senate 5038, in order that certain funds under section 8, needed only in part for the purposes for which originally appropriated, may be applied to purposes for which they are sorely needed in connection with the care, relief, and emergency help for disabled soldiers.

The legislation asked for, including the proposed amendments, will not add one dollar to the funds of the board, but will simply make such funds available for our pressing needs which unless made by the Congress will have to be supplied, if they can be supplied at all, from private sources.

RELIEF GIVEN BY BILL NECESSARY TO MEET EMERGENCY.

Section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act (40 Stat., 618) authorizes and empowers the Federal Board for Vocational Education to receive gifts and donations and to use the same "to defray the expenses of providing and maintaining courses of vocational rehabilitation." The purpose of the act is to provide for the vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled men discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States, provided they are unable to enter gainful occupations successfully without training, and provided further that vocational training is feasible.

The act makes it the duty of the board: First, to decide whether or not discharged men can return to gainful occupations without vocational training and to determine whether or not vocational training is feasible; second, to provide facilities, instructors, and courses necessary to insure proper training; and, third, to make every endeavor to place disabled men in suitable or gainful occupations.

The special fund authorized by section 7 was manifestly intended to be used by the board in connection with the appropriations made by the act or those to be made hereafter to defray the expenses incident to the performance of these duties. On account of the language employed in the section a doubt existed, however, as to whether the special fund thereby created could be used for expenses incurred in ascertaining whether disabled men can return to gainful occupations without training, in determining feasibility of training, and in giving special relief in meritorious cases.

On October 15 a request was made of the Comptroller of the Treasury for a ruling as to whether the board could use this special fund "in connection with the appropriation for miscellaneous contingencies provided by section 8 in defraying such expenses as it, in its discretion, deems necessary to determine the status of disabled soldiers and sailors under the act, including the cost of lodging, subsistence, and other necessary expenses, and also, when properly safeguarded, for loaning money to disabled men in exceptional cases."

In response to this request the comptroller, in a letter of October 29, decided that: "The special fund is specifically for use in connection with providing and maintaining courses of vocational rehabilitation, and this must mean a course as such, whereas the expenses in question are such as may be classed as individual needs, largely subsistence, and the connection they have with a rehabilitation course is at best indirect. The fund can not be considered available for such expenses."

In his decision the comptroller went on to say that in his opinion none of the funds of the vocational rehabilitation act were available for the making of loans or gifts to disabled soldiers and sailors, even in emergency and meritorious cases.

This decision greatly cripples the Federal board in its work with the disabled soldiers and sailors and is rapidly bringing about a situation in which the Federal Government is placed in the light of being negligent of men who have risked everything on behalf of the country.

For reasons which seem to be unavoidable, many men are being discharged from military and naval service without adequate funds, sometimes without sufficient even to purchase civilian clothing. On the other hand, a considerable period sometimes necessarily elapses between the time of the man's discharge and the determination of his eligibility for training and the type of course best suited to his needs.

Digitized by Google

As the law is now worded, the board is forbidden to utilize either its regular funds or those in the so-called "gift" section for the relief of these men, and there are numerous instances of men honorably discharged from the service with disabilities who are the recipients of public charity instead of being supported as they should be before training as well as during training by the Federal Government.

The signing of the armistice and the increased speed with which both sound and disabled men are being discharged from the service makes the situation still more difficult and critical, and the board is faced by an emergency for which it asks the earliest possible relief from the Congress.

Until such relief is afforded, it is impossible for the board even to accept gifts which many organizations and individuals are anxious to make unconditionally for this work of relief, since under the above-quoted ruling of the comptroller such donations could not be used for this emergency purpose.

Proper care of disabled soldiers requires amendment to S. 5038 as follows:

PROPOSED AMENDMENT.

1. Strike out the word "is" after the word "eighteen" on page 1, line 5, and insert the words "together with the items of appropriation contained in section 8 of said act, are"

2. Strike out the period after the word "employment" in line 2 of page 2 and insert the words "and for supplementing any or all of the other items of appropriation made by said act."

Section 8 of the act appropriates a total of $2,000,000 as a continuing fund of which an item of $250,000 is appropriated for renting and remodeling buildings and for equipment, and an item of $545,000 for tuition for disabled persons pursuing courses in existing institutions. These two items together make a total of $795,000. The Federal board finds that the appropriations for these two items are more than sufficient to meet the possible expenditures for the fiscal year, and that additional moneys are needed to supplement the appropriations made for certain other items in the act. It is recommended, therefore, that the unused moneys for rent and equipment and for tuition be made available by the proposed amendments to S. 5038.

Much of the funds for rent, repair, and equipment and for tuition will not be expended during the current fiscal year, if ever, because:

1. The board has found it possible by placing disabled men for training in existing institutions to utilize more than $300,000,000 of facilities eagerly offered by public and private schools, shops, offices, and farms. In this way large expenditures of money for the rent of buildings and the equipment of schools have been avoided, thus leaving a fund of $250,000 practically unused unless it can be made available for other and more needed purposes.

2. The board expects to train disabled men as near to their former places of residence as possible. For many lines of work this will be done in the public schools and colleges of the State and often of the community in which the disabled man resided before he went to war. These schools in most cases refuse to charge the Government any tuition for the reeducation of the sons of their own city or State even where such a charge for a resident student could legally be made. Many private institutions, including the proprietors of shops and offices to which men are sent to take approved courses, take the same position. As a result a considerable part of the item of $545,000 for tuition will be unused unless it can be made available for other and more needed purposes.

The funds saved from rent, equipment, and tuition are badly needed to supplement other items of expenditure provided in the act, because:

1. The sudden close of the war brought an abandonment of the policy of holding men with disabilities for restricted service and led to the rapid discharge from the service of all men functionally restored. This greatly increased the number of disabled men for whom the board must provide during the current fiscal year and, therefore, makes it necessary to supplement all other items of expenditure, with the exception of rent, equipment, and tuition, as above described.

2. The board must by personal contact reach, with the offer of the training and placement which Congress has provided, every disabled man entitled to this service Under the original plan this was to be done in about 16 hospitals. The number of points has now been increased to over 100 Army and 24 Navy hospitals scattered over the whole United States. If the man is interviewed at the hospital before he is discharged, the work can be done for about $5 per man. If he must be reached in the field after he has left the hospital, the cost will be more than $100 per man. Assuming that 75,000 men are entitled to the benefits of the war-risk insurance act, contact at the hospital instead of field contact with each man would save the Government almost $6,000,000.

To make this saving the board must, for a short period of about six months, increase the number of its field workers under Civil Service regulations employed as vocational advisers in hospitals, and to do this the unexpended balances in the appropriations for rent, equipment, and tuition should be made available.

3. The amendment to the bill providing that unexpended balances in the appropriation for rent, equipment, and tuition be used for expenditures incurred in the investigation necessary to determine the eligibility of men for training and for expenditures necessary to the proper placement of men in employment is urged in order that there may be no question as to the duty and authority of the board to make expenditures for these purposes. Unless they are made some men will lack intelligent treatment, proper care, and the prompt action necessary to save the handicapped man from humiliation, hardship, or failure in the effort of the Government to rehabilitate him vocationally.

AN ACT Extending the use of the special fund for vocational education provided by section seven of the vocational rehabilitation act, approved June twenty-seventh, nineteen hundred and eighteen, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the special fund for vocational education, authorized by section seven of the vocational rehabilitation act, approved June twenty-seventh, nineteen hundred and eighteen, together with the items of appropriation made by said act, are hereby made available, in addition to the purposes therein prescribed, for such other expenses as in the discretion of the board is deemed necessary and proper for the payment of necessary travel, lodging, subsistence, and other expenses of disabled men while under investigation by the board to determine their eligibility for training under the act, and the purchase of supplies, equipment, and clothing for disabled men when ready to enter employment, and the traveling expenses of such men to place of employment and for supplementing any or all of the other items of appropriation made by said act.

Approved February 16, 1919.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I find on page 39 of H. R. 6176 (Union Calendar No. 15) that the sundry civil bill makes very serious limitations in connection with the appropriation to be used by the Federal Board for Vocational Education, for the rehabilitation of soldiers and sailors. These limitations would result in our losing probably half our staff at this most critical time, when our work is at its most urgent point.

May we have the privilege of appearing before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, or before yourself personally, to explain the situation and to urge a revision of the terms of the appropriation? Kindly make this appointment at your earliest convenience, and greatly oblige.

Yours, very sincerely,

JAMES P. MUNROE, Vice Chairman.

JUNE 23, 1919.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As requested over the telephone, I am addressing, for your earnest consideration and that of your committee, the following memorandum relative to the appropriation for vocational rehabilitation of disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines found on page 39 of Union Calendar No. 15, H. R. 6176, Report No. 48. While, as far as we can foresee, the appropriation of $4,000,000 therein made will not be sufficient, we accept this amount in the belief that it will carry the work well into the next calendar year, when, if necessary, we can again approach Congress with full confidence that they will not hesitate to provide all that is necessary for the rehabilitation of men who have been injured in the service of their country.

We desire to call to the attention of your committee, however, the fact that the limitations placed by the proviso in the last seven lines of this appropriation will result in a complete disorganization of the work of this board at a moment when it is approaching its highest load; when the Congress is about to place upon us, through the proposed amendment to section 2 of the vocational rehabilitation act, greatly enlarged responsibilities; and at a time when every minute's delay will greatly aggravate the unrest, and even bitterness, of disabled boys all over the country whose rehabilitation has already, through circumstances over which the Federal Board for Vocational Education has no control, been exasperatingly delayed.

Up to the 1st day of June, the district offices of the board had registered a total of 112,281 disabled men, had established personal contact with 88,300 of them; medical surveys had been made of 25,308 of these men; vocational surveys of 73,368. The number of additional undischarged men reported in Army and Navy hospitals in this country on the 1st day of June was approximately 59,000. This does not count the number in France nor the number not yet reached in the field in this country. Thirteen thousand and fifty-one men had been recommended for training by the district case boards and 7,500 men had been assisted in one way or another in the securing of employment. At the present time approximately 4,200 men are in training; about 6,000 cases are ready to be placed in training as soon as legislation before Congress, which passed the Senate unanimously last week, has become law.

So far as we can now foresee, the above figures represent less than half of the task of getting at every disabled soldier, sailor, and marine wounded or diseased in the service of the Government and providing either for his direct placement or for his training and placement. But the essential element in the remaining task is speed, and speed can be assured only by utilizing to the fullest limit, the services of men already familiar with the work, and trained to carry it forward effectively. Such a force we have succeeded in building up by taking men from permanent positions in which they were earning good salaries, and inducing them to take up this temporary service. This involved, in most cases, the leaving of their homes and the added costs and difficulties which that involves. Nevertheless, many of these men have been secured at salaries no greater than they were receiving in their permanent positions and of the others the increased salary, averaging not more than $300 a year, does not begin to cover the increased expenses under which these men find themselves. The work involved in dealing wisely and efficiently with disabled soldiers requires men of experience, of standing in the community, of ability to handle difficult situations, and of power to meet out in the field in our 14 district offices and our 7 subdistrict offices every sort of administrative problem. Cheap men can not do this work and were they to undertake it, disastrous results reflecting seriously upon the efficiency and good faith of the Federal Government in carrying out this important piece of work would follow.

Were this limiation in regard to the appropriation to stand, the board would lose nearly 200 members of its staff—men of ability and tried experience, and worse than that, would lose its 14 district officers who, even were their salaries not cut down would refuse to attempt to carry on the work in the States with the inefficient and untried men who would have to be brought in to take the place of those resigning as the result of this congressional action. Ninety-two members of the staff would be affected by the provision limiting the number to be employed in excess of $3,000 to 20, and 193 would be affected by the provision limiting the number to be employed between $2,500 and $3,000 to 30, and these men so affected are the framework of our organization, the very bone and sinew of the vocational rehabilitation Service. With these gone, the work would be in chaos for six months, disabled boys to the number of tens of thousands would be left uncared for, and the results would be in every way disastrous.

Under this proposed limitation it would be impossible to retain these essential men, because all of them have permanent positions at higher salaries than those permitted under this limitation would provide, and it would be out of reason to expect such men to keep a temporary position at a lower compensation than they could elsewhere get. Moreover, their places can not be filled because, in the first place, no untried man can fill the place of one who has had months of experience in a difficult work of this kind, and in the second place, because competent men can not be induced to take up this temporary, high-grade work at the salaries imposed by the suggested limitation.

In view of the above, it is respectfully suggested that in the section referring to vocational rehabilitation the words in the last seven lines following the word "Provided" be stricken out, and that the following words be substituted: "That not more than one person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation in excess of $5,000 per annum, and that not more than three persons shall be employed at rates of compensation in excess of $4,000 each per annum."

It seems to us that this simple change would safeguard, as they should be protected, the Federal funds, without throwing into hopeless chaos the work for diasbled soldiers, sailors, and marines which it is clear that the Congress and the people of the United States desire to be promptly and efficiently performed.

Very respectfully, yours,

JAMES P. MUNROE, Vice Chairman.

EXHIBIT T.

POSSIBLE AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATION.

SEPTEMBER 20, 1918.

As arranged at staff conference held on Monday evening, September 16, Messrs Munroe and Kidner saw Mr. Love, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, on September 17, and discussed very generally some of the difficulties being experienced because of the delay in discovering a man's compensation status. Mr. Love expressed himself as willing to join in asking for an amendment to the act, but suggested the possibility of solving the present difficulties by adjustments of procedure. He asked for a further conference in which some officials of the War Risk Insurance Bureau would participate.

On September 19 Mr. Love notified Mr. Munroe that he was called out of town, but wished us to discuss possible schemes with Mr. Houlihan. Messrs. Munroe, Kidner, and Maddrill conferred with Mr. Houlihan and Col. Banks on the following points:

1. Acceptance by War Risk Insurance Bureau of the findings of the last medical board, as recorded in the surgeon's certificate of discharge as a basis for award of compensation.

Mr. Houlihan stated that the bureau was quite willing to use this certificate and would require no further medical examination, but the bureau had not been able to obtain this certificate, or a copy of it. On being informed that the vocational advisors of the board were given access to this certificate and allowed to make a copy of it for our confidential use, Mr. Houlihan suggested that our advisors make an additional copy and forward to the War Risk Insurance Bureau, together with the man's application for compensation.

It was agreed that this would expedite matters considerably, but that it was a duty which should be carried out by the hospital authorities, rather than by the Federal board. Also, it would not be of any avail in the case of naval hospitals, from which men are discharged immediately after a medical survey board has decided that no further treatment is indicated. Also, in the case of men in hospitals in the far West, some considerable time must elapse before the decision of the bureau could be received, even if there were no complications in the case.

2. The following alternative plans involving changes in legislation was discussed at length, and it was agreed that it would prevent any hiatus between the discharge of a man and the commencement of his training course, except that in some cases a man may desire a short leave to visit his friends immediately after his discharge:

(a) The Federal board to decide upon the evidence of the surgeon's certificate of discharge, and by other examinations if it deemed necessary, whether or not a man needed reeducation; that is, was unable to follow his former occupation efficiently. If the Federal board decided that a man was entitled to reeducation on this ground, the man's discharge would be carried out as soon as the Federal board notified the hospital authorities.

(b) The Federal board would establish a scale of pay and allowances for the man and his dependents, if any, and he would be discharged to the Federal board which would place him on its pay list from the date of his discharge, or at the date of commencing his course.

NOTE.—The allotments to a man's dependents payable by the Army paymaster and his own pay cease on a man's discharge.

(c) The War Risk Insurance Bureau would cease its payments to the man and to his dependents at the date of his discharge. It would consider the case upon the evidence of the surgeon's certificate of discharge and make its award of compensation in due course. The bureau would either (1) notify the Federal board of its award and the

Digitized by Google

Federal board would reduce its payments to the amount of monthly compensation awarded the man, or (2) the board would continue the payments in full and be reimbursed by the War Risk Insurance Bureau to the amount payable under its award.

It is possible that under this plan a few men may be adjudged as requiring vocational reeducation who would be found not to be entitled to compensation; but not in large numbers. The surgeon's certificate of discharge gives not only the cause and extent (in fractions) of the disability, but also states whether or not it was incurred "in line of duty," which are the basic facts on which both the Federal board and the bureau would make their decisions.

EXTRACTS FROM SOLDIERS' LETTERS RECEIVED PRIOR TO CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATION STATING THEIR SATISFACTION WITH THE TRAINING THEY ARE RECEIVING.

From Lonnie J. Highsmith, 174 Hickory Street, Athens, Ga., February 25, 1920: "We are thankful that our Government has not left us as it did the veterans of bygone-days (not that we are better than they, for we are not so good), but that our Government has grown and developed and waxed rich and is better able to do this work now than it was after other wars. All that I ask from the Government that I volunteered to fight for, is to let me finish the course of studies that I am working on and I think I will be in a position to make the necessaries to get the wherewith to maintain life."

From Alford St. Germaine, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 23, 1919: "I think by going under hard studies and using common sense, soldiers like myself will find better living in the future, and this is my aim. Here's hoping that our fellow fighters will do likewise, and I am sure they will be contented with their studies and work as well as opportunities offered to them by our Government."

From Thomas M. Hildreth, Sacramento, Calif., May 14, 1919: "For the benefit of the boys who are not taking advantage of the training the Federal Board for Vocational Education offers, I wish to say that they are missing one of the best opportunities of their lives."

Thomas C. Brannan, Berwyn, Md., September 30, 1919: "The efforts and results of the Federal board certainly are deeply appreciated, and since Uncle Sam has been so kind and considerate of us in giving us the opportunities which we are now so fortunate to have, we mean to do our best and make a success or die in the attempt to succeed, and we know what we will have to do in order to pull through on top."

From Cecil Meyer, University Station, Gainesville, Fla., December 10, 1919: "I have been in training under the Federal board since May 28, this year, and I like it fine, and in fact this is the opportunity that I have looked for throughout life."

From E. F. Powers, San Francisco, Calif., May 26, 1919: "I take pleasure in telling you that I have completed my course in training for a marine engineer and was most certainly surprised that I could do so in so short a period. I found that by living as temperate a life as possible and utilizing every opportunity I was able to learn as much from the United States Shipping Board School as the average university graduate and able to pass an examination for third assistant engineer unlimited. I have been able to do what I thought would be impossible. The least pay for a licensed third assistant engineer is $120 a month and found. For a man that has to work technical knowledge is no good without the practical knowledge, therefore I can do better by going to work now."

From A. D. Strader, West Virginia University, November 12, 1919: "I highly value the training that has been granted me by the Government. I thank you all very much. Now the Government is paying us back and wishes us to make good. It is up to us to make good, not only for ourselves, but to help so that the Government will lead all other nations in the future as it has in the past."

From Mrs. Grace E. Terry, 2606 West Main Street, Richmond, Va., December 8, 1919: "I am thankful to say that I am being trained for millinery work, at which I think I can make a living at home and not be a dependent. Mrs. Reed, my counselor, seems to be very much interested in me, which I appreciate."

From John Henry Atherson, Salome, Ky., October 30, 1919: "Your letter received notifying me of approval of training in a course of agriculture. This is a splendid opportunity and generous offer, and I would be very foolish and ungrateful if I failed to meet it with my best efforts."

From Robert W. Cooper, Tulane Receiving School, New Orleans, La., August 7, 1919: "Inclosed I wish to say my training has been very satisfactory, my environment very agreeable, and, lastly, I will prove the good will of those connected with district No. 6, while making good in district No. 8. The academic help I have received has been and will be invaluable to my future progress, and especially with the help given me in English and arithmetic. It has shaken my head from the neck up, tending to make me realize that more than one recess of my brain has remained dormant for years."

From Raymond Lasance, 129 West Fourteenth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 23, 1919: "I desire to express my appreciation to the Federal board for the training I am receiving. By its workings I will be able to complete my education and obtain for myself in the commercial world a position to which I might never have attained before my disability."

From Ralph Schefer, 3858 Millsbrae Avenue, Hyde Park, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 23, 1919: "I took up training under the direction of the Federal Board for Vocational Education at Miller's School of Business. I am well satisfied and sure that I will be able to earn a great deal more money than I previously did before I enlisted."

From R. M. Prather, M. D., New Orleans, La.: "I want to say that, without exaggeration, I think the Federal Board for Vocational Education is doing more for the discharged soldier than is generally known to the public. I have benefited greatly, both in health and knowledge, since I started under your supervision, and I expect to return from New York about the 1st of January as a specialist in diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat."

From Lawrence Packwood, Chicago Business College, December 22, 1919: "I am preparing myself not to be a burden on the taxpayer, but to be a credit to my country and uphold its Constitution, and recognize that this country keeps its promises to its service men."

From Carl F. Minion, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 22, 1919: "I have now been in this school, Ohio Mechanics Institute, three months, and find that it is helping me greatly, and feel that after I am through school I will be in better shape, as far as earning power is concerned, than before I entered the service. It is surprising to me to see the interest every man is taking in his work."

From Thomas M. Hildreth, Sacramento, Calif., May 14, 1919: "I am attending Heald's Business College in this city. For the benefit of the boys who are not taking advantage of the training the Federal board offers, I wish to say that they are missing the best opportunity of their lives."

From John B. Gardner, Young Men's Christian Association, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 23, 1919: "I am very interested in my course, and there is no doubt that I will be able to go out in the business world and double my earning capacity after completing my course under the direction of the Federal board."

From Herbert W. Will, 1132 Park Avenue, Newport, Ky., April 23, 1919: "I want to express to you my appreciation of all that your board has done for me. I am more than satisfied with the treatment accorded me by you and the members of the district No. 7 office."

From Carl F. Minion, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 22, 1919: "It is surprising to me to see the interest every man is taking in his work. They realize it is expected of them and want to make good, and I know they will have proper support."

From Thomas F. Hendrick, captain, Baltimore, Md., October 9, 1919: " It is my belief that criticism directed toward the Federal board was largely due to the fact that the men were more anxious to get home than to enter training. I am well satisfied with my avocation, and place my stamp of approval on all actions of the Federal board that have come under my observations."

From Douglas D. Stone, 1730 La Loma Avenue, Berkeley, Calif., January 8, 1920: "I certainly appreciate the wonderful opportunity offered me through the Federal board, and the best way I can show my appreciation is by the report here made on my studies. Prof. Langille congratulated me on my work. I hope this report will be perfectly satisfactory to the board."

From W. B. Whidden, University Station, Gainesville, Fla.: "The Federal Board for Vocational Education is sending me to school at the University of Florida. I have been here one month and five days. I am learning fast. I am taking a course in agriculture. I want to do all I can to learn as much as possible so that when school is out and I get through with my studies, I can get a job. I like the school fine, and I think it is a good thing for me and am going to do my best to accomplish something."

From Roan J. Turner, University Station, Gainesville, Fla.: "The Federal Board gave me an opportunity to take a special training with them that I might educate myself so that I might be able to earn a living. I decided to specialize in dairying. After I have completed my training I want to manage dairying or a dairying farm; in fact, I hope to be able to manage anything in the line of agriculture."

From Levi Marshall Nagle, University Station, Gainesville, Fla., November 26, 1919: "The Government sent me to the University of Florida to attend the Agricultural College here to take a course in agriculture. They are paying my tuition and provide any textbooks for me, as well as give me $80 a month, or $40 every two weeks, while I am here. I think the course is a wonderful opportunity. I know that, with the knowledge I had when I came here, I could not in my condition make a livelihood in farming, but it is a wonderfully instructive course which I have taken up here and I am firmly convinced that, when the course is completed, that the knowledge gained will be of more worth to me than anything else which I know of."

From J. C. Rathburn, 106 West Sixty-third Street, New York City, February 9, 1920: "I do not care for placement. Might mention the course is completed. Did me a numerous amount of benefit and wish to thank the New York board for its appreciated service to me."

From L. E. Cox, 521 Lumkin Street, Athens, Ga., March 7, 1920: "I am truly grateful for what the Federal board is doing for me, and I am trying to get all I can out of this course. This training will help us to overcome our handicaps by making of us efficient managers. I think the Government's plan for training the disabled soldier is proving a success and is going to enable us to carry on."

From J. Perlmutt, 370 South Lumkin Street, Athens, Ga.: "Not only am I getting a thorough training in the elementary principles of education but also training in mechanical pursuits and agricultural training. My course is keeping me in the open air a great deal and thus benefiting me in a healthful way. This training is priceless to me and its value can not be estimated in money."

From Aylett D. Clark, 513 West Cumberland Street, Knoxville, Tenn., February 26, 1920: "I entered the offices of the Federal board feeling hostile to the world at large and the Federal board in particular. On leaving your offices I found that I had undergone some great change. I can not explain it other than renewed faith in my fellowmen."

From Edward Yake, to Senator John Walter Smith, December 10, 1919: "September 1, 1919, the Federal Board for Vocational Education took hold of me. They got me a job, paid me $115 per month every month, and now I am making $150 per month. The best friend the enlisted man has in the world is the Red Cross and the Federal board. Speak up, men, tell our dear beloved friend, John Walter Smith, what the dear old Federal board has meant to you."

From Wallace F. Mustin, 934 North Calvert Street, Baltimore, Md., February 25, 1920: "I wish to let you know how nicely I am getting along at the Baltimore College of Dental Surgery, while in the meantime it is my desire to show the Federal board my appreciation for what it is doing for me. My wife and myself have planned our living expenses to correspond with the monthly salary which we receive from the Federal board. We have planned to live on it by economizing, but nothing to waste, which, of course, is expected. In the meantime we are working hard and planning forward to a bright future. I wish the Federal Board for Vocational Education the best of luck and hope to be with it to the end of my college career."

From Winand Pyle, M. D., 3538 York Road, Baltimore, Md.: "My course at Johns Hopkins is nearing completion and I shall soon apply for transportation home. The course has been very profitable and extremely interesting. I am sure its value to me far exceeds the money expended for it. I wish to thank you and your staff for your kindness to me. I wish you all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year."

From Ignace Miletz, Chicago Business College, Chicago, Ill., February 9, 1920: "I am now attending the Chicago Business College, taking a business course which will enable me to earn my living in the future. Salesmanship especially appeals to me, and I hope to become a good salesman. I wish to thank the people through the Federal board for the opportunity given us boys."

From S. A. Sandberg, Chicago Business College, Chicago, Ill., February 9, 1920: "I intend to take a position as salesman and I am sure my training will help me accomplish my purpose. I want to assure you of my appreciation of the Federal board's activities in behalf of myself and other injured buddies."

From Angelus Chure, Chicago Business College, Chicago, Ill., February 9, 1920: "Speaking several languages, I have taken this commercial course, and especially salesmanship, and prepare myself for the foreign commerce, where are found the biggest possibilities of to-day."

From Louis Golden, Chicago Business College, Chicago, Ill., February 10, 1920: "I am satisfied that I have made considerable progress, and hope to do even better hereafter. My object is to become a successful salesman or advertising man. I have unlimited confidence in my abilities and I do not mean to be a burden to the Government. It is my aim to overcome my handicap and win success."

From John G. Moore, Chicago Business College, Chicago, Ill., February 9, 1920: "I wish to say my future welfare looks very good, as this school is giving me the necessary training for an occupation that will always give me an opportunity to make a living. The training I am receiving will help me in securing a chance to command a salary that will satisfy my needs. I hope to be a credit to the vocational board and to prove myself worthy of trust."

The following communications, among many others, were received after the congressional investigation of the board's activities commenced from Carl Schuman, L. B. Lambert, Henry Todd, Elmer E. Paine, and V. R. Bartlett, Washington, D. C., March 9, 1920: "To whom it may concern: We have found the vocational officers of district No. 4 always courteous and considerate. We have been fairly treated as regards to the training and the remuneration which was at the hands of the Government. Therefore, in the face of the criticism to which the board is at present subjected, we wish to express our hearty appreciation and thanks to the Federal board for its just and kind treatment of us."

From Arthur F. Johnson and 81 other students at Heffley Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y., March 25, 1920: "We, students under the Federal Board for Vocational Education, believe that the Federal Board for Vocational Education is very efficient in its required duties, under the present conditions, and regret that it should at this time be a target of public criticism and contempt."

In answer to above I wish to state I am not at present in any physical condition to study, due to my stomach and nervous condition. I had hoped some time ago to be improved enough to start, but can only state that I am doing all I can to get in a physical condition to take the school matter up.

The Government doctor at Coldwater, Mich., is doctoring me at present, but I can not see as his medicine has helped me any as yet. As soon as I am able I shall let you know.

Your kind letter of a recent date at hand. Will say my present conditions as to health are such as would not conflict to my taking up a vocational course. As to the training that has been approved for me, I have decided not to take, as my plans, which I put in for such a course, did not materialize as expected. In the near future, if I should decide to take up any particular training, will write for information on same.

Thanking you for your interest taken in same, I remain,

CHAS. O. DENTAL.

The superior chapter of the Red Cross informs me that you have written them in reference to my vocational training, asking that I write you whether or not I wish to take advantage of same at this time.

I am now employed at one of the local coal docks, learning to run an electrical car-loader. I have promised them that I would stay with them, and feel that I should keep my promise to them, so would not care to take the course in vocational training at this time. I presume that I can do so later on if I should so desire. Kindly advise me.

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Friday, April 30, 1920.

The committee met at 10 o'clock a. m., Hon. Horace M. Towner (acting chairman) presiding.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Munroe, you may take the stand.

TESTIMONY OF MR. JAMES P. MUNROE, VICE CHAIRMAN FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION—Resumed.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Munroe, what is your judgment as to the present organization of the Vocational Board? Does it meet with your unreserved approval?

Mr. MUNROE. You mean the general make-up of the board?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; I think it is an admirable arrangement.

Mr. TOWNER. You then approve entirely of the membership on the board of the Cabinet officers?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; it has been a very useful part of the board organization.

Mr. TOWNER. In what way are they useful?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course the daily work of the board is carried on by the standing committee made up of the three appointed members and the Commissioner of Education, and then at least once a month, and sometimes oftener, the full board meets with the Cabinet officers present, and then all questions of general policy are put up to the whole board and receive the sanction or the dissent, as the case may be, of the Cabinet members.

Mr. TOWNER. They act, very largely, in an advisory capacity?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Do you say that as often as once a month you have a full meeting of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Do the members of the Cabinet seem to take any particular interest in the activities of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. A very great interest. Of course, especially in the war period, they had very many other important duties to attend to, but, personally, I have been surprised that they have been able and have been willing to keep such close touch upon the work of the Federal board as they have.

Mr. TOWNER. Your idea then is that so far as the personnel of the board is concerned, it is an advangtage distinctly to have Cabinet officers members of the board?

4661—20—VOL 2——8

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. A very great advantage; yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. What do you say to the proposition that is suggested of increasing the active membership of the board, perhaps by one or possibly by two new members, one at least of whom should be a service man.

Mr. MUNROE. Of course if such a man were put on, it would be only for the comparatively temporary purpose of this rehabilitation work, because such a man would have no special interest in or qualifitions for the general work of the board, which deals with education pure and simple.

Mr. TOWNER. Your idea then would be that it would be unnecessary and of no particular advantage.

Mr. MUNROE. I can not see any special advantage in it, because, as I pointed out yesterday, a large proportion of our staff are ex-service men. They certainly ought to be able to take care of the interests of the soldiers.

Mr. TOWNER. How are the activities carried on with regard to the various duties of the board, the vocational work, and the rehabilitation work, and the other activities of the board? How is the work divided?

Mr. MUNROE. As far as the board itself is concerned, it usually at its monthly meetings gives one day to the activities of vocational education and another day to those of vocational rehabilitation. Of course, the members who are on the job all the time, like myself, give attention to these things as occasion requires. As to the staff, we have, as you doubtless know, a chief of the vocational education division and a chief of vocational rehabilitation division, and their staffs are kept absolutely separate, the only interchange of duties being, such as I pointed out yesterday, the disbursing, auditing, and so on, which are common to both branches.

Mr. TOWNER. Then so far as the board taking part in the administrative functions of the board, it is only of a supervisory character; in other words, there is no member of the board who is at the head of the rehabilitation service.

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Your director is at the head?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. We have no director.

Mr. TOWNER. You have a director who is at the head of the vocational service under the other acts and activities of the board.

Mr. MUNROE. We have the two chiefs, each directly responsible to the board.

Mr. TOWNER. For instance, your rehabilitation chief —what is the name of the director?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin.

Mr. TOWNER. And what is his name?

Mr. MUNROE. Uel W. Lamkin.

Mr. TOWNER. How long has Mr. Lamkin been in the service?

Mr. MUNROE. I can not remember the date. Mr. Lambkin can perhaps tell us.

Mr. LAMKIN. January, 1919.

Mr. MUNROE. In January, 1919, Mr. Lamkin was put in charge of the regional office, with its headquarters at St. Louis, and then on September 15 he was made chief of the whole division.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. To what extent and in what manner has Mr. Lamkin charge of this rehabilitation work?

Mr. MUNROE. To the extent that any responsible chief in a Government department has his responsibilities.

Mr. TOWNER. Is he the final arbiter on questions that arise from the various regions?

Mr. MUNROE. On questions of administration. Of course, questions of policy have to be put up to the standing committee of the board.

Mr. TOWNER. Questions of policy are so often mingled with a proposition of administration that it is very hard to separate them, is it not?

Mr. MUNROE. Well, I think that both Mr. Lamkin, the chief of the rehabilitation division, and Mr. Hawkins, the Chief of the vocational education division, lean on the side—if there is any question as to whether it is administrative or a question of general policy—lean on the side of putting it up to the standing committee.

Mr. TOWNER. And that means the active membership of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. In other words, they refer all important questions that arise to the membership of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; and then after we have laid down a general policy covering that point, of course, they are free to act under that general vote.

Mr. TOWNER. Again, I would like to have you state whether there can be any distinction between a question of general policy and a question arising under an administrative act that really involves a question of policy. Are such questions not continually arising?

Mr. MUNROE. The conditions are rather peculiar, I think, with our board from the fact that the work has been so tremendous and the necessity of haste has been so great, that the standing committee has had to be on the job practically all the time and doubtless it has taken part in the administration, when, under normal conditions, it would not have done so.

Mr. TOWNER. Does the board interfere with the activities of the directors in carrying on the work, of its own motion?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not quite get your point there?

Mr. TOWNER. The point is this: The committee would like to know just how far the authority of the director extends and how far he can be held personally responsible for the activities of the board. You say he is the administrative head. We grant that, but if the administrative head is being continually interfered with in the performance of his duty then he is only nominally the head. The committee would like to know whether he is actually the head of the department or not.

Mr. MUNROE. I think Mr. Lamkin could answer that question better than I could. So far as we are aware, after laying down general policies, we try to give him a free hand in the administration of those policies.

Mr. TOWNER. The impression has been created by the testimony here that the board themselves are continually interfering with the administration of the work and continually changing their policies; what have you to say about that?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. There have been changes in policy made necessary by the very rapid changing of conditions under which the work has been carried on. As I pointed out in my testimony last night, we have had to overcome one obstacle after another, and as each of those obstacles was overcome, it of course necessitated a somewhat greater or less change in general policies; and, of course, the revised legislation of last July necessitated very drastic changes in policy.

Mr. TOWNER. If a person is the head of an administrative department or bureau, he ought to be responsible for those who are his subordinates, ought he not, Mr. Munroe?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Then he ought to have the appointive power, ought he not? Has Mr. Lamkin that power?

Mr. MUNROE. So far as it is possible under Government regulations. As I understand it, all staff appointments have to come before the board for confirmation. They are made on his recommendation, of course.

Mr. TOWNER. Well, are they made on his recommendation?

Mr. MUNROE. Oh, yes.

Mr. TOWNER. To what extent does the board interfere in the appointment of the personnel of these various divisions or regional offices?

Mr. MUNROE. Not at all, so far as I am aware.

Mr. TOWNER. When a vacancy occurs, does Mr. Lamkin go about making the appointment without receiving the authority of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. He makes the recommendation. He finds the person and makes the recommendation, and the formal appointment, of course, is made by the board.

Mr. TOWNER. Then he is not the head and chief of the bureau if he has not the power of appointment. He is not the head of the rehabilitation department if he has not that power, is he?

Mr. MUNROE. That is a new point of view to me, Mr. Chairman. I should suppose that all appointments, all staff appointments, had to be conferred, made actual, by a vote of the whole board on the recommendation of the chief. Of course, all clerical appointments are made by the district officers themselves.

Mr. TOWNER. Then you have a line of distinction between what you call staff appointments and clerical appointments?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Will you please state what that is?

Mr. MUNROE. The clerical appointments includes stenographers, clerks, charwomen, and people of that sort, anything below the line of stenographer and including the stenographer.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, all of the regional chiefs and all their principal subordinates, men engaged in placement work and in the determination of the degree of disability and the determination of where the training shall be taken, and all those matters, are they directly put up to the board to pass upon?

Mr. MUNROE. Every month we pass on the full list of appointments.

Mr. TOWNER. Why do you not leave that with the head of the department?

Mr. MUNROE. Well, as I say, Mr. Chairman, I had supposed up to this time that it was a requirement of Government procedure that they should be acted on by the full board. I may be mistaken in that.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. What is the ground for that idea? This is not a criticism——

Mr. MUNROE. No.

Mr. TOWNER. We are just trying to find out the facts regarding it, Mr. Munroe.

Mr. MUNROE. As I say, the question has never been brought to me before. I took it as a matter of course that we had to pass on all staff appointments. We, of course, in the very beginning laid out a chart showing the organization, and we act under that original chart with such modifications as the changes in conditions necessitate.

Mr. TOWNER. Then, so far as the head of the rehabilitation work is concerned, the director, he can not make directly any appointments at all. He has to submit them all to the board and they have to be acted upon by the board??

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. As a matter of fact, however, I can not remember of any change being made by the board. They accept his recommendations.

Mr. TOWNER. The policy was adopted in the first instance, as I understand it, of having the board pass upon the determination of whether or not the service man should be entitled to training at all.

Mr. MUNROE. You mean the full board?

Mr. TOWNER. Well, I do not know about the full board. I mean at least the department here in Washington.

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, in the beginning, until the districts had had experience and until it was felt proper for them to stand alone, Washington had to keep a supervisory attitude; but after the legislation of last July, as soon thereafter as the personnel was reorganized as required by the salary limitations, a general order was sent out giving each district full authority to put all amputation cases, without any question at all, and to put all other cases into training except those requiring or likely to require more than two years or involving a tuition fee of more than $500 a year.

Mr. TOWNER. Has that policy been adopted ever since July?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. All the time we are giving more power and authority to the district officers.

Mr. TOWNER. Some of the testimony before us would lead us to believe that the board was still, down to a very late date, reserving to itself the determination of that question, and that it had resulted in great delays.

Mr. MUNROE. That was either mistaken testimony or else was testimony relating to the period before July 11, 1919, when of course all matters had to be referred to Washington because no action in the matter of putting a man into training could be taken until previous action had been had by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. We could not give freedom to the districts in those days.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, until the passage of the law in July, by which the board was given power to determine upon the right to training of any service man, your position and the position of the board is that all the delay occurred by reason of the fact that you could not get action from the War Risk Insurance Bureau?

Mr. MUNROE. That was the main cause of delay; yes, sir.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. You stated on your examination yesterday that 39,000 men were now in training, and, in a general way, can you give the committee any idea of what form this training is taking and where the training is being given.

Mr. MUNROE. I have a memorandum here. On February 28—at that time the total figure was 28,000—there were in prevocational training; that is, training for illiterates or non-English-speaking foreigners, 4,294. The total in trade and industrial training was 8,950, and that includes the electrical trade, 1,100. (I will just read round figures.) Mechanical trades, 3,600; retail trades, 380; printing trades, 220; garment and leather trades, 495; railway, 25; manufacturing, including glass blowing, dye making, paper manufacturing, silver plating, and so on, 68; crafts, including horology, jewelry making, etc., 412; advertising trades, 460; woodworking and wood-finishing trades, 353; food preparation, 76; textiles, 157; repair work, including typewriter repairing, sewing-machine repairing, and so on, 73; miscellaneous trades, including barbering, motion-picture operating, drafting, upholstering, and so on, 1,224; business and commercial training, 7,253. That is divided up into various forms. General farming, 3,053; and in the professions, 3,978, including practically all the professions. As to places in which they are being trained, as I remember it, between 5,000 and 6,000 of the men are in placement training; that is, they are in actual industries being trained on the job under supervision, and the remainder of the men are in schools, colleges, or in what we call receiving stations which are mainly for illiterates and non-English-speaking men where they give half a day in this special school under direct supervision to training in the English branches, and the other half day to trying them out on various trades and crafts which are carried on in the school, so as to get an idea as to their best line of industrial activity

Mr. TOWNER. That would mean, then, that about one-third are being trained in actual work.

Mr. MUNROE. Approximately that number; yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Do you think that proportion would hold good for the 39,000?

Mr. MUNROE. Would you think that proportion of about one-third in actual placement training would hold, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. LAMKIN. No.

Mr. MUNROE. Not so large a figure as that?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir.

Mr. MUNROE. About 20 per cent. My colleague (Mr. Holder) reminds me that in a great many cases where these boys are being trained in a school or a college, they will then be given a subsequent period of placement training on the job so as to make certain that they will make good in it.

Mr. TOWNER. I understood that. I wanted to get at how many men were being trained or received the training actually in factories where the work was being carried on.

Mr. MUNROE. Between 20 and 25 per cent, I should say.

Mr. TOWNER. Can you give us an idea of how many of those men are receiving part wages?

Mr. MUNROE. Very few.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. Very few of them? Do you have complaints from the factories where these men are at work regarding the men or is there general satisfaction with regard to the men?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, as there would be in any such large number of men, there are individual cases of complaint and dissatisfaction, but, as a rule, the attitude of the employers, where men are in placement training and the attitude of the teachers in the schools and colleges is one of unusual satisfaction with the work that these boys are doing.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, what is the attitude of the men themselves who are engaged in this work?

Mr. MUNROE. With a few exceptions which, of course, one would find in a large body of that kind, they are eminently satisfied with the work they are doing.

Mr. TOWNER. What can you say regarding the prospects of these men after they have completed this practical season of training? Are they likely to find places where they can receive adequate remuneration from the end of this training period?

Mr. MUNROE. Most of these cases, I believe, are going to receive larger wages than they did before they were disabled.

Mr. TOWNER. Will there be any difficulty in their finding places?

Mr. MUNROE. Not if the present industrial conditions continue. Of course, a serious panic would alter the situation very materially.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, regarding these men who are attending the schools—most of the men are attending technical schools, are they?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; I presume the majority of the schools would be called technical schools.

Mr. TOWNER. Just explain what you mean by that?

Mr. MUNROE. Well, it is a rather difficult thing to explain because almost every college now has a large technical department, so that there are a good many boys in colleges who are really taking the technical side of that work; but, of course, as this training is for the purpose of making these men industrially efficient, to put them on their feet industrially, naturally the majority of the work is along industrial lines.

Mr. TOWNER. Then, most of them are attending technical schools, if they are in a general university or college that has a technic department and they are in that technical department, of course they are in a technical school.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. That is correct, is it? Most of them who are attending the colleges or schools of any kind are engaged in technical work?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. What proportion of these men are taking a business training or training for clerical positions, something that might not be considered as directly a trade industry?

Mr. MUNROE. Well, of course, I included those in using the word technical. I presume you mean the business and commercial courses.

Mr. TOWNER. You now understand my question and I would like to know what proportion there are of those men, for instance, who are preparing to be typewriters and stenographers and to go into the banks and take clerical positions of all kinds. What proportion of the men are engaged in preparation for that class of work?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. This statement is as of February 28, when the total number of men in training was practically 27,000. The number at that time in business and commercial training was 7,253, and of that the number training for administrative positions was 3,716. That includes positions for general advertising, business administration, banking and finance, real estate, insurance, foreign trade, factory management, auctioneering, salesmanship, and so on. The number training for subordinate positions in commercial lines at that time was 3,234, including bookkeeping, shorthand and typewriting, secretarial work, clerical work, postal clerk, civil service preparatory, and a general commercial course without specification, 2,500 of them.

Mr. TOWNER. How are that class of men getting along with their work?

Mr. MUNROE. Very well. They are being trained very largely in the special schools of business, and I have talked with a number of the heads of such schools and they express great satisfaction with the progress the men are making.

Mr. TOWNER. As I understood you yesterday, only about 10 per cent of those who actually enter training desert or stop it.

Mr. MUNROE. Less than that. The percentage is between 8 and 9 per cent.

Mr. TOWNER. Less than 10 per cent.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. In a general way, what would you say were the principal causes of these men giving up their training?

Mr. MUNROE. More than 50 per cent of them give up because of the return of their disability and they hope, of course, to go back into the work when they are well again. As I recollect it, perhaps, 20 per cent of the 8 or 9 per cent give up because they think it is not worth while, and the balance give up because they secure some immediate position and think it is not worth while to finish their training.

Mr. TOWNER. You stated, I believe, yesterday that 20,000 of these men who were entitled to training were not in training.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; about that number.

Mr. TOWNER. Did you mean by that the cases of those men had been passed upon and that they had been decided to be entitled to training?

Mr. MUNROE. And the men have been notified of the course that is open for them, and in many cases they have been sent Government transportation to carry them where the school or place of training was at some distance from their home.

Mr. TOWNER. After you have notified them, do you receive word from them as to the reason why they do not go on with their training?

Mr. MUNROE. If we do not from the first letter, we send a second letter, and if we get no reply to that, we send a third, and in most cases if the man is within any reasonable distance, we send somebody to look him up, and of course in all this work we have the active cooperation of the American Legion Posts, of the Home Service Sections of the American Red Cross, and of various other national and local agencies.

Mr. TOWNER. I was not particularly asking the board to exonerate itself for neglect but what I wanted to know was the reason or cause of these men not being in training where they were entitled to it.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. I might have read yesterday, if I had not tired the committee by reading so many letters, extracts from a number of letters giving the reasons why the men did not take the training. As I remember it, in a good many cases their conditions at home were such that they did not feel it proper for them to leave. I remember one case where a man had an aged father and he felt he ought to stay with him. In another case the man owned quite a little farm, and while he would have liked to take the training, he felt his duty was to carry on that farm; of course, in some instances they simply write that they are not interested in training; and under the present industrial conditions, it is so easy to get a good paying job, that men do not think it is worth while to go through the trouble of training.

Mr. TOWNER. What is your idea of the proportion of these 20,000 men taking the training at some future time?

Mr. MUNROE. It would depend very much on the industrial situation. If there should be a very serious panic and scarcity of opportunity for paying positions, I think these men would come in in very great numbers, but should the present scarcity of labor and the demand and high wages continue—this is merely a guess—I should doubt if we get more than 50 per cent of that number, despite all our efforts to get hold of them, and as I said yesterday——

Mr. TOWNER (interposing). Fifty per cent would be a pretty large expectation, would it not?

Mr. MUNROE. Well, I hope we shall be able to induce that number to take the training.

Mr. TOWNER. Then you are still making efforts, even after sending the third letter?

Mr. MUNROE. As I explained yesterday, we are starting out in the New York district and in some of the others, and we propose to carry it through all the districts except where the distances are so great as to make it practically impossible. We are sending word to all these men not yet in training to present themselves at the nearest large center to their homes, and we get at them, also, besides writing them a letter, through the local Red Cross and the American Legion and so on; and to that district we send a flying squad from the nearest district office to take up the cases not only of those men who have been assigned to training and have not yet gone into it, but also the other cases that have been brought to our attention in which the training has not yet been determined, so as to clean up both those groups as far as possible in each of those localities.

Mr. TOWNER. In case you have a man who is taking training for some particular vocation, and he finds out that his physical condition is such by reason of his disability that he can not carry on that training, and again returns to you for training in some vocation that he could carry on owing to his condition, I understood you to say yesterday that you could not give him the training.

Mr. MUNROE. You misunderstood me, sir, because we are doing that in hundreds, if not thousands, of cases.

Mr. TOWNER. I was wondering about that.

Mr. MUNROE. You must have misunderstood me, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. I should think that would not be an infrequent case.

Mr. MUNROE. It is a very frequent case, and a good share of the time of the local case boards is taken up in the consideration of such cases.

Mr. TOWNER. I would like to have you explain to the committee the relation between the hospital cases and your work. For instance, take the case where a man has entered into training with you and his wound breaks out afresh, or tubercular indications are shown, or something of that kind interrupts his work; what is done in his case?

Mr. MUNROE. His case is immediately taken hold of by the Bureau of Public Health, which is working in the closest cooperation with us—in fact, all our medical staff now is assigned to us by the Bureau of Public Health—and he is sent back to the hospital, or his case is taken care of in a proper medical way until he is in a condition to resume his training, and while under that hospital care he receives the same compensation that he does while pursuing his training.

Mr. TOWNER. In other words, you treat him just as if he were still in training, on the supposition that he will resume his training?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; only, of course, the Bureau of Public Health assumes the responsibility for his care, not we.

Mr. TOWNER. Of course, I understand that; but there are, as I understood you to say, 30,000 or 40,000 of these men who would be entitled to training who are tubercular cases and ought to be in the hospital, and, in fact, a great many of them are. What is going to be done with those cases?

Mr. MUNROE. We have already established arrangements with the Bureau of Public Health by which we assume, under medical direction, the training of these men in the hospital itself, or in the close vicinity of the hospital, of all those cases where it is not felt by the doctors that it would be detrimental to the man to work for one or two or more hours a day. In that way we hope to hasten his training, so that when he does recover he will be just that much further along in his preparation for industrial earning.

Mr. TOWNER. The statement was made in the press not long ago that there were 15,000 or more of these tubercular patients that could not have any hospital training, although they were virtually dying for want of care and for hospital service. Have you any information regarding that matter?

Mr. MUNROE. I think I testified yesterday that before the law was passed there were something like 10,000 cases sent out from the camps, and of course a good many of those have been since picked up by the Bureau of Public Health, but I presume a great many of them are still at large, and until the amendment of July we had no responsibility whatever for the men discharged from the camps between April and October of 1917.

Mr. TOWNER. The committee realizes that you are not responsible for those conditions, but we want to know what you know with regard to the facts, if we can.

Mr. MUNROE. As I understand it—this is only on secondhand information—this bill now before the Congress asking appropriations for the building of a number of new hospitals for the use of the Bureau of Public Health is largely for the purpose of taking care of those cases.

Mr. TOWNER. It has been shown time and time again that there are plenty of hospital facilities in the United States. The only question is as to the utilization of them and securing them for the Government. It seems that the Bureau of Public Health or some other departments of the Government are insisting on immense appropriations for the building of hospitals that it would take two or three years to build, when there are an abundance of hospitals that could be used and are being offered to the Government, and there are a great many cantonments that could be utilized with a very small appropriation and would be very quickly available.

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, I can not speak with any firsthand knowledge about that.

Mr. TOWNER. I believe you recommended yesterday that the Government should—what was your first recommendation, Mr. Munroe?

Mr. MUNROE. I am pretty sure it was the removal of the salary limitation from the bill. I do not seem to have my documents here.

Mr. TOWNER. The removal of the salary limitation?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. That is, the granting of an appropriation in bulk, so that the salaries could be apportioned by the board.

Mr. MUNROE. May I say in connection that this morning I sent a communication to Mr. Good, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in answer to a number of questions he asked in regard to the numbers in training and so on, in which, at the suggestion of the board, I very strongly emphasized the importance of the removal of those salary limitations.

Mr. TOWNER. What was your next recommendation?

Mr. MUNROE. That every effort be made to put through promptly the so-called Kahn Bill giving the Department of War authority to turn over to us, so that we may lend them to the schools, a great amount of material that is not needed by the War Department and which is very sadly needed by those schools and colleges.

Mr. TOWNER. You mean these technical schools?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. The Department of War, of course, has a tremendous accumulation of all sorts of large and small tools and small motors and things of that sort that are of the highest value in the training of these disabled men. as I pointed out yesterday, we acquired about a quarter of a million dollars' worth of them under authorization of the Secretary of War until that was stopped, and since then we have been acquiring them by purchase.

Mr. TOWNER. Are not these technical schools to which these men are sent equipped with this kind of material?

Mr. MUNROE. Not for the large accessions of men we are sending to them. In many of these schools we are training from 100 to 300 disabled men in addition to their regular quota, and they have not the facilities for that sort of thing. Of course, many of the colleges, especially the older colleges, are not equipped as they should be for this form of technical training. They have competent staffs to teach, but in many cases they have not the equipment, and, of course, under present conditions it is absolutely impossible to purchase anything of that sort in the open market. It would be months and months before they could get deliveries.

Mr. TOWNER. What was your next recommendation?

Mr. MUNROE. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, that the other stenographer has taken my document from which I was speaking last night, and I can not remember the order of the recommendations. I remember that one recommendation, whether it was the next one or not, that Congress give us authority to train men who entered the armies of the Allies before we went into the war, and then another recommendation was——

Mr. TOWNER (interposing). That is, make reciprocal arrangements with the Allies for the training of men who happen to be in this country who belonged to their armies, and, especially, I suppose, that would apply to the Canadians?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Do we not now have, while not an express reciprocal arrangement, perhaps an implied one by which those Americans who served in the Canadian Army are receiving training here in the United States without compensation?

Mr. MUNROE. It is done under the Elks' fund, Mr. Lamkin tells me.

Mr. TOWNER. You also recommended the foundation by the Government of a revolving fund to take the place of the Elks' revolving fund?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. What amount do you think would be required at this time or from this time on?

Mr. MUNROE. The Elks' fund is $200,000, and a few weeks ago the Elks were seriously considering asking the payment of that fund back to them. We put up very strong recommendations to them, and they were very nice about it and agreed to continue it for another year. Whether they will be disposed to do it beyond that time I can not say.

Mr. TOWNER. My question was as to the amount of money; would $200,000 be sufficient?

Mr. MUNROE. I think a quarter million dollars would be sufficient.

Mr. TOWNER. Even if that were provided, it would have to be paid to the Elks in large proportion.

Mr. MUNROE. Oh, no, sir——

Mr. TOWNER. In order to take up the $200,000 outstanding?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; the boys are paying back so well. I think I testified that between 80 and 90 per cent of the loans are promptly paid, so there would be only probably somewhere between 5 and 10 per cent for the Government to make good to the Elks.

Mr. TOWNER. Can you think of any other recommendations that you have in mind?

Mr. MUNROE. Only this matter of the hospitals. Of course, I had not your point of view when I made that recommendation, but the Bureau of Public Health has very strongly put it up to us that if we are to carry out this excellent cooperative arrangement, by which we are to train men in these public health hospitals, they must have an appropriation for the erection of these hospitals; but, as I say, I can not speak from direct information on that.

Mr. TOWNER. You spoke in your testimony yesterday of the fact that you had had a great deal of difficulty in securing legislation in order to make your work effective, particularly referring to the funds necessary. When you first came to Congress asking for an appropriation, you asked for $2,000,000, I believe.

Mr. MUNROE. There, let me say, if I may express myself more clearly than perhaps I did yesterday, it was not the total amount, it was the fact that we were required to budget that $2,000,000 which led to the difficulties that followed in the succeeding winter. If that

$2,000,000 had not been budgeted, we would have had practically no difficulty in that first year.

Mr. TOWNER. When you found out that this difficulty existed, what steps did you take?

Mr. MUNROE. We brought it to the attention of Congress in the early part of December.

Mr. TOWNER. When you say, "brought it to the attention of Congress," what do you mean by that?

Mr. MUNROE. Put in a bill permitting the coalescing of these funds, through the proper channels.

Mr. TOWNER. What proper channels? Did you ever call it to the attention of the Education Committee that had introduced this legislation?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Holder tells me that Dr. Prosser, who was at that time the director, handled it directly with the Education Committee of both houses.

Mr. TOWNER. Did you not, in fact, make nearly all of your demands through the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. MUNROE. Not in that particular case, I think, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Well, in all cases.

Mr. MUNROE. Where it was a question of appropriations, we went, naturally, to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TOWNER. Did you appear before the Committee on Education with regard to these necessary changes in the law?

Mr. MUNROE. I, personally?

Mr. TOWNER. No; I mean the board.

Mr. MUNROE. I think that Dr. Prosser did or else brought it to individuals on the committee.

Mr. TOWNER. As a matter of fact, let me say this, that it was, in several instances, upon the suggestion or upon the application, really, of the members of the Committee on Education to the board, before we could receive any information regarding the matter, and the board seemed to be very loathe indeed to take the matter up with the committee that had originated the legislation and seemed to take the matter up, if they took it up at all, directly with the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MUNROE. I am very sorry——

Mr. TOWNER (continuing). When the changes that were to be made were changes in the law that ought to have originated with the Committee on Education, and the matter ought to have been brought before the Committee on Education. From the very start the Committee on Education has been very anxious, indeed, to make this legislation effective, and would have done and has done everything for the board that could be done in order to make it effective.

Mr. MUNROE. I have here a report, which has been put in my hands, of a hearing before the Committee on Education. It is dated January 34—I do not know whether that is January 3 or January 24, 1919, and at that hearing Dr. Prosser appeared and urged the coalescing of the funds and stated the situation.

Mr. ROBSION. What is that date?

Mr. MUNROE. It is January 34. I do not know whether it means January 3 or January 24. It is 1919. I see it is dated on the outside January 24.

Mr. PLATT. Doctor, you spoke of efforts being made to clean up by sending out letters to the men and by having squads of men go out and see those who had not yet applied for training. When a man writes you and says he does not want training, what do you do? Do you keep him on the list and keep after him?

Mr. MUNROE. We put him on what you might call the reserve list, in case he should change his mind at any time, but take him out of the active list.

Mr. PLATT. I should think that his name ought to be crossed off, and not necessarily prohibited absolutely from having training, but that he ought not to be pestered all the time. I have had some complaints about the board keeping after people who do not want training, who are either employed or not in condition to take training.

Mr. MUNROE. I have no doubt we have been overzealous in the matter, but we felt it was better to err on that side than on the other.

Mr. PLATT. You pay no attention, apparently, to the letters written you; no one ever reads them or opens them, or pays any attention to the case. When men are taken sick and sent to the Public Health hospitals, their pay keeps on just the same as if they were in training?

Mr. MUNROE. After 30 days they are transferred to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, but under the Sweet amendment they get the same amount that they would with us.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I was unavoidably absent yesterday and I do not know just what Mr. Munroe has testified to. I would like to ask if some one else is going to meet the specific charges that have been made against the board in regard to particular cases?

Mr. MUNROE. I dealt with that in my testimony yesterday. I think I answered each specific charge.

Mr. BURROUGHS. In the early part of your testimony, Mr. Munroe, you gave some figures. If they are convenient and readily accessible, I wish you would just verify these figures, because I am not sure I correctly got all of them. The figure you gave of total registrations, as of March 27, I take it, was 206,666.

Mr. MUNROE. I am sorry my document is not here, but that is my recollection.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Then, there is a figure which you gave for the total number with whom contact had been established on March 27, of 174,196?

Mr. MONROE. I think that was correct.

Mr. BURROUGHS. And 84.2 per cent of the total registration?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Then, there was another figure of 141,955, which was 81 per cent of the total registration—I did not get what that represented?

Mr. MUNROE. Those had been personally interviewed by the vocational advisors.

Mr. ROBSION. Indicated as being surveyed?

Mr. MUNROE. Personally interviewed, technically called surveyed.

Mr. BURROUGHS. There was a figure of 58,099, which, I understood you to say, was the number eligible for training?

Mr. MUNROE. The number for whom training had been arranged.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BURROUGHS. And there was a figure of 4,466 that was the total number that had begun training in the month of March, was that right?

Mr. MUNROE. New cases, you mean; I think that must have been. That is about the average, between 4,000 and 5,000 a month going into training.

Mr. BURROUGHS. There is still a large number of these men who are said to be eligible for training who have not yet been examined at all, I suppose?

Mr. MUNROE. The 200,000 includes all the names that have come to us from all sources, the Red Cross and various other sources. Probably a large proportion of those not included in the other figures have not any desire for training and probably most of them have not any disability.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You have examined between 125,000 and 150,000 men, I believe, you said, actually examined between 125,000 and 150,000?

Mr. MUNROE. I think the figure you quoted was somewhat larger than that.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes; where the contact had been established, 174,196. That is the exact figure?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I do not quite understand yet why there has been all of this delay and why there is still so much delay in getting a decision in a man's case?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, the delay for the first 13 months was due to the fact that it required two decisions. We could not put a man in training until the Bureau of War Risk Insurance had decided that he was eligible to compensation.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. In fact, I should question very seriously if there is any important delay, delay that amounts to anything.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Did you hear the testimony of certain gentlemen who came here from the New York office, one at least, and I think two of them testified, one certainly testified to me that the average length of time was at least a month in getting a decision.

Mr. MUNROE. I would prefer that Mr. Lamkin, who is directly responsible, answer that question rather than myself. Mr. Lamkin will testify later on that point.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You personally do not know about that?

Mr. MUNROE. I have my opinion, but I should prefer to have the question answered by Mr. Lamkin, who is directly responsible for the personnel of the New York office.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You remember hearing this gentleman also say that the chief reason for the delay, in his opinion—he gave several reasons—but the chief reason was due to the fact that so many decisions had to be made in Washington?

Mr. MUNROE. He was entirely mistaken in that. No decisions have to be put up to Washington or have had to be put up to Washington since last fall, except in the cases of men whose courses are likely to occupy more than two years, or where the tuition is more than $500 a year. All other cases the district has entire authority to settle itself.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That has been the rule since last fall?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Do you recall the time, was it soon after this amendment in July?

Mr. MUNROE. It was impossible to give any such authority to the district until after the amendment.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Do I understand you to say to the committee that such authority was given to the district office immediately following the passage of the amendment?

Mr. MUNROE. As soon as the reorganization which was necessitated by the salary limitation had taken place. Of course, that meant a considerable readjustment of all the districts and all the work.

Mr. BURROUGHS. As you understand it now, the district office has final authority?

Mr. MUNROE. Absolutely.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Except in the cases which you mention?

Mr. MUNROE. Except in the two cases I have mentioned.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What proportion of all cases would be governed by those exceptions, would you say?

Mr. MUNROE. As to the tuition it would be infinitesimal, probably not half a dozen cases in the whole country, and as to the other, this is merely a guess on my part, I should say that it would not be over 5 per cent.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Who determines the question of eligibility, where is that determined?

Mr. MUNROE. Eligibility for training?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. As I say, except in those cases, it is determined in the district office under general regulations originally laid down in what we call "Miscellaneous, 150."

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is the eligibility question determined by a district officer or by a central board officer located in the district office?

Mr. MUNROE. There is a local board that considers the case with a member from the central office with authority to give the cachet from Washington that it can go through; it does not have to be sent to Washington at all.

Mr. BURROUGHS. The final O. K. on the thing is made by a central board agent in the district office?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What have you to say to the charge made by Mr. Littledale that some 65,000 or 70,000 cases were thrown out by what he calls the eligibility squad?

Mr. MUNROE. I testified to that yesterday and gave the figures showing that large numbers of those were duplicates and, of course, naturally were thrown out. Another large number—I think I have that here—53,000 of these cases had been transferred to another district.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What do you mean by that?

Mr. MUNROE. They were duplicates. The boy had appeared in one district and his case had been transferred to another district and they had neglected to take his name off the first district list.

One thousand five hundred and seventy-five cases had been opened in the district office in error. A large proportion of these were duplicate cases, again, duplicates in the office themselves, they had the same man's name twice. The eligibility squad closed 35,431 cases and 12,923 cases had previously been closed by the central office, making a total of 48,534 cases which had been closed for the following reasons:

The man had died.

The man had reenlisted in the service.

The man had not been discharged from the Army, but had been placed on the retired list at once, therefore not eligible for training under the law.

The man stated that he did not desire training.

The man requested that his case be closed and that no more letters be written him.

The man was apparently not interested in training as evidenced by his failure to reply to several letters.

The man could not be located. Inquiry at the office of The Adjutant General in Washington, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the local Red Cross, the American Legion, and other agencies had failed to discover his present address.

The man was carrying on successfully in employment and was not in need of training.

The man had no disability and claimed no disability. There were thousands, I might say, brought to us by the local Red Cross where the man never had any disability.

The man's disability was a negligible handicap, and therefore he did not come under the law.

The man's disability was a minor disability and he had stated that he was not interested in section 3 training.

The disability existed prior to enlistment and was not aggravated by service and he was, therefore, not eligible for training under the act.

The man was in the Army only a few days, having been discharged from draft.

The information in the man's folder was so meager that contact with the man could not be made on the basis of this information; we could not locate the man at all. Of course, there were cases where they had the same name and it was a very difficult thing with those common names to actually locate the man.

The man had left the country.

The man had not been discharged under honorable conditions. A great many of those were thrown out.

Mr. BURROUGHS. How many men made up the eligibility squad?

Mr. MUNROE. They varied in the larger districts. What was the number, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. LAMKIN. Twenty.

Mr. MUNROE. That was subdivided for the smaller districts.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Was there not a medical member on the staff?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. On every staff in every district?

Mr. MUNROE. That is not true in every district. Where the medical reports had already been made and where there was not a medical man on the eligibility squad they were to accept the medical report.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Did they accept the medical report?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BURROUGHS. In a good many cases they absolutely overruled the medical report?

Mr. MUNROE. So far as I am aware they did not overrule the medical report.

Mr. BURROUGHS. In a number of instances where the medical report showed a major disability this eligibility squad found that there was simply a minor disability?

Mr. MUNROE. I am not aware of any such cases.

The cases that Mr. Littledale cites I will just run over.

Case 670. The man has fallen arches. The medical decision is that the disability was aggravated in the service. Three doctors classified him as a major case.

I am quoting from Mr. Littledale.

The eligibility squad overrules that classification. The squad gives him a negligible handicap and refuses him training pay.

The facts show that at the time this case was reviewed by the eligibility squad the folder contained two medical examinations, one by Dr. Tracy, of the New York office, and one by the Army medical officer who examined the man at the time of his discharge. Dr. Tracy's examination stated that the disability was a major disability and constituted a major permanent handicap which was aggravated by service. The Army medical examiner stated that the disability was third-degree flat feet which was not aggravated by service.

On account of the conflicting medical reports the central office case board representative had to choose between two suppositions. The man's enlistment record showed that he was discharged from draft after being in camp only six weeks during the fall of 1917 and that he was never accepted for enlistment in the Army. Both medical opinions show that the disability uudoubtedly existed prior to enlistment and that he carried on successfully before entering the Army in spite of this handicap, which consisted of flat feet, and the record showed that for two years since being rejected from the draft he had been employed as a car painter and stenciler. In view of the undeniable evidence that the disability existed prior to enlistment, and in view of the fact that the man had successfully carried on for two years following his brief stay at a military camp, the central office case board representative ruled that the man was not eligible for training under the conditions of section 2 of the vocational rehabilitation act.

The handicap rating was not changed from major to negligible and the man denied training on the ground that his disability was aggravated by service.

Mr. Littledale also cites the case 13192. Mr. Littledale said:

The man's occupation is a clerk. He was wounded and is suffering from epilepsy. Medical opinion classifies him as a major case. The eligibility squad overrules that. The squad calls him a minor case and refused him training with pay.

The facts in this case show that at the time this case was rated by a member of the eligibility squad there was no evidence in the man's folder that he was suffering from epilepsy and the file contained no rating by any member of the district medical staff. The folder contained an old medical examination stating that the man's disability was a slight limitation on the movement of his right arm. Inasmuch as the man prior to enlistment was employed as a clerk it was not considered that he was suffering from a major occupational handicap and it was ruled that he was not eligible for section 2 training.

Mr. Littledale cites the following case:

Case 27675. The man is suffering from dementia præcox,; medical opinion classifies him as a major case. The eligibility squad overrules that; calls him a minor case and refuses him training with pay.

The facts in this case show that no ruling was made by the eligibility squad, the decision having been previously made by the central office. The official report from the Navy Department shows that the man was not discharged, but was placed on the inactive list on account of flat feet. The man was placed on the inactive list in December, 1918. An examination made 11 months later at the office of the Federal board showed that the man was suffering from hepephrenic dementia præcox. There was some doubt as to the feasibility of training even if the disability were aggravated by service and there is no evidence to show that this mental disability was related in any way to military service. Inasmuch as this case presented many difficulties it was forwarded to the central office in Washington for a ruling and section 2 training was disapproved by central office because it was considered that the man's disability was not due to service and that the man was, therefore, ineligible under the conditions of the law. This ruling was made by the central office in Washington, and not by a member of the eligibility squad as stated in the Evening Post.

Then the figures which Mr. Littledale gave in regard to the alleged throwing out of cases—I will just give a few, it is not necessary to give them all—the Boston office was reduced from 10,568 to 7,255. The reason for this was that 1,671 cases had been transferred to another office and 38 cases were duplicates or canceled cases; 1,604 were ineligible under the evidence presented. New York was reduced from 31,191 to 16,041. The reason for this was that 9,714 men had been transferred to other offices, 395 cases were duplicates, and 5,041 were thrown out because the evidence showed that the men were not eligible for training under the law, and the same applies to all the other offices.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Have you personally any acquaintance with the business of the New York office?

Mr. MUNROE. Do you mean the actual financial running of the office?

Mr. BURROUGHS. No; I mean the actual running of the office.

Mr. MUNROE. I have visited the office many times.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Have you ever looked into its management or control?

Mr. MUNROE. Each time I go there I talk with the heads of the different divisions and get as good a view as one can in half a day's visit.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is it your opinion that the New York office is run as it should be run?

Mr. MUNROE. I think it is now. It was not for quite a long time after it was started.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Are you satisfied that the New York office is now on such a basis as it ought to be on?

Mr. MUNROE. I think that it is rapidly getting to that basis; yes, sir.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BURROUGHS. You think that the morale in the New York office is up to the standard?

Mr. MUNROE. It depends upon what one calls the standard.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is it up to what you would consider a proper standard?

Mr. MUNROE. I think there are still changes that should be made there in order to bring it to the highest standard.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What changes would you recommend there?

Mr. MUNROE. I think certain subordinates there should be transferred.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You would confine it to subordinates?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Why?

Mr. MUNROE. Because I think the difficulty, if there is any lack of pulling together there, is due to the disaffection of some of these subordinates.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You think that Mr. Clark is fully competent to handle the office?

Mr. MUNROE. I should say yes.

Mr. BURROUGHS. In every way?

Mr. MUNROE. I think it should be stated here that for the salaries which we are able to offer the district vocational officers you can not get the ideal executive, because I think such a man would command anywhere from $15,000 to $25,000 or $30,000, but with what we are able to offer I think we have good men.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Now, you have brought that up, I should like to go into that a little.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is it in your opinion true that it is impossible to get the type of man that you need, the type of man who can render the best and most efficient service in this work, that it is impossible to obtain that man without paying him a salary like what he perhaps might receive out in the industries?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not think that it would be necessary to offer a man $20,000 or $25,000, but I think to get the type of man to handle a complicated situation such as is presented by the New York office, a situation involving large financial responsibilities and very difficult and complicated human problems, that you ought to be able to offer a man at least $7,500 and, better, $10,000. Then, I think that you could get a man of large experience who should be willing to come at considerable financial sacrifice for the sake of doing the work, but with what we are able here to offer under the salary limitation, I do not believe that we can get that type of man; it represents too great a sacrifice on his part.

Mr. BURROUGHS. How about these advisors, are you able to get the right type of man for advisor in the district offices at the salary limit in the law?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; except, of course, we have got a number of very extraordinary men who are doing a fine piece of work, but simply because they are willing to throw themselves into the work with that small salary for the sake of doing it, but where we need large numbers, as we do, it is impossible to expect that motive to hold in many cases.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BURROUGHS. Such men do have large responsibilities, do they?

Mr. MUNROE. In one way they are the most responsible men of all. They come into close personal contact with the soldiers. To the soldiers he is the Government of the United States. They, as a rule, do not come in contact with any other man representing the Government, except this one man. You gentlemen saw from your own experience with these witnesses how complicated these problems are. There are all sorts of social questions that come up, all sorts of questions growing out, particularly, of his physical and mental condition, which involves his point of view, and so on, and you have got to have a type of man who will get at the real kernel of that man's need, and who knows enough of the whole field of industry to be able to give him successful advice as to his future, and who has a sufficient knowledge of human nature to know what is real and what is just passing and ephemeral in the man's state of mind. Then, when you get that man into a school or into an industry, you have got to have a man who knows enough about education and about the industry to be able to go into that department and to speak with authority as to whether or not the people in charge of the department are giving that boy a square deal. A man who is not competent of course, simply makes a fool of himself when he tries to criticize the education or the training of one of these men. He has got to speak with some authority and that means a man of experience and a man of pretty large caliber. For $2,400 we have, as a rule, to take young men of very little experience with either the human problems or the industrial problems, and it is amazing to me that under these limiations our men are doing such fine work as they are. A majority of them are throwing themselves into the work, heart and soul, and making up in zeal for what many of them lack in experience.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What effort has been made to obtain men of the type you mentioned for this work?

Mr. MUNROE. We are on the lookout all the time through State officers and various other people who are likely to know men of that stamp and recommend them to us. Then, of course, with the American Red Cross and the American Legion we are now endeavoring, as far as possible, to get ex-service men in those positions.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is a like effort being made to obtain men for the follow-up work? There seems to be a need for them very much, especially in the New York district?

Mr. MUNROE. The plan is, as the work of advising slackens off, to take these men who have had experience with the problem and gradually transfer them to the problem of follow-up.

Mr. BURROUGHS. In the meantime what, if anything, is being done?

Mr. MUNROE. We are getting men as fast as we can obtain them. It is almost impossible to get men who can go into a school or an industry and talk with authority in regard to the training of the men, and it is foolish to send anybody else into such a place.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You say that it is impossible to get men to do that work?

Mr. MUNROE. At the salaries that we are able to offer; yes, sir; because in these days a man can get very much more than $2,400 in a position that involves very little responsibility on his part.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BURROUGHS. That is true, no doubt; but I have had in mind that it would not be a tremendously difficult thing to appeal to the right type of man. This work makes an appeal, I think, to the type of man that you speak of?

Mr. MUNROE. But those men have been giving themselves, a great many of them have been giving themselves at great sacrifice, practically ever since the war started. A large number of them who would have been available while the war was on for service of that sort have got to go back to earn money for themselves and their families. They feel that they have done their share of service to the country and that they have got to take care of themselves. We find that attitude very common throughout the country, and it is a very natural attitude.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You spoke about the Elks' fund. I do not know that it has been brought out here at all in the course of this investigation, just how that Elks' fund is being administered, on what terms it was placed in your hands?

Mr. MUNROE. It was, of course, impossible to put it into our regular funds, because under the law it could not have been used except for the purposes of the law.

Mr. BURROUGHS. It is a separate fund?

Mr. MUNROE. Absolutely, and was handled by Dr. Prosser, so long as he was with the board.

Mr. BURROUGHS. It was placed with Dr. Prosser by the Elks' organization?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. The board has absolutely no official knowledge of it.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What were the conditions that were imposed?

Mr. MUNROE. There were practically two funds. One was a gift fund that the Elks did not expect to get back. That covers such cases as the boys who fought with the Allies and that we could not take care of under the law. A larger fund is the loan fund, a loan for the boys to tide them over in the weeks before they can receive their regular pay checks from the board. As I have already stated, between 80 and 90 per cent of that is paid back very promptly.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Does the Elks organization have any oversight whatever or check upon its administration?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. Reports are made at short intervals to the organization just how the money is being used.

Mr. BURROUGHS. As far as you know, is the Elks organization satisfied with the administration of this fund up to this time?

Mr. MUNROE. The only way that I can judge is by the fact that at some meeting of the officers of the Elks, a few weeks ago, out, I think, at Indianapolis, the question of continuing the fund for another year was brought up, and Gov. Tanner and a Mr. Fanning, who are in direct charge of the fund, were so far satisfied with the work that they recommended, and it was adopted by the Elks organization, a continuation of the plan for another year.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You spoke generally about the hard-boiled order, so-called. Do you know, as a matter of fact, that any such order had been sent out by the board?

Mr. MUNROE. By any official of the board, as I understood you?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes, sir. There was a statement in printed form, however, was there not?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Typewritten.

Mr. BURROUGHS. In typewritten form. Did you ever see that statement?

Mr. MUNROE. Not until I saw it published in the New York Post.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Do you have any knowledge of its origin?

Mr. MUNROE. Only the report that was made to me by the chief of the Vocational Rehabilitation Division.

Mr. BURROUGHS. To your knowledge, was it ever a basis of action by the board or by any official or subordinate of the board either here or anywhere else?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; absolutely no.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Did you ever hear in the office from the chief or from anybody else any such sentiment expressed as seems to have been expressed in that so-called hard-boiled order?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; it was absolutely contrary to the whole attitude, spirit, and temper of the organization from top to bottom.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I believe you spoke in your testimony about there being some 8,000 men who had been waiting varying periods from two months to six months, and perhaps more, at the time of the passage of the amendment, in July a year ago?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. July, 1919?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Was that right?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You spoke about the effort that had been made by the board for some form of cooperative action between the board and the War Risk Insurance Bureau prior to your seeking that amendment?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. And that all such efforts had proved futile?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That was during the incumbency of Mr. Lindsley?

Mr. MUNROE. Col. Lindsley; yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. For how long a time were those efforts continued?

Mr. MUNROE. From the very beginning. In fact, just before the law was passed we sent a formal communication to the War Risk Insurance Bureau, pointing out the necessity of close cooperation in working out the law, urging them to interpret it, as we proposed to interpret it, in the liberal spirit in which we knew and believed that Congress intended it to be interpreted, and pointing out to them that the interpretation involved their paying the man not merely the $30 a month actual cash pay, but a sufficient sum that would maintain him while taking the training; and also pointing out to them, in view of the fact that they must determine the compensation from the point of view of many factors other than that of the need of training, whereas we had only to consider one question, the necessity of these disabled men having training in order to go back into industry, that they should therefore interpret the law, as we thought it should be interpreted, on the basis of the man's eligibility for compensation rather than on that of his being in actual receipt of compensation.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You ascertained to your own satisfaction pretty soon after the law was passed, possibly even before the law was passed, that the bureau was going to take a different attitude than the Federal Board was taking with reference to the interpretation of the statute?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, there were comparatively few men to be dealt with in the beginning. As I pointed out, I think, for a long time we carried on a cooperative plan that was not officially recognized by the bureau.

Mr. BURROUGHS. How long was that?

Mr. MUNROE. That was up to January or February.

Mr. BURROUGHS. From the time the law was passed in October?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. It was about that time—I do not remember just when Col. Lindsley came in—but apparently he placed a stricter interpretation on the law than we did.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Was that cooperative plan satisfactory?

Mr. MUNROE. It did the business; yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That is to say, there was no delay occassioned during those months?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Up until about January?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Everything was going along smoothly because of your cooperative plan which you had devised, which was, perhaps, extra-legal, but which was getting the results?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. Then, of course, another thing, if I may continue, in January, was the fact not only that the bureau put a stricter interpretation on the law but also the fact that under the order of December 31, 1918, the boys were coming out in perfect shoals from the Army, so the bureau was absolutely swamped; they could not take care of them at all.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I understood you in your testimony—I may be wrong, and if I am I want you to correct me—I understood you to say that about May, if my memory is right, you first asked for the amendment to the law?

Mr. MUNROE. We held conferences from this time in January when the situation began to be critical, almost every week. We would go to the bureau or the officers of the bureau would come to us, and we would talk over the situation and we would urge, formally and informally, their more liberal interpretation of the law. It would then be put up to their legal advisors and they would decide that it could not be interpreted in the way that we wished it. Then we began to send every few days some inquiry as to why they interpreted the law as they did and why they varied their interpretation from one week to another week, and urging some kind of a cooperative arrangement, and each time explaining to them that unless something of that sort was done we would have to ask for a divorcing from them. At each of these conferences Col. Lindsley would urge us to try to keep along as we were, that he was sure the thing would come out all right. Finally, about the middle of April, under authority of the board, I wrote the letter to Assistant Secretary Shouse, which I read yesterday, covering these points of disagreement and the difficulty between us. Nothing happened within a week or 10 days and Secretary Houston, the chairman of our board, wrote a letter to Secretary Glass, who was at that time the Secretary of the Treasury, and the result of that letter was the putting in of a joint request for legislation divorcing us from the bureau.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That was about the 1st of May?

Mr. MUNROE. My letter was sent about the middle of April.

Mr. BURROUGHS. When you actually prepared the amendment and started proceedings for the amendment?

Mr. MUNROE. It was useless to ask for an amendment to the legislation until the War Risk Insurance Bureau was willing to cooperate with us in asking; otherwise it would have been impossible.

Mr. BURROUGHS. It was around the middle of April when you actually started proceedings for the amendment?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. When you gave up all further cooperative action with the bureau and started to get a change in the law?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Why had you not done that earlier?

Mr. MUNROE. Because of the constant hope held out to us by Col. Lindsley that we would be able to straighten the thing out without legislation.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What reason did you have for thinking that you could come to any understanding when his interpretation was one way and yours another?

Mr. MUNROE. Because he always held out the hope to us that the bureau might see the thing differently. It was one of those cases where you have to do a thing gradually, because we had to bring them around to the state of mind where they would act with us and ask for legislation; it was not a thing that we could force on them.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Were you not convinced long before May that something would have to be done in the way of legislation?

Mr. MUNROE. I think I so expressed myself to Col. Lindsley one of the first times that I met him.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What reason did he give you for thinking that it was not necessary?

Mr. MUNROE. He maintained that he had found the bureau in a great state of confusion when he took hold of it, and I think he made the public statement that in four or five weeks he would get it all straightened out. It was in the hope that he would get it all straightened out and the thing would go through all right that we held off.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Here were these boys' cases piling up by the thousands. As I understand you, the matter had gone along all right from about January, the beginning of January, until the middle of April or the 1st of May and that then there were some 8,000 cases that had accumulated?

Mr. MUNROE. They did not begin to pile up very seriously until about April.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You say the only reason you did not act earlier because Col. Lindsley held you off by saying that he thought the matter could be arranged otherwise?

Mr. MUNROE. The bureau was in great confusion, because of this great outpouring of men and he thought that he would get it straightened out in a few weeks and that we could come to some cooperative arrangement without the necessity of asking for legislation.

Mr. BURROUGHS. As I understand it, the board has two functions, that is to say, there is the function of vocational education proper and then there is the rehabilitation section?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. The board was created originally simply to carry out the vocational feature.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That means that there are men on two pay rolls there?

Mr. MUNROE. No; there is no man on two pay rolls. There are ix or seven men who would have to perform functions of both divisions in the auditing department, bookkeeping, and that sort of thing, and the clerk to the board, and so instead of putting new officers on those duties we asked the existing officers to do double duty and we split their salaries, after having secured a ruling from the comptroller that that was a proper thing to do.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You have the so-called split pay roll?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. And they get a salary from each?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Would you say that it is not a full salary from each?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; it is the old salary split in two, payable from two different appropriations.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is it or is it not a fact that men in the service of the board who are doing purely vocational educational work are on the payroll of the rehabilitation division?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. It is not true?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Would it be possible to have a statement submitted to the committee showing the names of the staff members and clerks who are doing purely educational work? You say there are none on the payroll of the vocational board?

Mr. MUNROE. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Or the rehabilitation board?

Mr. MUNROE. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. BURROUGHS. How long have you been connected with the board?

Mr. MUNROE. From its establishment in July, 1917.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Will you kindly name the chiefs of the rehabilitation section since you came on it?

Mr. MUNROE. The first chief was Dr. J. A. C. Chandler, who resigned in order to take the presidency of the College of William and Mary; the next chief was D. H. L. Smith, who had been loaned to us by the University of Indiana; he was in charge of the educational department there and was obliged to return, under the original agreement, at the opening of the fall term in 1919; and the present chief, Mr. Lamkin, who has been the chief since that time.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You have no women employed on the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Women?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MUNROE. A large number in the clerical staff; yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I did not know that.

Mr. ROBSION. You have women employed where?

Mr. MUNROE. The clerical and stenographic force is almost wholly women.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Have you any women employed in responsible positions in the board?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Only in the division of vocational education.
Mr. BURROUGHS. How about the rehabilitation division?
Mr. MUNROE. None.
Mr. BURROUGHS. Is there any reason for that?
Mr. MUNROE. Simply because in dealing with young men it seemed important to have men.
Mr. BURROUGHS. You stated, I think, yesterday, that half of the actual employees are ex-service men?
Mr. MUNROE. Fully half.
Mr. BURROUGHS. That is true?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURROUGHS. How many of them saw actual service?
Mr. MUNROE. I can not say offhand; I could get the figures for you.
Mr. BURROUGHS. Do you know how many were Y. M. C. A., Red Cross, or K. of C. workers and how many were real soldiers?
Mr. MUNROE. Real soldiers, all of them.
Mr. BURROUGHS. All of the 50 per cent?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURROUGHS. I think you spoke of some 96 of the male employees being discharged soldiers?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURROUGHS. How many of them have been re-educated?
Mr. MUNROE. They did not need it.
Mr. BURROUGHS. They were disabled men?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; but they were carried on without being re-educated. I said 96. That was the number known to us. There may be others disabled. We never made any canvas of the situation. Some of the other ex-service men may have been disabled and we not know of it.
Mr. BURROUGHS. You spoke of Mr. Lamkin recommending appointments and the board acting upon the recommendation?
Mr. MUNROE. Staff appointments.
Mr. BURROUGHS. That was the procedure?
Mr. MUNROE. With staff appointments; yes, sir.
Mr. BURROUGHS. Did Mr. Lamkin recommend the appointment of Mr. Clark?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURROUGHS. That was upon his own initiative, without any suggestion from anyone, as far as you know?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURROUGHS. Mr. Holder, I think, yesterday testified, or somebody did, that Mr. Clark's salary had been increased to $4,000 but that he was not yet drawing it?
Mr MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin will have to answer that; I am not familiar with it.
Mr. BURROUGHS. I think that is all at present.
Mr. TOWNER. The hearings will be adjourned until 1 o'clock this afternoon.
(Thereupon, the committee took a recess until 1 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee reassembled, pursuant to recess, at 1 o'clock p. m., Hon. Horace M. Towner presiding.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. The committee will be in order. Before going on with the testimony I want to call attention to a letter which I just received on the mail that came in just before noon. This letter is written by a service man, who is a lawyer and who used to live in my district in Iowa, and now lives in Phœnix, Ariz. He writes me a letter protesting against the proposed bonus bill and then he makes this statement, which I will want to put in the record as an indication of how widespread the feeling is that the board or somebody is responsible for unusual delays with regard to the benefits provided for the disabled service men. This is what he says in his letter, after discussing the bonus proposition:

While it does not concern the Fordney bill, I would suggest that some pressure be brought to bear upon the heads of departments having to do with disabled service men. The hardships of these men and their families in many cases are receiving no attention whatever. The dilatory tactics of those having the relief of disabled men in charge is disgusting, and in many instances the men and their families grow discouraged and give up in their efforts to secure aid which is justly due them. If a real service is to be done, let it be done on behalf of these men.

You may resume, Mr. Munroe.

STATEMENT OF MR. JAMES P. MUNROE—Resumed.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Munroe, I have lost in my memory the exact date on which you became associated with the board. Would you state that again?

Mr. MUNROE. It was in July; I think it was the 21st of July, 1917.

Mr. ROBSION. And your service has been continuous up to this date?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Have you occupied the same position in the board all the time?

Mr. MUNROE. I was elected vice chairman at the first organization meeting which I think took place on that date.

Mr. ROBSION. Your suggestions of improvements relate to outside agencies, that is, to Congress?

Mr. MUNROE. To legislation to be passed by Congress.

Mr. ROBSION. You have no suggestion as to the improvement of the central office?

Mr. MUNROE. Except as improvement would come with the removal of the salary limitations. That would tend to an improvement.

Mr. ROBSION. So far as you can see it, there is nothing that the central office can do to improve the service or to become more efficient in administering the laws as they are now written?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, I am not so foolish as to maintain that our organization, any more than any other Government body, is absolutely perfect.

Mr. ROBSION. I say so far as you see you are unable to make any suggested improvement there?

Mr. MUNROE. Except we are always strengthening the office in every way we can.

Mr. ROBSION. Would that apply to the New York office?

Mr. MUNROE. In regard to possible improvement?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. I stated this morning that I thought the morale would be improved by some shake up there.

Mr. ROBSION. Who do you have in mind that ought to be shaken up?

Mr. MUNROE. Two or three of the staff there, I think, are making more or less trouble.

Mr. ROBSION. Who are they?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin could give the names better than I could, but it is my general impression that there is some lack of cooperation there.

Mr. ROBSION. They are a part of the staff there, and, of course, hold responsible positions. Can not you give the names?

Mr. MUNROE. I would prefer not to do so because it is a question of administration which Mr. Lamkin is responsible for rather than myself.

Mr. ROBSION. I would like to get it into the record at this time in view of some other matters I desire to ask you. I wish you would inquire of Mr. Lamkin now and let it go into the record.

Mr. MUNROE. Are you prepared to make any statement? (After a pause.) Mr Lamkin apparently is not.

Mr. ROBSION. If you can not give the names, how can you say there ought to be a shake-up there?

Mr. MUNROE. Because it is my general impression that there has been more or less friction there, which I believe would probably be disposed of by the removal of some of the men.

Mr. ROBSION. You were present here during all of the hearings, were you not?

Mr. MUNROE. Most of them; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. When Mr. Clark testified?

Mr. MUNROE. Most of the time; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. When Mr. Meyer and Mr. Ives and Mr. Noyes testified. There are those four men who related the situation in New York, did they not?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Didn't you gather from their testimony what the trouble was at New York so far as morale goes?

Mr. MUNROE. As far as I could gather from their testimony I should think that Mr. Meyer and Mr. Ives should be transferred.

Mr. ROBSION. What about Mr. Noyes?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not think Mr. Noyes—I think he is all right.

Mr. ROBSION. But he did give substantially the same evidence that Mr. Ives gave, did he not?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Noyes is a gentleman of quite a different disposition.

Mr. ROBSION. But so far as discussing conditions in the New York office, there is very little difference in the testimony Mr. Noyes and Mr. Ives gave?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; but Mr. Noyes is of a cooperative nature and the other two gentlemen are not. That is, judging from their attitude.

Mr. ROBSION. They, at least, are the men that have come before the committee at the request of the committee and have detailed the conditions in the New York office and you feel ought to be relieved and transferred?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; because I do not think that Mr. Noyes should be transferred.

Mr. ROBSION. I say Mr. Meyer and Mr. Ives.

Mr. MUNROE. I do.

Mr. ROBSION. Well, from the appearance of the men here and their testimony, their knowledge of the work there, were you not impressed with the fact that Meyer and Ives appeared to be better trained, and have the work in hand better than Mr. Noyes?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I did not gather that impression.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, Mr. Munroe, after hearing the testimony of Mr. Noyes who you say is all right, are you not convinced that there is something radically wrong in the New York office?

Mr. MUNROE. I am convinced that there was something wrong there for the early part of the history of the office and that it is being very rapidly cleared up.

Mr. ROBSION. Did not Mr. Noyes bring the condition right down to April, 1920?

Mr. MUNROE. I still say that I think Mr. Noyes is of a proper state of mind and would not make trouble in the office whereas I think the other men would.

Mr. ROBSION. But if Mr. Noyes is a good man and unbiased, unprejudiced, and is that type of man that you describe him, when he makes the charges that he makes, that are substantially the same as Mr. Meyer and Mr. Ives make, can we escape the conclusion that there is something radically wrong in the New York office as late as April 1, 1920?

Mr. MUNROE. I think Mr. Noyes is mistaken in his conclusions. That is the way I size him up.

Mr. ROBSION. But, Mr. Munroe, he did not testify as to conclusions; he stated the conditions, the facts.

Mr. MUNROE. I shall have to read his testimony, really. I only heard part of it.

Mr. ROBSION. Would you, before Mr. Meyer and Mr. Noyes stated the facts of the situation and conditions there—do you know anything that would cause either Mr. Noyes or Mr. Ives, and Mr. Meyer to come before this committee and willfully commit perjury?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I do not think they would commit perjury. I think they simply saw things in the rather warped way that people do if they think they are not being given proper consideration.

Mr. ROBSION. But Mr. Griffin and a great many other witnesses that appeared here all seem to have found the same condition existing there in the New York office.

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, Mr. Griffin testified to a time practically anterior to the July 11 legislation.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, Mr. Noyes and these other witnesses put the blame for the failure of the office there on Mr. Clark. Might that not have some weight in influencing you to feel that perhaps Mr. Clark is responsible for conditions there?

Mr. MUNROE. I should have to read their testimony carefully before I gave my opinion in the matter.

Mr. ROBSION. If I have understood you, you never spent more than half a day at any one time in the New York office, did you?

Mr. MUNROE. At times I have spent the whole of one day, or even two successive days.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Did you do in your visits to the New York office as Mr. Noyes and Mr. Meyer stated that they did, that they went right into the files there and looked into the many individual cases to learn the true conditions there?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I did not examine the files, but I questioned the persons in charge of the files as to the situation.

Mr. ROBSION. The persons in charge of the files would be rather supposed to give themselves a clean bill of health, would they not?

Mr. MUNROE. I did not consider it the duty of a member of the board to go into details of that sort. Our duties are more of a general character rather than of a detailed administrative character.

Mr. ROBSION. But you must admit, must you not, Mr. Munroe, that Noyes and Ives and Meyer and a great many of the other witnesses that testified had a better opportunity to know conditions in the New York office than you had yourself?

Mr. MUNROE. If their opinion was unbiased.

Mr. ROBSION. I am not speaking as to their opinion, but where they undertook to detail the facts. You, as the head here in the central office, in your visits to New York, your information, whatever you had, was merely information from the heads, was it not, to a large extent?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And it had to be largely confined to that, did it not?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, say that a young man should go into the New York office and register and contact should be made, what would you say, on an average, would be a reasonable time upon which to pass on that fellow's case?

Mr. MUNROE. It would depend entirely on the complications of the case.

Mr. ROBSION. As a general rule.

Mr. MUNROE. What do you mean by pass; get him into training?

Mr. ROBSION. Have it determined whether or not he is to take training; whether or not he is entitled to the training there under sections 2 or 3?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not make any general statement on that, sir, because every case is individual, and some are complicated and others quite simple. The simple case ought to be a matter of 24 or 48 hours, as many cases are passed on in that time.

Mr. ROBSION. If I have understood your testimony, you have looked into the facts, and you say that it is your opinion that all these thousands of cases will be disposed of by about the 1st of July?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, I should think in making a statement like that you must have in your mind some period of time that it would usually take?

Mr. MUNROE. It is very difficult.

Mr. ROBSION. Some period of time that it would usually take to pass upon these cases?

Mr. MUNROE. It is very difficult to give an average because, as I say, the cases vary from the perfectly simple one that can be settled in a few moments to the one that would require a great deal of investigation before they could come to a decision.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Can you in a measure classify them in some way to give the percentage of time that it would require?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not do so without making a study of a thousand or more typical cases, and then I could give you figures.

Mr. ROBSION. Say it was a case that did not require that it be referred to the central office here. How long would you say it ought to take that New York office to pass upon the case?

Mr. MUNROE. It would depend, of course, upon how rapidly the cases were flooding in. I should say three or four days.

Mr. ROBSION. When was it that you had the New York office organized, as you say, under the laws amended July 11, 1919?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Farwell came there at that time, the 10th of August, and the office began to improve from that time.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Farwell was the representative of the central office, was he?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; he was the D. V. O. at New York.

Mr. ROBSION. That is so. He was D. V. O. Did you have a representative of the central office there on August 10, 1919?

Mr. MUNROE. Do you mean somebody permanently there?

Mr. ROBSION. Somebody there to help take care of the business?

Mr. MUNROE. There is practically somebody there all the time from the central office.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, could you give me the number of registrations that had been made in the New York office, say, up to the 10th of August, 1919?

Mr. MUNROE. To the present date, or up to that time?

Mr. ROBSION. Up to that time.

Mr. MUNROE. Not without looking up the figures. I can get them for you.

Mr. ROBSION. Have you that, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. MUNROE. I can get the figures.

Mr. ROBSION. I would like you to put in the record those figures. I just want to get at that condition in New York. There is somebody badly mistaken in their testimony. It is either right or wrong up there.

Mr. MUNROE. We will make a note of that, please, Mr. Lamkin.

Mr. ROBSION. I want a statement of all of the men who had registered and whose cases would be passed upon by the New York office or through the New York office on the 10th day of August, 1919.

Mr. MUNROE. Up to that time?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes, sir.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; I can get that.

Mr. TOWNER. The number of men.

Mr. ROBSION. The number of men.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Then I should like to have how many men had registered or whose cases had passed through the New York office on the 1st day of January, 1920. Now, what is the date you give that the auditor furnished in his statement that you read there? What is your last statement as to the number of men that are in training, etc.?

Mr. MUNROE. On April 15, was the date I gave. The number of men in section 2 was 58,000.

Mr. ROBSION I do not ask you to give the figures at all in here now.

Mr. MUNROE. What is it you wish me to give?

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. You can give the figures, or let Mr. Lamkin put in his figures.

Mr. MUNROE. You mean January 1 to April 15?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. Very well.

Mr. ROBSION. Then I should like to have you put in either how many cases had been passed on for section 2 training and section 3 training on August 10, 1919?

Mr. MUNROE. You mean now just the New York office or the whole?

Mr. ROBSION. The New York office.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. How many cases had been passed on for section 2 training and section 3 training on January 1, 1920? How many cases had been passed on for section 2 training and section 3 training on April 15, 1920, and I wish either Mr. Lamkin or yourself would put in that in the statement because I am going to ask him to produce the records when he appears to show the average length of time that those cases were in the New York office from the time they were filed up until they were passed upon. How many cases have been passed upon in March and up to April 15?

Mr. MUNROE. You mean the total number up to April 15?

Mr. ROBSION. For the month of March and for April, up to the 15th of April. You had that somewhere.

Mr. MUNROE. I haven't that figure by itself. I do not find it here, but I can get it for you.

Mr. ROBSION. I would like to have Mr. Lamkin put that in here with the other figures of the number of cases that were passed on approved for the month of March and for April, up to the 15th of April, 1920. I believe, however, you did give the number of cases that had been approved in the month of March?

Mr. MUNROE. That was for the whole country, not for the New York district. As I understand it, your questions are all for the New York district.

Mr. ROBSION. Yes. How many cases for the whole country were approved in the month of March?

Mr. MUNROE. I can not seem to find that figure. I remember that I gave it.

Mr. ROBSION. Four thousand and something.

Mr. MUNROE. It was something over 4,000.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you have the figures for the month of February, 1920?

Mr. MUNROE. I haven't it here; no, sir; I can get that for you. Are you referring now to the whole country or just to New York?

Mr. ROBSION. The whole country.

Mr. MUNROE. I will get those figures for you, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Who selected Mr. Farwell?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not know, sir. Do you mean originally? He came from the Boston office.

Mr. ROBSION. Your board approved him.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes. I presume he was recommended by the gentleman who was chief at that time. I do not remember when his appointment was made.

Mr. HOLDER. Dr. Prosser.

Mr. ROBSION. I noticed that Mr. Noyes who testified here, and you say that he is all right, in speaking of Mr. Farwell said, in recent testimony before this committee:

A sort of paralysis seemed to hit the office at this time.

That is when Mr. Farwell came. How would you explain that statement?

Mr. MUNROE. I explain it that in my opinion Mr. Noyes is mistaken.

Mr. ROBSION. If I have understood your figures, there are 32,470 ex-service men who have registered for vocational training with whom your board has not yet come in contact; is that true?

Mr. MUNROE. I should have to make the subtraction. [After a pause.] Yes, sir; it is about that figure.

Mr. ROBSION. You have stated that there have been 174,196 contacts with ex-service men of those who have registered and of those 141,953 have been surveyed, and, of course, that leaves 32,243 that have not been surveyed. What do you do when you survey them, what is it?

Mr. MUNROE. There are all kinds of ways of surveying a man.

Mr. ROBSION. What do you mean when you say that a man has been surveyed?

Mr. MUNROE. I mean one of our agents has seen him and talked with him and looked into his case.

Mr. ROBSION. Why should not those other 32,000 have been surveyed. Your boards have been in contact with them?

Mr. MUNROE. I would rather that Mr. Lamkin would answer that question. It is an administrative question.

Mr. ROBSION. That is a large number, is it not, to have contact with and no survey made?

Mr. MUNROE. I think you were not present this morning when I stated these were made up very largely of the names brought into us from all sources, the Red Cross, local agencies of one sort and another, and in my opinion, and I am very confident in expressing this opinion, the great majority of those men are negligible cases that would not come under the law at all.

Mr. ROBSION. If your board, if a representative of your board had not made a survey of them, you can not tell what their condition is.

Mr. MUNROE. From every standpoint they have been communicated with.

Mr. ROBSION. But you have had contact. When you have contact and no survey made, that is the trouble with the board, is it not, and representatives of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Contact simply means that we have had the name given to us from some source, usually from the local Red Cross or something of that sort.

Mr. ROBSION. But my question is that, so far as you are concerned, Mr. Munroe, you do not know why the 32,000 have not been surveyed?

Mr. MUNROE. Simply because they have not responded to communications sent to them to get at that.

Mr. ROBSION. You do not know that they have had communications, do you?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; everybody on our list has had a communication.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Of course, you do not speak of your own personal knowledge, do you?

Mr. MUNROE. I know that is the practice of the office.

Mr. ROBSION. You have given directions to do that, but how far it has been done you do not know?

Mr. MUNROE. I have every confidence it has been done as directed.

Mr. ROBSION. You feel that the central office here and the New York office and all of the representatives are doing their duty substantially, do you not?

Mr. MUNROE. I do.

Mr. ROBSION. You feel that way?

Mr. MUNROE. I do.

Mr. ROBSION. You are just testifying to and going upon that general assumption?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And must do that, of course. I was very much interested in your statement that our own country is doing more for our disabled soldiers than any other government. Did I understand you to say that England, the Parliament of England, had made no appropriation of money for the training of soldiers as directed through the government.

Mr. MUNROE. You misunderstood me. I said it was being largely carried on through private enterprise as most things are in England along that way.

Mr. ROBSION. Can you give us approximately the amount of money that the English Government has appropriated?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not offhand. I could get it for you.

Mr. ROBSION. I wish that would be furnished.

Mr. MUNROE. Will you make a note of that, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. ROBSION. Can you give us the amount that the French Government has appropriated?

Mr. MUNROE. If the figures are available; I am not sure that they are.

Mr. ROBSION. And the Italian Government?

Mr. MUNROE. I make this promise on the supposition that they are available. I am not certain that they are.

Mr. ROBSION. I notice a recent dispatch from the Canadian Government that claims to be official, in which it appears that they have outstripped our country in the matter of vocational training. I will read it.

OTTAWA, April 10, 1920.

Canada has graduated 13,030 disabled soldiers from its industrial retraining school, it was officially announced to-day. More than 43,000 ex-service men are now taking training courses.

If that is official, and if it is true, Canada has greatly outstripped us, has she not?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course I do not know about those particular figures, but I am pretty certain that this 43,000 includes the non-disabled boys who enlisted at 18 and younger, who are being educated under this commission, although they may not be disabled. As to the number of disabled men, the figures are a little over 30,000 that are in training.

Mr. ROBSION. But they are doing more for ex-service men than we are, if that is official.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. The problem of training nondisabled boys in the ordinary schools is quite a different problem from that of training the disabled men.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, can you give the committee what sum of money that Canada has appropriated for this purpose?

Mr. MUNROE. As I recollect it, the first appropriation was $50,000,000 and they have asked—I do not know whether it has yet been appropriated—for another $50,000,000.

Mr. ROBSION. So far as you know, they have only appropriated $50,000,000?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not know whether the second appropriation has been made or not.

Mr. ROBSION. When was that first appropriation made?

Mr. MUNROE. The Commission of Soldiers' Civil Reestablishment was appointed in July of 1915.

Mr. ROBSION. When was this additional $50,000,000 asked?

Mr. MUNROE. I saw reference to it some months ago, but I do not remember the exact date. I believe that the actual appropriation—although the commission was established in July, 1915—was not made until during the subsequent year.

Mr. ROBSION. What sum did the Canadian Government pay to the soldiers while taking the training?

Mr. MUNROE. That I should have to look up; I do not remember.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you remember whether it is more or less than we paid?

Mr. MUNROE. Less, I think.

Mr. ROBSION. When was this $2,000,000 appropriated that you spoke of, by our Congress?

Mr. MUNROE. In connection with the act of June, 1918.

Mr. ROBSION. 1918 or 1917?

Mr. MUNROE. Nineteen hundred and eighteen.

Mr. ROBSION. Was that the first appropriation for the retraining of our disabled soldiers?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Did your board ask for more than $2,000,000?

Mr. MUNROE. I think not. I think that that was the figure we asked.

Mr. ROBSION. Congress gave you just what you asked for?

Mr. MUNROE. I have no fault to find with that but only with the budgeting of it. We strenuously objected at that time to the budgeting because we had no data on which to go.

Mr. ROBSION. And that was the act that you complain of that tied your board up with the War Risk?

Mr. MUNROE. I am not complaining of the act, I am complaining of the attitude of the War Risk Insurance Bureau which refused to interpret it in a liberal way. The act itself was all right.

Mr. ROBSION. The Bureau of War Risk was undertaking to administer the law different from your board? When was it that you asked Congress to amend that act?

Mr. MUNROE. I think it was December 9, 1918.

Mr. ROBSION. Was it amended?

Mr. MUNROE. It was amended the latter part of February; that is, by permitting the coalescing of the funds.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Yes. Was there any additional fund appropriated in 1919, or before July, 1919?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; there was $77,000 given, as was permitted under the act, by the American Red Cross and the National Catholic War Council. I think those were the two bodies.

Mr. ROBSION. When did you ask Congress to divorce you from the War Risk?

Mr. MUNROE. In the latter part of April, I think, 1919.

Mr. ROBSION. There was no session of Congress then, was there?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; I think Congress was in session at that time. I think the new Congress had come in in April.

Mr. ROBSION. The new Congress was called into session May 19, 1919.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; I am mistaken. It was in May and not in April.

Mr. ROBSION. So it was the new Congress, the Sixty-sixth Congress, that you appealed to for relief, and got relief.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION. What appropriation did you ask for from the Sixty-sixth Congress at the first session?

Mr. MUNROE. $4,000,000.

Mr. ROBSION. $4,000,000?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. How much did the Sixty-sixth Congress give you at its first session?

Mr. TOWNER. Finally.

Mr. ROBSION. Yes; finally.

Mr. MUNROE. $14,000,000.

Mr. ROBSION. So that they gave your board $10,000,000 more than you asked for?

Mr. MUNROE. But meanwhile they passed the amendment to section 2, and that threw on us the whole responsibility for the maintenance of the men.

Mr. ROBSION. But they gave you $10,000,000 more than you asked?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; but, of course, when we asked for $4,000,000 we did not know that there would be the added responsibility under the amendment to section 2.

Mr. ROBSION. How much has your board expended for tuition?

Mr. MUNROE. I would have to get those figures. I do not carry them in my head.

Mr. ROBSION. You had it here.

Mr. MUNROE. I think not.

Mr. ROBSION. You were telling about it in comparing it with Mr. Littledale's charges.

Mr. MUNROE. Oh, yes; that is in the tables. I had forgotten [after a pause]. You mean the total expenditures or for one month?

Mr. ROBSION. No; the total expenditure.

Mr. MUNROE. Up to March 31, 1920, the total expenditure for tuition was what you asked me?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. For tuition the figure was $956,744.89.

Mr. ROBSION. What has been expended altogether?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. For the soldiers?

Mr. ROBSION. Up to March 31, 1920, for the training of soldiers, leaving out the tuition?

Mr. MUNROE. Including the tuition, the total for the soldiers was $15,689,677.77. Subtracting the tuition from that leaves it about $14,500,000 in round figures.

Mr. ROBSION. How much money has been appropriated altogether for this work?

Mr. MUNROE. Up to this time?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. What is that figure? $21,000,000. I have a poor head for figures.

Mr. ROBSION. How much do you still have to your credit? Of the appropriations, how much is still available?

Mr. MUNROE. That I should like to look up. I do not know what the figure is to-day.

Mr. ROBSION. Approximately?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin says on the 1st of April, approximately $10,000,000.

Mr. ROBSION. So that there can be no claim made of any shortage of funds, can there?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. After you had expended all along as you have, you now have something like, on the first of the month, something like $10,000,000 of appropriations still available.

Mr. MUNROE. But, of course, our expenditures are running now at the rate of between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000 a month.

Mr. ROBSION. What would you like for Congress to do is to give your board the authority to fix the salaries?

Mr. MUNROE. I did not get the first part of your question?

Mr. ROBSION. What you would like for Congress to give your board is authority to fix the salaries of all the men in the employ of the Federal Vocational Board?

Mr. MUNROE. To restore the act into its original shape in which it was without any salary limitations.

Mr. ROBSION. Then your idea there was to ask Congress to build more hospitals?

Mr. MUNROE. It is the Bureau of Public Health Service that is asking for the hospitals and we propose and are already carrying out a plan for cooperative work in those hospitals in which we give under medical advice so much training as it is proper for a man to have in his condition of health.

Mr. ROBSION. Don't you think that Judge Towner's suggestion is a fine one that we have a good many cantonments in the country not in use and whose buildings would be available for purposes like that?

Mr. MUNROE. As I said this morning, I have no first-hand knowledge of that subject and I would not venture to give an opinion.

Mr. ROBSION. What do you say about the Philadelphia office?

Mr. MUNROE. In what way?

Mr. ROBSION. Is it in a condition as described by Mr. Reid, who was a witness here?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir. I visited the Philadelphia office two or three weeks ago and it seemed to me in remarkably good condition.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Did you go into the files and records as Mr. Reid says he went into them and found the conditions there?

Mr. MUNROE. I did not pull out the files, but I talked with the responsible people in the office.

Mr. ROBSION. They all gave it a good name?

Mr. MUNROE. A man with business experience can judge from talking with people whether they are doing their work or not.

Mr. ROBSION. How can you tell from that whether or not the soldiers cases were being passed upon?

Mr. MUNROE. Because I asked questions about it and found that they were being dealt with.

Mr. ROBSION. If conditions were what they were described in New York and Philadelphia, the files were put in and handled so that the last would be first and the first would be last in handling cases in passing upon them.

Mr. MUNROE. I think that was a mistake in the testimony.

Mr. ROBSION. I notice you state that you had sent out squads of doctors and others. When did the first squad go out?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin can give you the date. I can not. Do you mean in New York?

Mr. ROBSION. Anywhere?

Mr. MUNROE. When did that New York squad, the first one go out?

Mr. LAMKIN. Some time in February, I think.

Mr. ROBSION. Were any squads going out before March, 1920?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin just said the first one went out in February.

Mr. ROBSION. Where?

Mr. MUNROE. These details can be answered much better by Mr. Lamkin. They are administrative details which I do not carry in my mind.

Mr. ROBSION. I only assumed it on the ground that you stated that the squads were sent out and I thought that you knew something about them.

Mr. MUNROE. I knew in a general way but could not possibly give the dates when they went out.

Mr. ROBSION. Was that under an order of the board or by Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. MUNROE. It was one of Mr. Lamkin's administrative acts.

Mr. ROBSION. That was not an order of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Things of that sort do not require an order from the board.

Mr. ROBSION. Can you tell us the percentage of the cases that have been passed upon by the Atlanta office?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not without looking up the figures.

Mr. ROBSION. There are 14 districts, are there not?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. I wish that you would have Mr. Lamkin furnish in his testimony the percentage or the number of cases that have been passed upon and those that have not been passed upon at each district office in the United States up to April 15, 1920?

Mr. MUNROE. Have you made a note of that, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Have you any figures there to show how many of this 58,099 have been approved for section 2 training?

Mr. MUNROE. Fifty-eight thousand in section 2. For section 3, there have been 36,000 approved.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, there are 25,000 of these 58,000 that have been approved for section 2 training that have not been put into training?

Mr. MUNROE. That have not yet accepted training. We can not force the men to take it, of course.

Mr. ROBSION. What is your impression as to whether or not they will take it?

Mr. MUNROE. As I think I stated this morning, at the outside, possibly 50 per cent of them would. That is a high figure but I hope that that number will take it.

Mr. ROBSION. How many do you claim will be subject to section 2 training?

Mr. MUNROE. Of what we have already?

Mr. ROBSION. Altogether.

Mr. MUNROE. No one can tell that because we do not know about the men who are still in hospitals and about these tuberculosis cases and about the mental cases. It is absolutely impossible.

Mr. ROBSION. How many do you think you still have to pass upon and approve?

Mr. MUNROE. Of the men on our rolls by this time we must have determined the eligibility and assigned training to close to 90 per cent. But, of course, men are continually coming out, being discharged from the hospitals.

Mr. ROBSION. You mean that there are just 10 per cent to pass on?

Mr. MUNROE. Of those on our list; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Then you can tell me, can you not, how many will be subject to section 2 training up to the present?

Mr. MUNROE. Of those now on the roll?

Mr. ROBSION. Of the 206,666 ex-service men who have registered and would be entitled to section 2 training, in your judgment?

Mr. MUNROE. It will be purely a guess. I should guess that the total of 70,000, and subtracting 58,000 from that, leaves it at the outside 12,000. That is an outside figure.

Mr. ROBSION. That are yet to be approved?

Mr. MUNROE. That will accept training.

Mr. ROBSION. That are yet to be approved, whose cases must yet be passed upon for section 2.

Mr. MUNROE. I think we are talking at cross purposes. I stated a little while ago that of the cases on our lists, practically 90 per cent have been passed on at this time. That leaves 10 per cent still to be acted on.

Mr. ROBSION. But if I have understood your evidence, it is that there will be approved for section 2 training, 58,099?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And if I further understood, you stated that in your judgment there would be 70,000 altogether of this 206,666 that would be entitled to section 2 training and that would leave 12,000 who in your opinion would be entitled to section 2 training, whose cases have not yet been approved. Are we both clear on that?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. I think we are still talking at cross purposes because we have approved section 2 training for 58,000 men.

Mr. ROBSION. Before you go any further, let me interrupt you. In your opinion, how many will there be who will be entitled to section 2 training of this 206,666?

Mr. MUNROE. I will have to do some addition here. There remain about 45,000 cases—that is, at the time of these figures—still to be passed on. The vast majority of those, I believe, are minor disabilities and consequently the proportion will be very small of men eligible for section 2 of that 45,000.

Mr. ROBSION. But you have not yet given the committee and myself your opinion as to how many there will be of section 2 training of that 206,666?

Mr. MUNROE. It all depends on the proportion of the 45,000.

Mr. ROBSION. I know you can not tell exactly.

Mr. MUNROE. If you take 10 per cent, that is 4,500, and added to 58,000, it gives you 62,500. If you take 20 per cent, that is 9,000, and added to 58,000, it makes 67,000. It is all guess, absolutely.

Mr. ROBSION. But you say that you will have all those cases practically passed on that are now in by the 1st of July cleaned up?

Mr. MUNROE. We will have them; yes.

Mr. ROBSION. Of course, you will ask Congress to appropriate money?

Mr. MUNROE. We have asked that for the next year.

Mr. ROBSION. If you have asked it, then, of course, you must have some figures from which you make your request?

Mr. MUNROE. I have not those figures. It is a public document in which we made the estimates.

Mr. ROBSION. How much do you estimate it will cost to train each soldier; I mean as an average?

Mr. MUNROE. It averages about $1,500.

Mr. HOLDER. On the $80 basis?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; but, of course, if the Darrow bill passes, raising it to $100, that will increase the cost for each soldier by $20 a month.

Mr. ROBSION. Did you go before the committee last year in May or June, when you asked to have a separation of these two departments—the Vocational Board and the War Risk—and ask for an appropriation?

Mr. MUNROE. At the time that we asked for the separation?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. I should have to refresh my memory on the details of that.

Mr. ROBSION. Did you testify last year before the Appropriations Committee, of which Mr. Good is chairman?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Who all appeared there before that committee of your board that you know?

Mr. MUNROE. Who of our organization appeared?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. I should have to look up the record to find out. I do not remember. I know I testified. I have forgotten who else did.

Mr. ROBSION. Did Mr. Good, the chairman, appear to be sympathetic with your desires and purposes?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Which hearing do you mean?

Mr. ROBSION. Before the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. MUNROE. I have appeared before the Appropriations Committee several times. I do not know which one you mean.

Mr. ROBSION. Last year in May or June before you had the change in the law and before you got the $14,000,000?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Good has always been very courteous.

Mr. ROBSION. In what way did your board fail in presenting your case to cause the chairman of the Appropriations Committee on the floor of the House to use this language in the Congressional Record of the date of July, 1919, page 2787:

> There never was a body of men anywhere entrusted with a great work who seem to know as little about the subject and had as small a vision of the great work with which they were entrusted as the body to whom we had entrusted the rehabilitation of those boys who have been so unfortunate as to be wounded in this great war.

Mr. MUNROE. You would have to ask Mr. Good the basis of those remarks. I could not stand sponsor for them.

Mr. ROBSION. Was there any ground for the chairman of the Appropriations Committee after hearing you and other members of your board, in making a charge like that on the floor of the House?

Mr. MUNROE. You would have to ask Mr. Good.

Mr. VESTAL. I object to that question. That is certainly not a pertinent question to this investigation as to what Mr. Good might have said in the Record. I want to see a full investigation, but taking what somebody else has said about these people certainly is not a proper question to ask this witness.

Mr. TOWNER. I think perhaps the question is a little out of order.

Mr. ROBSION. There was some complaint about the official organ of the American Legion throwing obstacles in your way in this training in carrying on the work. How did it do that?

Mr. MUNROE. I simply pointed out the anomalous situation of the American Legion officers asking us to cooperate with them and offering to cooperate with us and establishing with us the most cordial relations so that there was placed on my desk the other day a manual to be used by the officers of the American Legion in helping us along with our work and persuading the men assigned training to take the training which, of course, is one of their chief ways in which they can help us. I pointed out the anomalous situation of the officers working with us in that way and yet the paper which bears the name of the Legion, to use a slang phrase, knocking us in every way.

Mr. ROBSION. The Legion itself, the head of the Legion, has been criticising the delay of your board? Is that not so?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. D'Olier has always been very friendly.

Mr. ROBSION. Did not the head of the Legion, as representative of the Legion, appear before our committee and point out these delays as inexcusable delays?

Mr. MUNROE. I was not present; I do not know, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. You spoke about receiving some contributions from certain sources. How much was that?

Mr. MUNROE. It was $77,000. I can not tell you just how it was divided but the two givers, as I remember it, were the American Red Cross and the National Catholic War Council. The two gifts totaled $77,000 and there was $25 from some organization whose name I do not remember.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. What disposition was made of that?

Mr. MUNROE. It was added to the fund and utilized during the winter of 1918–19 to some extent in the payment of employees.

Mr. ROBSION. I notice a statement that was issued by your board where you state that $66,000 of it was used for salaries. Was it necessary to do that, to use that fund for the purpose?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; at that time, because of the budgeting. We had used up all of the funds that we could untilize for salaries under that budgeting.

Mr. ROBSION. Was the money given with the idea that it was to be used for salaries?

Mr. MUNROE. Used for any purpose that we needed it. There was no restriction on it at all. Of course, we could not have received it with any restrictions because the law does not permit it.

Mr. ROBSION. Haven't you a copy in your office of the so-called hard-boiled order?

Mr. MUNROE. I have never seen any except what was published in the New York Evening Post.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you not understand that there is such an order, whether it was ever sent out or not, in the files of the department?

Mr. MUNROE. There was no such order ever sent out or ever prepared.

Mr. ROBSION. There was no such order in the files?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Haven't you heard it discussed in your department and in the board?

Mr. MUNROE. We asked for a report from the chief and I think he will be glad to testify in that matter.

Mr. ROBSION. You got information that there was such an order, did you not?

Mr. MUNROE. There was no such order there and I have never seen such an order.

Mr. ROBSION. It was prepared, if not signed?

Mr. MUNROE. There was no order prepared.

Mr. ROBSION. What is that gentleman's name in New York?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Brigham.

Mr. ROBSION. One of the witnesses here testified that Mr. Brigham in New York, who was in the New York office as representative of the board was talking and Mr. Brigham claimed that he was responsible for it.

Mr. MUNROE. A little group of them drew up a memorandum which did not relate to the soldiers in any way. It was a memorendum to be used, according to the testimony given to us by Mr. Brigham, for their relations with the other officials at the district offices. It had no bearing on the soldiers whatever.

Mr. ROBSION. Where was that prepared?

Mr. MUNROE. If you wish me to read the report from Mr. Lamkin, I will do so.

This is addressed to me by Mr. Lamkin. It reads as follows:

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION,
DIVISION OF REHABILITATION FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS, SAILORS, AND MARINES,
Washington, D. C., March 6, 1920.

Mr. JAMES P. MUNROE,
Vice Chairman, Federal Board for Vocational Education,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MUNROE: I am submitting herewith a statement from Mr. Carl C. Brigham concerning the Helpful Hints to Central Office Case Board Representatives, about which you inquire. As I remember the incident the facts are as stated by him. The material was prepared, as I recollect, at a time when I was temporarily absent from the office, and lay on my desk for several days before I saw it.

It was in no sense an order or instruction. There are five ways used for communication in the central office, and to central office representatives in the field.

1. Through the general regulations of the board, referred to as miscellaneous 150 revised.
2. Through a series of instruction letters numbered serially.
3. Through a series of information letters, also numbered serially.
4. Through memorandums usually used only in central office.
5. Through notes always used only in central office, and which are not of as lasting interest as the memorandums.

The first three of the above have the force of orders, and are signed by the chief of the Division of Rehabilitation. The last two are used as recommendations on which orders or instructions are later issued. The material above referred to was in none of these classes.

I did not know until Mr. Brigham's statement, attached hereto, was handed to me that the material prepared by him in October was intended to be sent out of the office, or was sent out by anyone. It certainly did not go out to my knowledge in any official letters of the board. Mr. Carl Becker, one of our field representatives wrote me from Oklahoma City on November 14, inclosing what purported to be an original copy of the statement.

When I got his letter, I asked Mr. Hamilton, the supervisor of training, under whose general direction Mr. Becker was working, if he sent a copy of the material to Mr. Becker. He told me that either Mr. Becker got an original copy before it had been shown to me, or that such copy had been sent him by mistake. I told Mr. Hamilton that no such material should be sent out by anyone connected with this office, and promptly wrote Mr. Becker under date of November 19. The following paragraphs of that letter to Mr. Becker are quoted:

"I am glad to have the Helpful Hints to Central Office Case Board Representatives, which you sent me. As written, this has not been sent out by central office. This draft was submitted to the chief and was not approved. I have taken the matter up with Mr. Hamilton and find that the original draft went to you without authority. There is no reason for central office to be 'hard boiled' nor for any man representing central office to be 'hard boiled.' Men who are sent out from central office are expected to give the soldiers the benefit of the doubt, as the central office case board is expected to give them the benefit of the doubt. The recommendations of the district medical officer must be taken regarding the nature of a man's disability. It will not be overruled by central office except in rare cases or where the soldier receives the benefit. Central office case board representatives are expected to see that all the information necessary from a legal standpoint is in the case.

"With that exception, they are not expected to 'split hairs' in approving or disapproving a man's case."

The language of the statement shows it was never intended for an order, or instruction, or to be sent out. The fact that it was not signed by anyone also shows it was not so intended.

In order to determine as rapidly as possible whether or not men whose names were in our files, were entitled to vocational training, and to notify them, and to prevent the delay which resulted from sending all files and papers to Washington, we have sent out to various district offices: First, individual representatives or so-called central office case board representatives, and later, groups of men called eligibility squads.

These men were to pass on the legal evidence in the files, and so the interviewing of the disabled men, and the securing of legal evidence naturally had to be left to the men in the district offices. The representatives sent out from this office can not interview disabled men, and at the same time pass on a large number of cases. Every instruction and order has been to give the disabled soldier the benefit of the doubt, and every effort has been made to keep the men sent out from central office at the work which I believed would expedite action, and which could only be expedited by their time not being taken up by conversation or "visiting" with members of the district staffs. In other words, I believed the efficiency of the organization could be promoted by insisting that these central office representatives who were to maintain uniform standards throughout the country, fair to the disabled man, and fair to the Government, giving the disabled man the benefit of the doubt, confine themselves to the work which they were sent out to do. An attempt to increase the efficiency of a Government employee should not be the subject of severe criticism.

The figures for September 15, and for March 1, in this connection may be of interest:

	Sept. 15	Mar. 1.
Number approved for training under section 2	17,000	55,000
Number approved for section 3 training	500	22,000
Number deemed ineligible in training on the evidence in the files	15,000	48,000
Total definite decisions rendered	32,500	125,000

It should be remembered that a large per cent of the men serving on central office case board were ex-service men. Mr. Brigham himself is an ex-service man, having in addition, a very high civil-service rating. The present central office case board which acts on appeals from the decisions adverse to claims, is composed of eight men, one of whom, a veteran of the Spanish-American War, was physically incapacitated for service in the late war, one was in the Engineer Corps, and the other six saw overseas service as line officers.

As to my attitude toward the disabled men, and as to instructions and orders written, or which I have sent out, it has always been to be fair to the men and to the Government, giving the disabled man the benefit of the doubt. I should be glad to see the provisions of the present rehabilitation law liberalized to such an extent that every man who suffered any disability could have the training he needed, if he wanted it, but such is not the provision of the present law.

It may be of some value in determining my attitude toward the disabled man to know that so far as I can remember, while I was in charge of the office at St. Louis, or temporarily in charge at Philadelphia, or New York, or since I have been here as chief of this division, I have never declined to personally see any disabled man who asked to see me personally, nor have I declined to see anyone else who asked to see me, either an employee or not an employee, whatever his business. Nor have I kept any individual waiting any length of time, but frequently I have had to refer them to others for action where their matters would consume any length of time.

As my resignation was placed in your hands shortly after I became chief of the division, to become effective at your pleasure, so that you would not feel bound to retain me in my present position because I am under the civil service, and was not subject to removal except after charges are filed, and also, as you have, so far, not accepted it, and as you have approved the regulations which have gone out in Miscellaneous 150, and in the instruction and information series, all of which are subject to review, I am sure that the statement which I have expressed regarding my attitude toward the disabled soldier is approved by all the members of the board.

Very truly, yours,

UEL W. LAMKIN,
Chief, Division of Rehabilitation.

Mr. ROBSION. How long is it? On that one point, I just wanted to know who wrote that order if it was written?

Mr. MUNROE. You will notice that he says that he transmits the report made by Mr. Brigham.

Mr. ROBSION. You need not read that all. But did he write it according to the report. Who prepared that so-called hard boiled order in the New York office or wherever it was?

Mr. MUNROE. There was no order prepared. There never was an order of any kind.

Mr. ROBSION. Would you want to put that report in the record?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. As long as there seems to be so much misunderstanding about it, I think we had better.

Mr. ROBSION. Let it go in the record.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION. Is there with that record a copy of the so-called order, whatever it was, hard-boiled, that related to the soldiers or anybody else?

Mr. MUNROE. Let me repeat, sir. There never was an order, hard-boiled, or any other kind along those lines. The thing was entitled, "Helpful Hints to Central Office Case-Board Representatives."

Mr. ROBSION. Is there a copy of that Helpful Hints in there?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; it is embodied in Mr. Brigham's report or statement.

Mr. ROBSION. How many pages does it cover?

Mr. MUNROE. The Helpful Hints? It covers about 1 page.

Mr. ROBSION. I wish you would read that?

Mr. MUNROE. The Helpful Hints?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Is that embraced in the report of Mr. Lamkin which you have already put into the record?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin made a formal report as requested by the standing committee and embodied in it this statement by Mr. Brigham.

Mr. TOWNER. And that you have already offered for the record?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. Do you wish me to read it?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Very well.

(The statement referred to, previously quoted from and including the Helpful Hints is as follows:)

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION,
DIVISION OF REHABILITATION FOR
DISABLED SOLDIERS, SAILORS, AND MARINES,
Washington, D. C., March 6, 1920.

Statement of Carl C. Brigham to Chief Division of Rehabilitation concerning the origin of an unofficial statement known as Helpful Hints to C. O. C. B. Representatives.

An unofficial statement entitled "Helpful Hints to C. O. C. B. Representatives" was prepared by me some time in October, 1919, to be forwarded to representatives of the central office case board working in the district offices. The original copy of this unofficial statement is not in my possession, and to the best of my knowledge and belief at that time the original and all copies of the original were destroyed.

About 10 copies of this unofficial statement were prepared and before being submitted to the chief of division were shown to three members of the staff of central office at that time. After showing the statement to these three persons I collected, as I thought, all the copies and placed them on your desk. It is possible that one of these copies was mislaid, picked up by a clerk, and sent out by mistake. This is, however, a supposition. After that evening I saw the original copy only after certain sentences had been deleted by you. I handed the copies to a typist and had 10 or 12 copies prepared. These copies were mailed by me to the five or six central office case board representatives in the field and given to the members of the eligibility squad then in training in central office, consisting of 8 or 10 men.

HELPFUL HINTS FOR C. O. C. B. REPRESENTATIVES.

"1. As representative of the central office case board you are to give individual rulings on individual cases. General rulings originate at central office. Don't make any yourself.

"2. You are to pass on cases, and whenever you think out loud see that the thought is placed on paper and is then placed in the man's folder.

Digitized by Google

"3. Don't argue with the district office staff. Tell them to write central office if they don't like your judgment.

"4. Don't speculate. If a fact exists, the existence of the fact can be proved on a piece of paper. Accept legal proof and don't trust to hearsay evidence. If any member of a district staff knows a lot more about a case than is in the folder, tell him to dictate it and get the D. V. O. to sign it. Don't listen to him. It wastes time.

"5. The organs used in approving cases are the eyes and the brain.

"6. Don't gossip. If a man tells you a tale of woe in one district, don't tell it in the next district. You are not sent out to arrange salary readjustments, or to install filing systems, but to approve cases.

"7. Keep your opinions to yourself. If you believe one section is more efficient than another section or one district more efficient than another, keep it to yourself.

"8. Members of the district office staffs will beat you over the head with verbal pressure. District pressure causes many of our mistakes. Put cotton in your ears and lock the door.

"9. District office staffs believe that any one from Central Office is full of wisdom. You will preserve this good impression, if you don't talk.

"10. Whenever you draw a conclusion, draw it in duplicate and forward one copy to central office.

"11. Accept advice from central office. Take all the cigarettes you can get from members of the district office staff, but no advice. The district office will never crawl you for approving cases in error, but central office will. Don't get mad when you get crawled, but come back with the evidence. If the evidence wasn't there, don't do it again."

The copies sent out were not signed by the chief of division or anybody else. No instructions were given me to send them out. The chief of division did not approve the copy and issued no instructions that they be sent.

In explanation of the reasons for issuing this circular I wish to call your attention to certain factors which lead to its reparation.

The first stimulus to the preparation of this circular was a complaint received by me that one of the traveling representatives carried word from one district to another that a member of one district staff would like a transfer to another district, and then carried word back to the man concerned that his transfer would be highly acceptable and possibly at an increased salary. The transfer would have disrupted the organization of the district from which the man was transferred and the person making the complaint was entirely justified. Another complaint was received that another representative dropped a suggestion in one district that another district was more efficient in some respects. To meet these complaints the following paragraphs were inserted:

"6. Don't gossip. If a man tells you a tale of woe in one district, don't tell it in the next district. You are not sent out to arrange salary readjustments, or to install filing systems, but to approve cases.

"7. Keep your opinions to yourself. If you believe one section is more efficient than another section or one district more efficient than another, keep it to yourself."

Another difficulty at the time of the preparation of this circular resulted from the fact that the district offices were inclined to generalize on the basis of rulings made on individual cases and that our traveling representatives were inclined to make general rulings. You will probably remember that about this time one district office wrote to us stating that a central office man had rated a case of otitis media "major" and that if this case were rated "major" they had 5,000 other cases which must be rated "major" also. Our case board representatives were instructed to pass on the individual cases on their merits and not to generalize. All matters of general policy were submitted to the chief of division. To overcome this tendency the following paragraphs were inserted:

"1. As representatives of the central office case board you are to give individual rulings on individual cases. General rulings originate at central office. Don't make any yourself.

"9. District office staffs believe that anyone from central office is full of wisdom. You will preserve this good impression, if you don't talk."

Another difficulty at that time resulted from the failure of the district offices in some instances to transmit to central office the evidence on which a decision was based, and the failure of our case board representatives in some instances to specify the evidence on which his decision was based. It was the policy of central office to have the actual evidence on which the award was based in our files, so that any question as to the legality of any award or the authorization of payments could be answered. If the question of the legality of payments ever came up, there would be no record in the iolder of any conversation held in a district office, although the facts developed in thfs conversation might clearly indicate that the man was in need of training. Another difficulty of the same sort arose from the fact that in some instances cases were disapproved verbally by a case-board representative with the statement that he would approve it if certain evidence were secured. The representative would then leave the district and the case would be presented to another man with the statement that the first man said it would be approved, if certain evidence were supplied. To overcome these difficulties the following paragraphs were inserted:

"2. You are to pass on cases and whenever you think out loud see that the thought is placed on paper and is then placed in the man's folder."

"4. Don't speculate. If a fact exists, the existence of the fact can be proved on a piece of paper. Accept legal proof and don't trust to hearsay evidence. If any member of a district staff knows a lot more about a case than is in the folder, tell him to dictate it, and get the D. V. O. to sign it. Don't listen to him. It wastes time."

"10. Whenever you draw a conclusion, draw it in duplicate and forward one copy to central office."

"11. Accept advice from central office. Take all the cigarettes you can get from members of the district staff, but no advice. The district office will never crawl you for approving cases in error, but central office will. Don't get mad when you get crawled, but come back with the evidence. If the evidence wasn't there—don't do again."

Our greatest difficulty at the time this circular was written resulted from the fact that there was an enormous amount of work to be done by a very few men. It was impossible to obtain additional men and it was frequently necessary for our representatives to cover three and sometimes four offices a week. In some instances it was necessary to move them so rapidly that a man left a district with a number of cases ready for decision unacted upon. The representatives worked day and night in their effort to clear the load, and they should have been protected from interference. On the other hand, members of the district office staffs were very much interested in practically all of these cases on which definite action was to be taken. The members of the district staff were in contact with the man and deeply interested in his welfare, as they should have been. On the other hand the case-board representative, interested in all the men, as well as in individuals, had more work to do in a given time than he could accomplish. If there were 200 cases ready for decision, a representative could spend all of the time talking over 10 cases and be forced to leave 190 cases until his next visit. The stress of the work sometimes made it necessary for representatives to refuse to talk. This was why they were advised to "put cotton in their ears and lock the door," and to work nights. This attitude was encouraged in order that the work might progress more rapidly.

The artificial relationship which resulted from the stress of work sometimes caused friction between the central office representatives and some members of the district staffs, but on the whole the offices realized the strain our men were working under and the man was given a quiet room and interference prohibited. On account of the time element and the necessity of drastic action, paragraph 3 was inserted as follows:

"3. Don't argue with the district office staff. Tell them to write central office if they don't like your judgment."

and also paragraph—

"8. Members of the district office staffs will beat you over the head with verbal pressure. District pressure causes many of our mistakes. Put cotton in your ears and lock the door."

It was in paragraph 8 that the words "hard boiled" and "naturally sympathetic" appeared in the original draft, from which they were stricken out. The "hard boiled" phrase and the "naturally sympathetic" phrase had no reference to the attitude of the central office representative toward the claim of the disabled man and applied only to the very difficult but entirely necessary relationship he was forced to maintain with the members of the district office staff. In passing on the cases of disabled men the case-board representatives have always been instructed to give the disabled man the benefit of the doubt, and any change in their policy must come from a change in the vocational rehabilitation act liberalizing the provisions of section 2. In this connection the paragraph "The organs used in approving cases are the eyes and the brain" should be discussed. When a man makes application for training under section 2 of the vocational rehabilitation act, it is necessary that four conditions be met:

(a) That the man has been discharged from the service under honorable conditions since April 6, 1917.

(b) That he has a disability that was incurred in the service or is traceable to the service.

Digitized by Google

(c) That his disability constitutes a vocational handicap.
(d) That training from a mental and physical standpoint is feasible.

There may be many other social and economic reasons why a man should receive support, but none of these social and economic reasons legally entitles a man to training. In taking this position your case board representatives have adopted the spirit and letter of the law as expressed in the act of Congress.

In conclusion I wish to apologize for the manner and style in which this circular was written. It was intended for a limited number of persons, all of whom were capable of interpreting it correctly and who did interpret it correctly. That the communication may be very easily misinterpreted is evidenced by the storm of protest following the publication of the copy disapproved by you. It would have been a very easy matter to write the same instructions in such a manner that the same points would be covered and the same difficulties overcome without rendering the board liable to attack on account of misinterpretation. I regret exceedingly that my unfortunate expression has placed you and the members of the board in such an embarrassing predicament and wish to state to you again what I have previously stated verbally that my resignation from the service will be placed before you any time you express your willingness to accept it.

CARL C. BRIGHAM.

MARCH 6, 1920.

Please remember that this central office case board was sent out to pass upon cases which had already been passed upon by the district office. The central office case board never came in contact with the boys at all and these hints were for their relations and their attitude toward the employees of the district offices.

Mr. ROBSION. You say that instruction is for whom?

Mr. MUNROE. To the representatives. It is a memorandum, as I understand it, as stated here, to be passed around, a few copies among the central office case board representatives who were going out to pass upon cases to give the central office stamp of approval or disapproval on cases that were acted upon and settled by the district offices.

Mr. ROBSION. Who was your representative in New York at that time from the central office?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not say without looking up the record.

Mr. ROBSION. Did each fellow that went out have one of them?

Mr. MUNROE. Just a few of them.

Mr. ROBSION. How many were prepared?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Brigham here says 10 or 12 copies were prepared.

Mr. ROBSION. Did he have one himself?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Brigham?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. I presume so.

Mr. ROBSION. Was he the district representative—I mean the central office representative—at the New York office?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. What was he?

Mr. MUNROE. What was Mr. Brigham at that time? He was sort of a general utility man, was he not, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. ROBSION. But he represented the central office here at Washington, did he not?

Mr. MUNROE. As far as any member of the staff represents the office.

Mr. ROBSION. What I mean is, that he was not connected with the New York office. He was connected with the central office?

Mr. MUNROE. He has never been connected with the New York office as far as I know.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. He was sent up to New York to help straighten out things?

Mr. MUNROE. I should have to ask Mr. Lamkin. I do not remember the details.

Mr. ROBSION. Does Mr. Brigham say in the report there to him he gave those orders?

Mr. MUNROE. Do you wish me to read his statement?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE (reading):

An unofficial statement entitled "Helpful hints to C. O. C. B. representatives" was prepared by me some time in October, 1919, to be forwarded to representatives of the central office case board working in the district offices. The original copy of this unofficial statement is not in my possession, and to the best of my knowledge and belief at that time the original and all copies of the original were destroyed.

About 10 copies of this unofficial statement were prepared and before being submitted to the chief of the division were shown to three members of the staff of central office at that time. After showing the statement to these three persons I collected, as I thought, all the copies and placed them on your desk.

This is addressed to Mr. Lamkin:

It is possible that one of these copies was mislaid, picked up by a clerk and sent out by mistake. This is, however, a supposition. After that evening I saw the original copy only after certain sentences had been deleted by you. I handed the copies to a typist and had 10 or 12 copies prepared. These copies were mailed by me to the five or six central office case board representatives in the field and given to the members of the eligibility squad then in training in central office, consisting of 8 or 10 men.

The rest I have already read.

Mr. ROBSION. When he says he "put it on his desk," he is referring to Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; it is addressed to Mr. Lamkin.

Mr. ROBSION. Then he says that certain sentences were left out.

Mr. MUNROE. He refers to the chief.

Mr. ROBSION. He says that certain sentences were deleted and that he did have some of the copies prepared.

Mr. MUNROE. That is in what I have read to you.

Mr. ROBSION. And sent out to the district offices?

Mr. MUNROE. That is his statement; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. So then there is ground, as claimed by Mr. Reid of the Philadelphia office and Mr. Meyer of the New York office and the New York Evening Post, that this so-called order was sent out from the central office?

Mr. MUNROE. But it is not an order in any sense, manner, or shape.

Mr. ROBSION. Well, instructions?

Mr. MUNROE. It was not an instruction. It was a memorandum. It was not signed by anybody or addressed to anybody.

Mr. ROBSION. Well, who sent it out?

Mr. MUNROE. If I may read further—this is still Mr. Brigham's statement:

The copies sent out were not signed by the chief of division or anybody else. No instructions were given me to send them out. The chief of division did not approve the copy and issued no instructions that they be sent.

In explanation of the reasons for issuing this circular I wish to call your attention to certain factors which led to its preparation.

Mr. ROBSION. You need not go any further than that.

Mr. MUNROE. I think it is very essential, now that the thing has been questioned, that Mr. Brigham should be allowed to give his statement.

Mr. ROBSION. I asked you a specific question. It is already in the record. I was going to ask you for an answer to my question. All of that is in the record. I have asked that it be put in the record

Now will you read my question?

(The reporter read the question as follows: "So then there is ground, as claimed by Mr. Reid of the Philadelphia office and Mr. Meyer of the New York office and the New York Evening Post, that this so-called order was sent out from the central office?")

Did this gentleman who prepared that memorandum, as you call it, or suggestion—did he visit other district offices?

Mr. MUNROE. You will have to ask Mr. Lamkin. I am not familiar with these administrative details.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, the man sent out to the district office, was it his business to cooperate with the district office staff?

Mr. MUNROE. To cooperate with them; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. But if the instructions had been followed that are set out in that circular or order or instructions, there would have been no cooperation, would there?

Mr. MUNROE. Oh, yes; certainly; because these instructions had nothing absolutely to do with the disabled soldier, but they were given to these men in order to stimulate them not to waste their time by idle talk and gossip with the district officers.

Mr. ROBSION. But it did instruct the district office staff to keep their ears closed?

Mr. MUNROE. Not to the soldier, but to the district people.

Mr. ROBSION. Let me ask you now—to keep their ears closed and to listen to nothing, information or advice from the district staff, did it not?

Mr. MUNROE. In order that these cases might be——

Mr. ROBSION (interposing). Now, don't argue, Mr. Munroe; but isn't that the fact?

Mr. MUNROE. I wish to explain the fact. It is in order that nothing shall—that no man shall be put in training on hearsay or statements that are not put down in writing. It was merely business advice to do this thing in a businesslike way.

Mr. ROBSION. But since this was a human problem and he was sent up there to cooperate, or for the various district offices to cooperate, then why should he be instructed not to take any advice from the district officers but to be an autocrat and supreme in himself, as that order would indicate?

Mr. MUNROE. As this thing is not an order; as it has no official standing; and as I knew nothing about it till I saw it in the New York Evening Post, I do not see why I should be asked to justify something that did not exist as an order.

Mr. ROBSION. I am not asking you to justify it; I don't think there is any justification for it; but, Mr. Munroe, if it went to Mr. Lamkin and he cut out a part of it, and the part he did not cut out was approved, evidently then this man who visited the various district offices to line up things—didn't he have the authority—didn't Mr. Lamkin have the authority to issue that sort of instructions?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. You will have to question Mr. Lamkin himself on that.

Mr. ROBSION. But you are the head of the bureau, of the department, and Mr. Lamkin gets his orders from you; don't you say that Mr. Lamkin had the authority to pass upon and issue an instruction such as was issued by this man Brigham?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin has authority to issue orders on administrative matters, of course.

Mr. ROBSION. Well, now, if this was written up by Mr. Brigham and submitted to Mr. Lamkin, and Mr. Lamkin cut out what he though was the objectionable part and turned it over then to Mr. Brigham to have printed and copies made of it, and those were sent out from the central office, then do you say that it was without authority?

Mr. MUNROE. The other reporter has taken that letter. I wanted to read from Mr. Brigham's statement in which he says this memorandum never was approved by Mr. Lamkin or ordered to be sent out by him.

Mr. ROBSION. So then it is your contention that Mr. Brigham acted without authority?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. When did you find that out, that he acted without authority?

Mr. MUNROE. When this report was made to me.

Mr. ROBSION. What date is that?

Mr. MUNROE. In March, I think it was.

Mr. ROBSION. And where is Mr. Brigham now?

Mr. MUNROE. He is in the central office.

Mr. ROBSION. Has he been promoted or permitted to remain in the same position?

Mr. MUNROE. It had absolutely nothing to do with the disabled soldier. There is nothing reprehensible in the thing at all.

Mr. ROBSION. But you say there is nothing reprehensible when a man in the central office here sends out instructions to the district offices when he did not have authority to do it?

Mr. MUNROE. They were not instructions, sir. I have repeated that many times. They were not instructions; they were not signed; they had none of the character of instructions at all.

Mr. ROBSION. Well, I want to ask you this, Mr. Munroe. Would you approve, then, that suggestion or instruction written up by Mr. Brigham? Do you approve of it?

Mr. MUNROE. Because it is capable of misinterpretation, I disapprove of it on that ground.

Mr. ROBSION. Is that the only ground on which you disapprove of it?

Mr. MUNROE. That is all.

Mr. ROBSION. So then you don't want it in writing, but so far as you are concerned you would want these men who go from the central office to the district offices to close their ears and take no advice from anybody—to take cigarettes, but no advice. You want them to act in that manner?

Mr. MUNROE. I would not have phrased it in that way, of course.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Would that be justified on any grounds, an instruction like that going to a central office man when he was right in with the staff and with the work at the district office? Must there not be closer cooperation between the men that can talk and advise with each other over these important matters?

Mr. MUNROE. There is the very closest cooperation between the central office and the district offices.

Mr. ROBSION. Could there be a situation where the central representative should go to the district office and close his ears entirely to what the district head should say or what the district staff should say? Should they do that in any district in this United States, in either of the 14 districts?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And you would not approve of that being sent out, would you?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, what did you say to Mr. Brigham for sending out a thing like that?

Mr. MUNROE. I reprimanded him.

Mr. ROBSION. You reprimanded him?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Have you at any time put anyone in authority in your place as assistant vice chairman? I will put it this way: This memorandum that was prepared by Mr. Brigham, which you say was not an order, and which he had printed and sent out to the representatives that were going out to the district offices, if I understand you, Mr. Brigham's position on the matter was—and your position—that this was only a memoranda or instructions to be given to and used by a central offices representative that should be sent to and stationed in a district office somewhere.

Mr. MUNROE. Not an instruction; it was merely a memorandum.

Mr. ROBSION. And it was a suggestion as to his line of conduct or the relation between the central office representative and the district office head and staff; is that true?

Mr. MUNROE. The district office; not the head, but the representatives with whom he would come in contact.

Mr. ROBSION. I would like to inquire, Mr. Munroe, if at any time you appointed your stenographer vice chairman.

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Well, didn't you designate her vice chairman and have her to sign important legal matters—I mean departmental matters?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I sign all documents—and there are thousands of them—myself. When I have to be absent, they are signed by other members of the standing committee as acting vice chairman.

Mr. ROBSION. And after she had been acting for some time, didn't some head of one of the departments—the Department of Justice—advise you that she could not be vice chairman?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; she never served as vice chairman.

Mr. ROBSION. That never occurred at all? Didn't you at one time write out such an authority and give it to your clerk or stenographer?

Mr. MUNROE. Not that I have the slightest recollection of.

Mr. ROBSION. Which was signed by you, in which she was authorized to act as vice chairman of this important board?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. And didn't she undertake to act in that capacity in violation of the law?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you know anything about the contract made between either the central office here or the Philadelphia office with that Mr. Borland of Pittsburgh, in which he is paid $35 per month tuition for each student, and guaranteed a certain number of students per month?

Mr. MUNROE. I approved that contract, as I have to approve all contracts.

Mr. ROBSION. And have you learned how much money Mr. Borland has made out of that?

Mr. MUNROE. I have reason to believe that he is not more than coming out square, if he is not even losing money.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you know how many students he has in his school?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not say without looking up the figures. I haven't them in mind.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you know how many students he has?

Mr. MUNROE. I would have to look that up.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you know how many teachers he has?

Mr. MUNROE. Those figures I would have to look up; I haven't them in mind.

Mr. ROBSION. You don't know what his expenses are?

Mr. MUNROE. I would have to look that up.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, how could you say, Mr. Munroe, that he was just about coming out square?

Mr. MUNROE. From my experience with that kind of thing. I have been associated with educational institutions most of my life, and I know what that sort of thing costs, and consequently I believe the figure which he is paid is a reasonable figure.

Mr. ROBSION. If conditions obtain, as the witnesses claim do obtain in New York, who is responsible for it?

Mr. MUNROE. I don't acknowledge that those conditions do obtain.

Mr. ROBSION. I say if they do obtain.

Mr. MUNROE. That is a supposition that I can not agree to.

Mr. ROBSION. I am not asking you to agree to it. There are quite a number of men who have come here and testified about it, and some men I feel that are disinterested, and have given quite a good deal of damaging testimony about conditions in New York. I would like to know now if the conditions obtain as they say they obtain, who is responsible?

Mr. MUNROE. Naturally the district vocational officer would be responsible.

Mr. ROBSION. And you would feel it would not be the central office here at Washington?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; because the district offices have very great freedom in the management of their own offices.

Mr. ROBSION. And if the condition obtained in Philadelphia, as described by witnesses, who was responsible for that?

Mr. MUNROE. If they exist, which I do not acknowledge, of course, the district vocational officer would be responsible there.

Mr. ROBSION. And do you claim that he is all right, the Philadelphia man?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. I do not claim that anybody is perfect. I claim he is doing a very good job.

Mr. ROBSION. And you claim that for the 14 districts in the country?

Mr. MUNROE. Considering the very difficult conditions under which all the offices have to work I think they are doing a very good job.

Mr. ROBSION. What I mean is, you feel that it is reasonably good, as good as could be expected in the work?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And you could not get other men to do it better, with any reasonable effort?

Mr. MUNROE. Not at the figures we are permitted to pay.

Mr. ROBSION. When did you reprimand Mr. Brigham for putting out this memorandum?

Mr. MUNROE. When I got the report that he claimed he was responsible for it.

Mr. ROBSION. What was the nature of your reprimand?

Mr. MUNROE. I don't remember the words I used. I reprimanded him as one does an employee.

Mr. ROBSION. Did you talk, as we say, pretty straight to him?

Mr. MUNROE. I did.

Mr. ROBSION. And tell him he should not do that again, and so on?

Mr. MUNROE. I did.

Mr. ROBSION. Or did you write to him?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I talked to him.

Mr. TOWNER. The hearing will be adjourned until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

(Whereupon, at 2.50 o'clock p. m., the committee adjourned until 10 o'clock a. m., Saturday, May 1, 1920).

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Saturday, May 1, 1920.

The committee met at 10 o'clock a. m., Hon. Horace M. Towner presiding.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Munroe, you may take the stand again.

STATEMENT OF MR. JAMES P. MUNROE, VICE CHAIRMAN FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION—Resumed.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Mr. Munroe, I want to call your attention to a letter which appears to have been written by a young man by the name of Troy, Joseph A. Troy, jr., who gives his address as 723 St. Louis Avenue, East St. Louis, Ill. The letter is written to Mr. Harold Littledale, and I call attention to it simply to inquire why it is that such letters as this seem to be so frequent. I presume I might find a number of them in my own files. He says:

Mr. LITTLEDALE.

DEAR SIR: I read recently an article written by you concerning the unspeakable manner in which the Federal Board for Vocational Training has been treating the disabled service men.

I was wounded in France, June, 1918, and spent eight months in the hospital recovering from an injured spine and a gunshot wound through my foot, which causes me to limp slightly. The Federal board sent me to school these last seven months, and although I have only one more year until I get my legal degree, they tell me if I want to go another year they will give me only section 3 training, if any at all. I do not live with my folks, so if I do not get this last year I will have to forfeit my degree. I feel that I am justly entitled to it and am ready to substantiate my claim to them, but I may as well talk to the wall.

The letter seems to indicate a feeling on the young man's part that he can not get justice. Now, if this were an isolated or an individual case, I would perhaps be inclined to feel that it was due to some idiosyncrasy or peculiarity of the young man himself, but where the letters come and keep coming from all sides, I just wonder if you have any explanation to make of it. I am wondering myself what explanation I can make to satisfy my own mind.

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, I could not answer in this particular case without looking up the circumstances, but I would presume from what he states there that it was a question of the interpretation of the law; that is, under the law as it reads he was not entitled to anything except section 3 training, but, of course, I would have to verify that by looking into the case.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes. It seems from this young man's letter that he had actually had the training with compensation for some number of months—for seven months he says—but that for some reason that training had now been stopped.

Mr. MUNROE. Well, as I say, I will have to look into the case. I could not express an opinion on it without having an opportunity to look into the circumstances.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is that a usual occurrence, to have a young man given the section 2 training, or training with compensation, and then have that changed over to section 3 training?

Mr. MUNROE. There are a great many cases where the boy under a strict interpretation of the law would be entitled to nothing but section 3 training. We have stretched the law so far as to give them at least one year, and in some cases two years under section 2, with the understanding, which in most cases the boys understand, he will be transferred to section 3 training; but some time ago the board voted that in practically all cases where the boy had had one year under section 2, it should be continued automatically for another year. I presume this would come under that general ruling.

Mr. BURROUGHS. This young man has not had quite a year.

Mr. MUNROE. Well, of course, by year we mean the college year.

Mr. BURROUGHS. He has had seven months of it, but now he has been told that he can not have any more of it.

Mr. MUNROE. As I say, I should have to get the facts in the case before I could express an opinion on it.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Munroe, it seems that this man had a considerable disability. He says he was wounded in France June, 1918, and spent eight months in the hospital, "recovering from an injured spine and a gunshot wound through my foot, which causes me to limp slightly." That would indicate at least the right to training with compensation, would it not?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, the law reads that he is not entitled to training and compensation unless he is unable to "carry on" in his former or in some other occupation. Of course, we never hew close to the line on that. If we did, thousands of these boys would be shut out. We always lean to the side of giving the boy all that is possible without too great disobedience to the law.

Mr. TOWNER. I think you should be able to answer promptly upon that proposition. This man spent eight months in the hospital with spinal trouble and besides that a wound that causes him still to limp; is there any question about his being entitled to compensation?

Mr. MUNROE. That is his own statement, of course. We have not the medical certification——

Mr. TOWNER. Why do you hesitate about answering that?

Mr. MUNROE. Because, sir, I do not know the circumstances.

Mr. TOWNER. But can you not know the circumstances from the statements that this man makes?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. If they are true?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; but I want the medical verification.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me say, frankly, that if that is the attitude of the department with regard to cases of that kind, it accounts for all of these complaints and even more complaints than are coming; that is, if that is the attitude of the very head of the board with regard to these matters. I must confess that I am very much surprised.

Mr. MUNROE. Well, as I have said, sir, we always give the boy the benefit of the doubt, even when he does not strictly come within the terms of the law.

Mr. TOWNER. But you say you do not know from the statement that this man makes whether or not he is entitled to the training?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; because we can not take the boy's unsupported statement as to his condition.

Mr. TOWNER. But I am assuming it is true.

Mr. MUNROE. Well, if it is true, then, of course, we would give him the two or three years, whatever it is.

Mr. TOWNER. That is what I asked you, and yet you hesitated about answering.

Mr. MUNROE. I misunderstood you then, sir. Of course, if the statement is true, then there is no question about his getting it.

Mr. TOWNER. Have you any doubt about the statement being true?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not say——

Mr. TOWNER. Here this man has been in training for seven months without compensation; is not that a determination of the fact that he is entitled to the training with compensation?

Mr. MUNROE. As I say, it may have been one of those cases where he strictly was not entitled to any training except under section 3, and we gave him the benefit of the doubt by giving him one year under section 2, but I really ought not to express an opinion on the case, because I do not know the details of it.

Mr. TOWNER. I am not asking about the case in particular; I am asking about the facts assuming they are true.

Mr. MUNROE. Well, as I have stated——

Mr. TOWNER. You have already stated several times that you did act upon the assumption that these statements made by the boys were true.

Mr. MUNROE. Provided, of course, there is medical verification. The law requires that.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, I think we may assume that the young man having been seven months in training was entitled to this training with compensation, he having had the training with compensation during that time. Now, what justification would there be, that being true—and assuming it was justifiably so—what justification would there be of depriving him of the year that would be necessary for him to complete his course?

Mr. MUNROE. Assuming that the statement which he makes is actually so——

Mr. TOWNER. You need not repeat that over and over again, Mr. Munroe. I am assuming that it is true, and I tell you I want you to assume it is true before you answer.

Mr. MUNROE. Do I understand, then, that the Congress wishes us to disobey the law by not getting medical verification, which the law requires?

Mr. TOWNER. I am not asking you anything about that. I am asking you what you do. What is the practice of the board? We will draw our own conclusions from that proposition.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. The practice of the board, as I have said, sir, is always to give the boy the benefit of the doubt, and give him the very most that he possibly could have under the most liberal interpretation of the law. That has been our attitude always.

Mr. TOWNER. Why do you not answer the question? The question is whether there is any reason or justification for stopping the young man's training after he has had seven months of it.

Mr. MUNROE. I stated that there had been a general ruling of the board that where a boy had one year's training it should be continued automatically for a second year.

Mr. TOWNER. I wish you would report fully about this case and, if necessary, use the telegraph and present the records of the matter to the committee before the hearing is closed.

Mr. MUNROE. I will be very glad to, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. We asked you something, Mr. Munroe, yesterday, about Mr. Carl Brigham, and, as I understand, you reprimanded him some time in March. Did you promote Mr. Brigham after you reprimanded him?

Mr. MONROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Has he not been promoted?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; his duties have been changed somewhat. Mr. Matthews resigned to take a position paying him two or three times as much money as he was getting from us, and so we put Mr. Brigham in charge of the work Mr. Matthews had been in charge of.

Mr. ROBSION. Does he get an increase of salary in that position?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. It is a position of more responsibility than he had, is it not?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I think not. It is just a different responsibility, but no greater responsibility.

Mr. ROBSION. What is the difference in salary in the two positions.

Mr. MUNROE. As I say, there was no increase in salary so far as I know.

Mr. ROBSION. I understand; but what salary did Mr. Brigham get? What was Mr. Brigham's salary?

Mr. MUNROE. $3,600.

Mr. ROBSION. What was Mr. Matthew's salary?

Mr. MUNROE. $4,000.

Mr. ROBSION. Well, it is reasonable to assume, is it not, that the $4,000 position is a position of more responsibility than the $3,600 position?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I think not in this case. I think Mr. Brigham has had fully as much responsibility in the work he has been doing as in this new position. The new position is one more of routine work than the other work he was doing.

Mr. ROBSION. In reading this report that you filed yesterday from Mr. Lamkin, I observe that this so-called instruction or hard-boiled order, as it has been some times designated, was sent out in October, and sent to the Oklahoma district officer to Mr. Becker, did you know about that?

Mr. MUNROE. I read Mr. Lamkin's report.

Mr. ROBSION. That was sent from the central office here in Washington?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. If Mr. Lamkin so reported.

Mr. ROBSION. And as it was sent out to the Oklahoma office it was in its original form and no part of it had been deleted, had it?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not know, sir. I have not Mr. Lamkin's report at hand.

Mr. ROBSION. You filed excerpts or extracts from quite a number of letters you had received that spoke in words of commendation of the board, and I am glad you did that; but is it not true that the only letters that you filed or excerpts from letters that you filed were from ex-service men whose cases had been passed upon favorably and were under section 2 training and were receiving the training?

Mr. MUNROE. As I remember it, the letters were from men who were in training.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, could you not file many times more letters from fellows whose cases had not been passed upon?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir. If it came to a question of mere numbers, the number of men who would approve and be grateful for what we had done for them would be far in excess, many times in excess, of those finding fault.

Mr. ROBSION. If I understood the testimony of the witnesses from New York, there were more letters of condemnation there than you have mentioned in your testimony at that one office. Do they make any report to your office about these letters they are receiving?

Mr. MUNROE. Not to me personally; no.

Mr. ROBSION. Did you know a Mr. Harvey, of New York?

Mr. MUNROE. A Mr. Harvey?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. Connected with our organization?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. I do not remember any such name; no, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. I think he is employed or retained in some way to get up exhibits.

Mr. MUNROE. Oh, there was a Mr. Harvey who was employed, I believe, by the order of Elks.

Mr. ROBSION. Did you have any consultations with him?

Mr. MUNROE. I met him once; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Did you know anything about Mr. Harvey?

Mr. MUNROE. Nothing except the fact that I met him at that time. I met him twice, excuse me; the first time was to confer with him about the nature of some moving-picture exhibits that he was to get up for the Elks, to be shown at the moving-picture houses, as one of our various means of bringing information to the disabled boys about what the Government was anxious to do for them.

Mr. ROBSION. Did you know that Mr. Harvey's picture was in the rogue's gallery in New York?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Did you ever hear about that?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; he had nothing to do with us in any way. The only reason that I ever saw him at all was because he was employed by the Elks, and the Elks, as you know, were cooperating with us in the matter of funds.

Mr. ROBSION. How much money did he get out of the proposition?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not know, sir; I have no relations with that. I am not an Elk, and I know nothing about the Elks' affairs.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. What fund was he paid out of?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not know, sir; I know nothing about the Elks' business.

Mr. ROBSION. What was the nature of the work that Mr. Harvey was to do?

Mr. MUNROE. I understood from this conversation that I had with him that the Elks had commissioned him to get up a moving picture to be shown, covering the disabled-soldier problem.

Mr. ROBSION. To help promote the work of the Vocational Board?

Mr. MUNROE. One of the numerous means we used to advertise the Government's work.

Mr. ROBSION. Would you think that a fellow whose picture was in the rogue's gallery in New York would be a proper person for work like that?

Mr. MUNROE. I am not in the least responsible for what the Elks do.

Mr. ROBSION. I am not asking you about your responsibility, but I am asking you if you think that would be a proper person for work like that?

Mr. MUNROE. I should think not; no, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Recurring again to the matter of naming your clerk as vice chairman, do you remember about two months ago, when you were attending an association or going away somewhere, you wrote a letter designating your clerk?

Mr. MUNROE. I am sorry that I had forgotten about the circumstances of that yesterday. I looked them up when I went back to the office, and I find they were as follows: In February, I think it was, there was a conference called of all the State directors of vocational education and other persons who were cooperating with us in the States at Chicago, in connection with a meeting of the National Society for Vocational Education, and as it is the one opportunity in the year when we can get all these men, practically from all the States, together, it seemed important that the three members of the standing committee should all be there to confer with these men. There arose, of course, immediately the question as to how the signing of leases and vouchers and contracts and all that sort of thing could be carried along. So, on what we thought was good advice, we passed a vote in the standing committee designating my secretary as assistant to the vice chairman, with the understanding that under that designation she could sign these documents. The order was transmitted, as usual, to the heads of the various divisions, and the head of the disbursing department stated he could not pay vouchers, under the law, signed in that way. Consequently I gave up going to Chicago, much to my regret and with considerable loss to myself, because these conferences with the State officials are important, in order that there should not be a single day's delay in the paying of our bills or the signing of leases or anything of that sort. I endured a good deal of sacrifice for the sake of continuing the work. This young lady never signed a single document.

Mr. ROBSION. Were the three members of the Cabinet who are members of your board present when that order was made?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; this was a standing committee order.

Mr. ROBSION. What is the name of this young lady?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Miss Myers.
Mr. ROBSION. Her first name?
Mr. MUNROE. Helen K.
Mr. ROBSION. Is she still in the service?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. ROBSION. Referring again to this man Harvey, I understand that he had a lot of the stationery and other effects of the Vocational Board with which he carried on his correspondence; do you know how he got that?
Mr. MUNROE. That was the occasion of my second interview with him. I learned of this, and I immediately sent for him and told him that he was immediately to cease using the name of the Federal Board for Vocational Education in any way, because he had no official or any other connection with us. That was the reason of my meeting him the second time.
Mr. ROBSION. To what extent had he used it, if at all?
Mr. MUNROE. I do not know, sir. It was simply brought to my attention that he had stationery with our name on it, and I told him that he must cease that at once.
Mr. ROBSION. Did you not also have information that he was using it?
Mr. MUNROE. I should not have summoned him here unless I had heard he had used it.
Mr. ROBSION. And that he was also claiming to represent the board as a representative of the board?
Mr. MUNROE. Naturally, by using the stationery, he was misrepresenting the situation.
Mr. ROBSION. Well, what had Harvey been doing? What activity had he been carrying on in the use of the stationery of the board, and in a way representing the board, that caused you to take action?
Mr. MUNROE. As I have already said, I understand that he was getting up this motion picture for the Elks, and it was in connection with that that he used stationery which he had no business to use, soliciting cooperation in the making of this film.
Mr. ROBSION. Did you not also understand that he was representing that to business people and to men and women of means in an effort to collect money?
Mr. MUNROE. That was a matter for the Elks, not for us. We were not soliciting money.
Mr. ROBSION. He was using the Federal board's stationery, and so on, in writing these people in an effort to collect funds?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. ROBSION. Did you not understand that?
Mr. MUNROE. The moment I heard of it I summoned him here and told him to stop it.
Mr. ROBSION. But did you learn he was doing that?
Mr. MUNROE. I should not have summoned him otherwise; yes, sir.
Mr. ROBSION. And how long did he continue to represent the board—I mean not to represent the board, but to be connected with this board activity, after you learned that?
Mr. MUNROE. It was not a board activity; it was an Elks' activity. I had no knowledge whatever of his relation to the Elks. You would have to ask somebody connected with the Elks about that.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Well, it was your work?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; it was entirely an Elks proposition. It was one of the ways in which they proposed to cooperate with us by getting up this moving picture, but we were not in any way responsible for it. It was entirely an Elks proposition.

Mr. ROBSION. But it was to help promote the work of the Vocational Board, was it not?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. My question was, How long did he continue in that work after you had learned of this matter and went to see him the second time?

Mr. MUNROE. I did not go to see him. I summoned him here to Washington. I have no idea, sir, because it was an Elks enterprise and not ours.

Mr. ROBSION. When you learned he was using the board's stationery and undertaking to collect money, did you not also get information as to the character of the man and the reputation of Mr. Harvey?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I simply forbade him to do that thing which he had no authority to do. I was not concerned in his personal character or anything else. I simply was concerned in his using the Federal board's name without authority, and I forbade it.

Mr. ROBSION. But in his efforts to collect money, did he not claim that it was to help the Vocational Board and to rehabilitate the disabled soldiers and things like that?

Mr. MUNROE. I have no idea what he claimed at all.

Mr. ROBSION. You made no inquiry as to his standing?

Mr. MUNROE. It was none of my affair. He was not an employee of the board, and I had no business to inquire into his personal affairs.

Mr. ROBSION. It has been suggested that I ask you if your board, headed by Dr. Prosser or some member of the board, took this man Harvey and introduced him to the Elks and established the connection.

Mr. MUNROE. I certainly did not. I never heard of the man until he came down to ask advice about getting pictures or photographs for this motion picture.

Mr. ROBSION. On his office, did not Harvey display the board's name in New York?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not know, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Did not you and Dr. Prosser have your pictures taken in his office?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Or in New York in connection with the work?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I never had my picture taken in New York.

Mr. ROBSION. And if the Vocational Board's name was on this man Harvey's office in New York, you did not observe it.

Mr. MUNROE. I never was in his office. I do not know where it was.

Mr. DONOVAN. Dr. Munroe, I want to ask you one question: When the debate was up on the floor of the House on the Darrow bill—this is a little personal, and if you do not care to answer it you do not need to—it was stated by one of the Members of the House in that debate, and you will recall that the Darrow bill was a bill increasing the compensation of the married men and single men, it was stated that this board was a Democratic board, meaning the Vocational Education Board, particularly the men in the administration. Have you any objection to telling whether you are either a Democrat or a Republican or a Prohibitionist?

Mr. MUNROE. None whatever, sir. I suppose I should be designated as an Independent Republican; that is, I have generally voted, practically, I think, always the Republican ticket in Massachusetts, except when Billy Russell was up for governor. I did vote, when I first voted, for Mr. Cleveland, as many Republicans did, and I may have voted once or twice for Democratic candidates since.

Mr. DONOVAN. But in general——

Mr. MUNROE (interposing). In general, I vote the Republican ticket.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Munroe, you voted for Mr. Wilson, did you not?

Mr. MUNROE. The first time; yes, sir.

Mr. DONOVAN. Did you the last time?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Mr. Munroe, since I put in the former letter from Mr. Joseph A. Troy, jr., I find still another one which Mr. Littledale has called to my attention, which had been written to him by Mr. Troy under date of April 28, 1920, and I would like this letter also to go into the record, if you please. The letter reads as follows:

EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL., April 28, 1920.

Mr. HAROLD A. LITTLEDALE,
New York Evening Sun, New York City, N. Y.

DEAR MR. LITTLEDALE: Received your letter of the 26th. I highly appreciate your kind offer to bring my case to the attention of the investigation going on in Washington.

The following is the gist of my case:

Enlisted July 28, 1917, and at the time was earning my way through law school and had completed one year.

Wounded by enemy fire June 24, 1917.

Sent back to United States September 23, 1917.

Present disability: Slight limp and weakness of left foot and recurring stiffness and pain in neck, accompanied at times by pains in arms and headaches. Doctors tell me this injury will return in after years.

X-ray examinations since leaving the service have failed to disclose this neck injury, although the Army records show it. The latest picture showed an anatomical irregularity, but the doctor gave his personal opining, saying he believed this was normal in my case.

In my chart my disability has been figured with respect to my foot with an utter disregard to the spinal injury. Case board at San Francisco thought me worthy of section 2 training, and my chart is full of telegrams urging approval, but the swivel-chair experts in Washington seem to be able to overrule the opinions of men who examined me in person.

Washington gave Mr. Baird, of the traveling case board, the authority to put me in section 2 training if he saw fit, and on his approval and the permission of the district vocational officer I came to St. Louis University. Some months later they informed me I was being trained by mistake. They tell me I have no need of further education, although I need only one more year to complete my course. The district vocational officer at St. Louis flatly refuses to give me in writing why they will not give me this one year. My record at the university will prove my earnestness.

With a multitude of thanks, I am,

JOSEPH A. TROY, Jr.,
1725 St. Louis Avenue.

Mr. Munroe, in the course of your testimony yesterday you spoke of certain changes, or a shake-up, as you referred to it, as being necessary, in your opinion, to bring about a better morale in the New York office, and referred, if I remember correctly, to one or two individuals whom you thought should be transferred from New York to some other office.

Mr. MUNROE. It was just a personal opinion; yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That was your personal opinion. You did refer, however, to Mr. Noyes, who had testified here at considerable length, as being a man, as I recall your testimony, who had the right point of view, the right temperament, and a man who was, in your opinion, a right-minded man.

Mr. MUNROE. Cooperative spirit, I think, was the term I used.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I understand from what you said, that while you might not accept all Mr. Noyes's conclusions in the course of the testimony he gave here, you would feel that any statement of fact he made could be relied upon.

Mr. MUNROE. I think you must have misunderstood me, sir. I simply stated that I thought he had the right cooperative spirit. I expressed no opinion as to his judgment of facts.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Well, would you or would you not consider him trustworthy?

Mr. MUNROE. I think he means to be.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You testified, I think, that when Mr. Noyes said that in his opinion the New York office seemed to be suffering from a "kind of paralysis" between the 1st of November and the middle of January, that you thought he was mistaken in that conclusion.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. He goes on, however, in the course of the testimony which he gave, to state the reasons why he thought the New York office had fallen into that state of paralysis, and I will just quote a few lines of his testimony:

> The supervisor of training and the district vocational officer were unable to agree upon a method, upon a procedure by which these orders could be carried out. We had the authority put in our hands to put men in training under certain restrictions, and it was after hammering and hammering that finally the procedure was gotten through by which that could be done. Meanwhile, as you can see by the statistics of it and the falling off during those two months of the men that were put into training, the training officers spent a large part of their time writing and rewriting and rewriting their recommendations, simply in order to get them into the form that was required by the district vocational officer, and they were no sooner done than next day or the next week around would come a new order not to proceed from that day forward doing this new method, but to go back to the past dates and rewrite them over and over again. It got to be a perfect joke in the office.

He was talking then about a period when Mr. Farwell was at the head of the office, the period from the 1st of November, as he says, to the 1st of the following January. What would you say as to the correctness of that statement?

Mr. MUNROE. As far as I was observing the office during that time I think he has, to say the least, exaggerated.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Again, he says:

> Now, as a matter of fact, what happens? You go into the field, and in the first place you have to apologize to the treasurer of the school because he hasn't got any money.

Digitized by Google

He is talking now about present conditions, not past conditions.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes.

Mr. BURROUGHS (reading):

One of the men in the follow-up section told me two weeks ago that he just had taken a trip through New York State. He visited nine professional schools in that State and not one of those schools had been paid for the tuition of any man in those schools.

Mr. MUNROE. I have forgotten whether or not I testified that at this time all tuition bills up to 30 days ago are paid, so far as I am aware.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That was two weeks ago and his testimony was given on April 13.

Mr. MUNROE. So far as the vouchers have come into the office they are practically current, within the 30 days, of course.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Later he said:

I know the bills were held up in the central office sometimes for many weeks before they were paid. I don't know why.

Judge Towner asked him:

After they had been passed?

And his answer was:

After they had passed the local office and had been sent on. They were not paid.

Now, again, I quote from his testimony:

Now, if you will let me give an illustration. For example, we can not send a man to Alfred University, an institution as well known as that, without having the case passed upon by the central office, but we can send a man around the corner to a cobbler shop to learn cobbling without saying anything to them about it. They make that difference in the institutional course. We can't put a man in an institutional course without the central office passing upon it.

Mr. MUNROE. He is quite mistaken about that.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Then Mr. Donovan asked him this question:

I thought I understood you to say that there was a recent ruling which permitted the district office to place a man in an institutional course that did not take over two years and that did not cost more than $500.

And Mr. Noyes answered:

Provided that institution has been approved by the central office.

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, we have to make sure that these boys are sent to reputable institutions. Unfortunately there are a good many in this country that are not reputable.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Take the institution he speaks of, Alfred University, which I understand is one of the most reputable in that section of the country; he says that even in that case the matter has to be submitted to Washington.

Mr. MUNROE. I think he he is mistaken, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Then, speaking about the authority which the men have in the district vocational offices, I asked Mr. Noyes this question:

The point I am trying to make is, is it possible, do you think, to get many men now of the type that you think are suitable for this work; men who would not be influenced primarily by the pecuniary or monetary consideration involved?

Digitized by Google

He answered:

If they can be given more authority, so that they will feel that they are doing the job and putting the thing over. The man doesn't live by bread alone, and men don't work for wages alone. I have seen it over and over again in our office.

Mr. BURROUGHS. So you think if the men could feel that they had some responsibility in the matter and could go about and work out something on their own initiative, a good many men might be obtained who would be willing to do it aside from the money consideration involved?

Mr. NOYES. If they can be given authority, just exactly as if the central office gives authority to the local office; if the head of the office or the heads of the sections give authority to the men under them, they will respond immediately.

What would you say in regard to that?

Mr. MUNROE. It is a matter of opinion, and, of course, a matter of local administration which Mr. Lamkin is more competent to pass on than I am; but I do not see how, without absolutely cutting these district offices adrift and letting them do just as they please, we could give them any more authority than we have given them now. I venture to say that we are the most decentralized organization in the Government at this time.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Do you know of certain rules of administration that were issued some time in August last, I think, that have been referred to here in this testimony?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not identify them simply from the dates. If you could give me some other identification——

Mr. BURROUGHS. I asked Mr. Noyes this question?

Do you know, Mr. Noyes, of the issuance of certain rulings by the central board here some time in August, I think, this last year, certain orders or administrative rulings?

Mr. NOYES. To conform to the—yes; I know about them.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You saw those rulings when they were issued?

Mr. NOYES. Yes.

Mr. BURROUGHS. How did they impress you?

Mr. NOYES. As giving the impression to the employees of the board that they must be more restrictive in the allowances of recommendations of men to be put in training.

Mr. BURROUGHS. They seemed to be rules of exclusion?

Mr. NOYES. Yes.

Mr. BURROUGHS. And not to have been put out in the spirit that seemed to you to be the spirit in which this law was enacted by Congress? Is that right?

Mr. NOYES. That is my impression.

Mr. MUNROE. I could not possibly identify them from that description, because I know we have never sent out any rules or regulations that could be interpreted in that way. They have always been the opposite—to give the widest possible latitude and to stretch the law to the utmost limit so that the boys may get what we desire them to have.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Would you recognize them under the name of Miscellaneous 150?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; those are our general instructions; but I should interpret them in exactly the opposite way from which Mr. Noyes has interpreted them.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Are they available so they could be produced here?

Mr. MUNROE. Oh, yes.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You would not call them rules of exclusion?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Far from it. I should call them rules of the utmost inclusion.

Mr. BURROUGHS. And they were not so intended by the board?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Did you know they had been so interpreted by your officers in the field?

Mr. MUNROE. It is the first I have ever heard of it. This is the first criticism of that sort I have ever heard.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Let me ask you just one other question. Did you know of any rule or order issued by Mr. Lamkin to the effect that a man once given section 2 traning should be entitled to it and not be changed over to section 3 training?

Mr. MUNROE. I think that is what I have already referred to as a ruling made by the board some time ago, that where a man had been in training one year it should be continued automatically for a second year—that is, section 2 training.

Mr. BURROUGHS. And that is the policy of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That is all.

TESTIMONY OF MR. WILLIAM M. GODWIN.

(The witness was duly sworn by the acting chairman.)

Mr. TOWNER. Please give your full name to the reporter.

Mr. GODWIN. William M. Godwin.

Mr. TOWNER. And your residence and post office?

Mr. GODWIN. My home is Clinton, Mo.

Mr. TOWNER. That is your post-office address generally, Clinton, Mo.?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. What is your business now?

Mr. GODWIN. I am vocational adviser for the Federal board at the branch office of district No. 9, Kansas City, Mo.

Mr. TOWNER. You are making your home now, I suppose, in Kansas City, Mo.?

Mr. GODWIN. Well, that is my Federal station. My home is at Clinton.

Mr. TOWNER. What is the address of the board there?

Mr. GODWIN. 311 Massachusetts Building.

Mr. TOWNER. How long have you been with the board?

Mr. GODWIN. Since the 2d of February, 1919.

Mr. TOWNER. Did you desire to make a general statement regarding the work of the board there?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir. My mission here, as I understand it, is to tell something of the way the work was conducted in the hospitals, having been in the hospitals of the ninth district until they were finally evacuated on the 15th of October last.

Mr. TOWNER. You may proceed in your own way.

Mr. GODWIN. I was called to St. Louis the latter part of January. I met a man who was very much at cross purposes with the Government and everything in general, having received a bad wound in his left arm, and after about a day's wrestling, before I had been initiated into the service of the Government, we got him into training at the David Rankin School in St. Louis, to make a stationary engineer of him. His attitude was entirely changed toward the Government within 24 hours. He seemed to be quite a happy man when I last saw him. I went up to Camp Funston. It was stated that there were about 35,000 men in Funston and they were being discharged in shoals. There were three of us working there, and in an effort to keep up to the rush, take care of the disabled men, we sometimes surveyed as many as 75 in a day, 25 to the man, which was entirely too many, but the press and the men and the people and Congress all seemed to be in a hurry to get the men home. One of my duties was to go to what we called the recreation hall every morning and to meet the casuals who had come in the day before to be discharged as soon as possible, and to tell them of the privileges and advantages that might accrue to the disabled men under the law governing the Federal board. I met bodies of men like that, from 50 to 500, every morning for weeks, telling them about the advantages and opportunities. I was allowed not to exceed 15 minutes, but after getting through with my talk the men would gather around me and ply me with personal questions, and sometimes take as much as two hours of my time talking to groups of men, so that we disseminated the knowledge as fast as we could to the men. After being there a few weeks I was detailed to go to Fort Riley a part of the time. At first we were not permitted to go into the wards where the crippled men were, but in just a few days that was changed and we were given free access to the men at Fort Riley that were crippled and being operated upon. In connection with the vocational service that was established there under Maj. Berry, we had free access from that time on to the men in the wards, and Col. Peed, who was in command at Fort Riley, volunteered to suggest to me, after a few days there, that if there was anything in that fort that I wanted that I might have it for the asking. I asked liberally and was never turned down very often. I met the men en masse and continued that by going to the places of recreation at the Y. M. C. A., the Red Cross, and the Knights of Columbus, and between the acts in the picture shows, and would tell them what the Federal board had for the men. I had not been there very long when talking to them one night I said, "Gentlemen, this is your chance, not mine. You are at liberty to approach me at any time, anywhere, on any part of the grounds, and I will tell you all that I know about it in about a minute, any time of the day or night; do not hesitate to call on the representative of the Federal board. My name is Godwin and if you can not think of that, just say 'Hey, there,' you need not delay. If you want to call on me, do it." It was not an unusual thing for half a dozen boys to call me "Dad." I would stop and talk to them.

The night I made that proposition was a very disagreeable night, and I was half a mile from the office, and an ex-service negro came up and said, "Sir, may I talk to you?" I said, "Cut that out. I want to be as good as my promise, even if it is a bad night." From that time on I was at the service of the men, and some of the most pleasant recollections are in connection with the men that I met at Fort Riley, giving them what advice that I could. I got on good terms with them and gave them instructions. There were a few obstreperous fellows, of course, but I managed to keep my temper most of the time and to direct them as I thought they should be directed.

Mr. TOWNER. Your experience with the medical officers in charge of the hospitals then was that as soon as they understood what you wanted they cooperated?

Mr. GODWIN. They were in hearty sympathy; yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. In sympathy with the work?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir. I met Dr. Zachritz, one of the members of the discharge board just a few days ago and was recounting matters that occurred there. They got to be a little bit strict upon the percentage. That was under the days of percentage. They were not giving the boys what I thought was a high enough percentage. I went into the office and had a talk with Dr. Zachritz out there and it had the effect of giving the men, I thought, more liberal disabilities, giving them a better chance.

Mr. TOWNER. The men whom you came into contact with, as a usual rule, who had determinable disabilities, were anxious to talk to you about the training, were they?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir; after I talked to them. At first there was an aloofness about it.

Mr. TOWNER. In other words, it was necessary for you to sympathize with them in order to win their confidence?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. And those men who were working with you in the same class, were they as able to win the confidence of the boys as you were?

Mr. GODWIN. I think so.

Mr. TOWNER. You had a chance to observe them, are the men usually engaged in this work able to win the confidence of the boys?

Mr. GODWIN. That has been my experience, every one of them. Mr. Beck, who now represents the central office in St. Louis; Mr. B. G. Baird, at Wichita; Mr. Robertson, at Dallas, Tex., and Mr. Murray are men that the boys would slap on the shoulder, after they got acquainted with them, and put their arms around them and talk to them as confidentially as they would to their own fathers and brothers.

Mr. TOWNER. It has been suggested that the surgeons were reluctant to let go of the boys in the hospitals, to discharge them even for training. What has been your experience with regard to that?

Mr. GODWIN. My experience is that the men themselves thought the surgeons were reluctant, but it was a matter of surgical and medical judgment, and I have no right to pass upon it.

Mr. TOWNER So far as your observation went you think the surgeons dealt fairly, and in accordance with their best judgment?

Mr. GODWIN. I certainly do.

Mr. TOWNER. With regard to the discharge of the boys?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. I suppose naturally that a boy in the hospital is anxious to get out?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir; they are.

Mr. TOWNER. And would complain bitterly because he was not allowed to get out?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. And perhaps think that the doctors were keeping him there when he should not be there?

Mr. GODWIN. It was the general talk among the men, Mr. Chairman, that they were being held there in order that the officers might hold their jobs with the Government, when, as a matter of fact, nearly every one was more anxious to go home than the men were.

Mr. TOWNER. I see. You think that charge was a natural one, psychological, and, as a matter of fact, was not well founded?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. You may proceed with your statement.

Mr. GODWIN. I found the same condition largely existing among the nurses and the aides that existed among the surgeons and the doctors. They were earnest, faithful, and conscientious, and I should like to say here that anything that is being done for the men in uniform ought to be done for the nurses; I think they are a magnificent body of women.

There are some few faultfinders at Fort Riley. One, Pat Short, had a little rheumatism in one knee and he complained bitterly about everything. Another one, John L. Allen, had his neck broken and his head carried in a plaster paris cast, was the brightest sunshiniest, happiest man you ever wanted to see. I could not but contrast those two men. Having left Pat, with a little rheumatism in one knee, less than 50 yards up the road, I met Allen, and I said, "How are you coming?" He said, "All right; everything is fine, Mr. Godwin, my country and my God are on my side." Just the difference between the two men. His head was held just so [indicating] in a plaster paris cast.

The work in connection with the educational service at Fort Riley was satisfactory. The men were directed to read up on the subjects that they might possibly think they would be interested in, while in their wards and being treated. Books were carried to them by the aides and instructions were given to them in agriculture and engineering, law, and all of those courses. I found one Lieut. Fry, a splendid fellow, who was convalescing, a college man, who had been 18 years in business, a thorough railroad engineer. Some of the boys studying steam engineering were not altogether satisfied with the work they were getting from the educational service there, and I asked permission of Maj. Berry, which he granted, to let Lieut. Fry aid, and he soon had a class of boys whose noses were in the books all the time. He had gotten them interested very greatly. I am sorry to have lost trace of Lieut. Fry, because I think he needs the assistance of the Federal board or the Government at any rate.

The men at Fort Riley were certainly treated well, and in the main appreciated the treatment, except for the fact that they wanted to go home. Everything that was said in Washington and elsewhere about hurrying the boys home they read apparently with avidity, forgetting the fact that professional judgment in the matter of a man's health ought to supersede anything that might be said a thousand miles away.

For instance, in the St. Louis office just the other day a man came in who had tuberculosis. He had been six or seven months in a sanitarium. He thought he was cured and insisted upon returning home, and since he had been home he had had a violent hemorrhage.

Digitized by Google

I said to him, "The thing for you to do is to hurry back to the sanitarium." He admitted that his treatment had been very beneficial to him, but he said, "No; I am going to fight it out a while." "Take the advice of the doctor and go back," I said. That is the feeling of the men. They want to have their own way in many cases; they should have it most of the time. I stayed at Fort Riley until two or three days of the evacuation of the hospital.

I will give you an instance, with your permission, of Walter Minor, who is the man who has to be wheeled about in a chair. One Sunday evening I said, "Walter, let us go to the picture show?" It was not half a mile over to the Red Cross, where they were going to have the picture show. He said, "They will not let me go." I got permission of the nurse and wheeled him over to the picture show, and we had a good time. That is just a sample of the way the men were treated at Fort Riley.

I was sent to Liberal, Kans., to look after some men. One man came in to see me and he apologized for its being about 8 o'clock in the evening. I said, "That is all right, come in any time of the day or night." Then, a man came in at 11 o'clock. I was leaving at 3 o'clock in the morning. I had already retired, but I had him come in, and after he finished he thanked me very greatly for permitting him to disturb my rest. So far as I could find out that is the attitude of the men with whom I have come in contact.

I was then detailed to Fort Des Moines, under Col Jeuneman, who is in command; and, like Col. Peed, he said, "If there is anything you want, ask for it." I talked to the men at the Y. M. C. A. and the Knights of Columbus shows, and I talked with the nurses: I went into the wards and met the men and talked with them on the parade ground, when I was not otherwise busy, and discussed with them their futures and found some men who were badly mangled, one or two who showed a very ugly disposition toward the Government. I talked with them frequently and finally they admitted that they had had a wrong vision and said that they would change their attitude.

It must be borne in mind that a large majority of the men with whom we come in contact have been men of the lower educational qualifications and, unfortunately, it seems that as many as 75 per cent have had less than a fifth-grade education and a great many of them had no education whatever until they got into the Army and had been taught to write their names and possibly read a little. That class of man has been a very difficult class with which to deal. They are suspicious; they have the natural element of rebellion in them, and rebelled against the Army discipline which they had to undergo, and in a great many cases they feel that somebody is trying to put something over on them all the time. It has been a difficult thing to meet the man who feel that way—not all of them feel that way, but a good percentage; it is a difficult thing to meet men with that feeling and overcome it and turn it around into one of admiration.

For instance, just a few days ago a gentleman came into the office at Kansas City. He was very ugly at first. He said, "I have been discharged seven months and I have had nothing done." I said, "Wait a minute and let me get your file. How many letters have you had from the board from St. Louis and Kansas City offices?" He said, "Oh, I do not know how many." I said, "How many have you replied to?" He said, "I did not reply; it was not worth while." Then I lectured him a little on the ordinary courtesy if he should receive a letter. I said, "You have been discharged seven months, and you have had seven or eight letters written to you by the Kansas City and St. Louis offices, and you live within 20 miles of Kansas City and yet have not replied to any of them. It is your fault and not ours."

I lectured him along that line. Then he wanted to know whether, if he took the training he would have to be under military discipline. I said, "I am very sorry to tell you that you do not." Then I lectured him a little along that line of obedience to authority. Then he wanted to know if he would have to wear the uniform, and I said that it was the greatest badge of honor that could be worn, and I am sorry to say that you do not have to wear the uniform when in training. When a man speaks against the uniform in my presence he is talking against my country, and you must pardon me if I get a little bit enthusiastic about what I am going to say to you. When we got through he came over and slapped me on the shoulder and said, "I am glad that I came to see you." Some time later he ran in almost breathless and said, "I came to town, and I came to see you and to thank you for what you have done for me." That is the attitude.

Mr. TOWNER. Did he accept training?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir; in the Agricultural College of Missouri.

Mr. TOWNER. Out of every 100 men, I suppose, there is a certain proportion of natural growlers and ingrates?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Under normal conditions, as we say, there is a certain proportion of those who are dissatisfied with whatever conditions exist. As I understand your testimony, you say that the proportion of these dissatisfied persons among the boys who would be subject to training would be greater than the normal proportion?

Mr. GODWIN. I think so; slightly.

Mr. TOWNER. Those men have to be given special consideration in order to make them at all agreeable to the conditions?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. It is your experience that those who deal with the men at these offices and in the hospitals were considerate to them or did they seem to be offended at their attitude?

Mr. GODWIN. I have never heard a grouchy conversation among the men connected with the Federal board about any of the men. I have never heard of but one case; that was my own. I ran across one of the conscientious objectors and I did not spare him much. I left him. I was in a bad temper.

Mr. TOWNER. Is there any further statement that you desire to make?

Mr. GODWIN. I have one or two brief communications that I received, one from Nic Rene Wilhemly, whom I met at Fort Des Moines, dated November 29, 1919, from 6100 Watermen Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

6100 WATERMEN AVENUE, ST. LOUIS, MO.,
November 29, 1919.

Mr. W. M. GODWIN,
St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR MR. GODWIN: Perhaps you remember the writer's case and perhaps you also remember his pessimistic attitude at the time when you made out his papers at Fort Des Moines, in regard toward the future board and the training he was desiring.

I have been here in St. Louis since November 20. The Federal board had me assigned to the Washington University in behalf of my course for South American trade, and I had my assignment within one week after my discharge October 14. Duck hunting and in consequence an attack of bronchitis prevented me from being here sooner.

But what I wanted to say to you, Mr. Godwin, is in regard to your view of my case. I can not express the gratitude I feel for you, and I feel myself very much indebted to you, indeed, for I am confident that solely your efforts brought about the training I have been aspiring for.

Your predecessor had me pretty nearly discouraged with his line of civil service he was offering me as substitute to my wishes, to the extent that I had quite preparatory training, and your humanly interest in us boys gave me confidence again in the board.

So I wish to apologize for the prejudice I was nursing against the board at the time, and again I wish to thank you from the bottom of my heart for the genuine interest and enthusiasm with which you took up my case. My hope is to again meet you personally some day and thank you personally. In the meantime I wish to remain your friend.

NIC RENE WILHELMY.

As to my trip to St. Joseph, Mo., after I went to Kansas City, we had a man in training, Mr. Raymond L. Bearer. He was in placement training. He had been for two or three years in a printing office and was put in a printing establishment, but under the rules of the union they were not entitled to pay him. So, when I went to St. Joseph—I had been there two or three times—he came to see me. He was very much depressed, had only $10 in money, had married since being discharged, he was out of employment, and there was nothing that he could do. He was very much depressed. He began to tell me about his wife and her condition, and tears began to roll down his face. I said, "You must quit crying or you will get me crying." He said, "I have only $10." I said, "What is the Red Cross for, if it is not to fall back on in such a time? They have $35,000,000 subscribed by the American people." The Red Cross promptly loaned him $50, when he asked for $20, and I said, "I will take a long shot at you, Raymond. I do not know whether my action will be ratified by the board or not, but I will put you in school to-day. You had five months in a commercial college before you entered the service. Would you like to complete your commercial course?" He said that it would delight him. I called up Mr. Platt, of one of the schools at St. Joseph, and explained the situation: told him that I was assuming no responsibility for the board, but that if he would take him, pending the ratification of my action by the board at St. Louis, I would send him up to be enrolled. He told me to send him up and he was enrolled. Here is a letter from him to me addressed at Kansas City, dated St. Joseph, Mo., December 6, 1919:

ST. JOSEPH, MO., December 6, 1919.

Mr. W. M. GODWIN,
411-412 Massachusetts Building, Kansas City, Mo.

MY DEAR SIR: It is with the greatest of pleasure that I take in writing this letter, trying to express my thanks that are due you for being so kind as to take the responsibility of placing me in training, and I am sure that I will get along fine.

Now, really, I am so proud of the kindness that you and the Red Cross people did for me that I can not find words enough to express my gratitude, only that I appreciate it most immensely.

So, thanking you again for your kindness, I am,

Very faithfully, yours, RAYMOND L. BEARER.

My action was promptly ratified by wire by the St. Louis board and the young man is in training and is doing finely. The men do come to us at Kansas City frequently and when they go into the hospitals we visit them and find that the work is satisfactory and that they seem to appreciate it. The four men that are in the Kansas City office, with whom I have been intimately associated since the middle of October, I think they all feel like I do toward the men, and the members in the St. Louis office. We have to bow to the decision of the medical officers about the health condition of the men. I have in past times had controversies with the doctors, but they know more about the physical condition than I do. I feel when a man comes to me that I am placed in the attitude almost of his guardian until I can get him landed in section 2 training, and I lose no opportunity in acting upon the theory that it is my business to put the man in training if he will accept it.

A great many refuse to accept training. Some because of their home relations. A young man lives in my own town. He was in France. I was chairman of the home service section of the Red Cross. His mother came to me almost three times a week trying to find out why her boy did not write her every day. He was discharged in December, 1918, and came home. Before I had anything to do with the Federal board I urged him to accept the training. His mother objected, she as well as the boy. I went to his home some few weeks ago. He lost his voice, having been gassed. His mother was willing for him to apply for compensation if it did not require that he go to some hospital somewhere to be treated, but would not give her consent to have him sent to Columbia, Mo., to take a course in agriculture, because he had enough money coming to him under the Sweet bill to make a payment on the little farm which he expected to buy. I had to kidnap the boy, take him to my house, and get him to fill out his papers for compensation, but he absolutely refused to let me survey him preparatory to entering upon training, because his mother objected.

Mr. TOWNER. What has been your experience in regard to the delays in final action in determining whether or not the boy was qualified or entitled to training?

Mr. GODWIN. There have been some delays, especially since I have been in the Kansas City office. When I was at the hospitals we had all the papers at hand. We send out a letter asking him to bring all the papers relative to his service, his discharge, compensation and proposed training under the Federal board. The man will frequently appear with that letter and that letter only. Then, he has to go back and we will give him an envelope already addressed to put his discharge paper in, his certificate of discharge or his notice that compensation has been granted him, and sometimes it will be weeks before we get that, although the letter is put in his hand that we can not proceed without getting those papers. Yet he will sometimes keep those things in his pocket a week or two or three weeks before he returns them. Of course, we can do nothing until then.

Another thing that has been recalled to me, in the Kansas City office we have had only one stenographer for four men. We could not get any more stenographers or we would have had them, because stenographers get more than we are allowed by the Federal board to pay them. Recently we got a substitute stenographer who is very hard of hearing. We have done the best we could. We went through the files then while we had her the two or three weeks and got up the work generally. There were some cases held in the files because we did not have the physical force to go through the files. Some cases have been delayed on that account.

Mr. TOWNER. Were these conditions reported to the board here in Washington?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir; they were reported to the St. Louis office.

Mr. TOWNER. Kansas City is a branch of the St. Louis office?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. What reply was made by the St. Louis office to that request?

Mr. GODWIN. About getting a stenographer?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. GODWIN. To get one if we could under the allowance of $100 a month.

Mr. TOWNER. And you could not get a stenographer in Kansas City competent for $100 a month?

Mr. GODWIN. No, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. What is the prevailing rate there?

Mr. GODWIN. From $125 up.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I should like to ask you just one or two questions. You are a vocational adviser?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What would you say would be on an average the proportion of the total number of cases surveyed in any given district by a vocational adviser that would be recommended for training by the case board? Is there any percentage that you would expect to find?

Mr. GODWIN. This is a guess; at least 80 per cent.

Mr. BURROUGHS. At least 80 per cent of the total number surveyed?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Should be recommended for either section 2 or section 3 training?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Do you think anything like that prevails in your district—No. 9?

Mr. GODWIN. Well, sir, I do not know. The figures could be obtained. They have not been yet, for the reason that the medical authorities had not completed the rating of the papers.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I have here a copy of the Vocational Summary which states on its face that it is published monthly by the Federal Board for Vocational Education. This is volume 2, No. 5. It is the September, 1919, issue. On pages 92 and 93 of this Summary appears what purports to be Federal board registration of disabled men for vocational training and placement—a summary statement of progress of cases by rehabilitation districts by periods to August 23, 1919. I find, according to this table, that to date—March 15, 1919, in district No. 9 there were 2,099 cases surveyed by the educational adviser, and I find that to date—March 15, 1919—there were 302 cases actually recommended for training by the case board in the same district.

Mr. GODWIN. That was March, 1919?

Mr. BURROUGHS. To date—March 15, 1919.

Mr. GODWIN. I see.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Then to date—April 26, 1919—I find there were a total of 6,033 cases surveyed by the vocational adviser in that district, and to date—April 26, 1919—there was a total of 668 cases actually recommended for training by the case board.

To date—May 24, 1919—there were 7,244 cases surveyed by the vocational adviser, and to date—May 24, 1919—there were 1,067 cases recommended for training by the case board.

To date—June 28, 1919—there were 9,484 cases surveyed by the vocational adviser, and on the same date there were 1,682 cases recommended for training by the case board.

To date—July 26, 1919—the total surveyed by the vocational adviser was 11,204, and on the same date the total recommended for training by the case-board was 1,891.

To date, August 23, 1919, the total surveyed by the vocational adviser was 13,154, and on the same date the total number recommended for training by the case board was 2,078.

If my mathematics is correct and I have reckoned it correctly, it is about one-seventh instead of being 80 per cent.

Mr. GODWIN. Your question was how many would be eligible, as I understood it, sir?

Mr. BURROUGHS. I intended to ask how many of those actually surveyed for training would be actually recommended for training later by the case board.

Mr. GODWIN. That is what I thought your question was and I answered it that way.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That is just what this is.

Mr. GODWIN. The figures you have there were a year ago?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes, sir.

Mr. GODWIN. The board has been catching up since then.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You think that the figures to-day would show an altogether different percentage?

Mr. GODWIN. It is merely a guess, but I think there would be a very material increase of the percentage.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You think it would be around 75 or 80 per cent?

Mr. GODWIN. I am offering an opinion. I think that the men in the district office at St. Louis are using every effort, because they work night shifts there and the men do not quit when the hour comes to quit.

Mr. BURROUGHS. There would not, to your mind, be any reason, if the office was working on a proper standard of efficiency, why that total of surveyed cases of 13,154 as on August 23, 1919, there should actually be recommended for training by the case board only 2,078?

Digitized by Google

Mr. GODWIN. I think that might very well be the condition under the most favorable circumstances that existed at that time. I think that is no mark of lack of efficiency.

Mr. BURROUGHS. How do you account for it?

Mr. GODWIN. By the simple fact that owing to the status of the officers and the men relative to the law governing the Federal board the cases could not be decided instantly.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That is subsequent to July 11 and you were not tied up by complications with the War Risk Insurance Bureau at that time? That was in August. I guess perhaps some of these were before that date.

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. And that might account for some of it?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You think if the figures could be obtained for the present time that they would make an altogether better showing than this?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir; that is my opinion.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That is all.

Mr. ROBSION. Pursuing that thought a little further, Mr. Godwin, I believe from the statement read by a member of the committee who was just questioning you it appeared that there had been contact established with 6,033 cases in April, 1919, and you say that 80 per cent of those, in your opinion, would be entitled to one training or the other?

Mr. GODWIN. Finally; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. That would be more than 4,800 of the 6,000 that would receive a favorable report—that is, a decision for one training or the other—but it appears that up until August, 1919, only 2,078 cases had been passed upon favorably, and that would leave 2,800 which had been pending for at least four months and had not been passed upon?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. How would you account for a delay like that?

Mr. GODWIN. I am not in a position to know those things. Do you want my opinion?

Mr. ROBSION. If you do not know, the shortest answer would be that you do not know.

Mr. GODWIN. I have an opinion.

Mr. ROBSION. You need not give me that now. I did not ask for that.

Mr. GODWIN. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. You do not know of the conditions in New York or Philadelphia?

Mr. GODWIN. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. You say at the places you were they called you "Dad"?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. If they called you "Dad" generally, you are a good fellow. I can say that for the record. People never make a mistake like that in calling a fellow "Dad."

I was very much interested in some of the special cases which you mentioned. You seem to realize that early action was of the greatest importance to the soldier.

Mr. GODWIN. In every kind of an enterprise, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. But in this enterprise you had two very great impelling motives, one a business proposition?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And the other a human proposition?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. The soldier was in the attitude that delay would mean loss and defeat of the very purpose of the law, was he not?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir; I felt that way. It would at least produce an unpleasant feeling of mind on the soldier.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you think much about your salary while in this work?

Mr. GODWIN. No; I do not. I had been working ever since the war began for the Government, and I had pretty nearly lost sight of that.

Mr. ROBSION. A fellow to be successful in this work must not have that as his aim?

Mr. GODWIN. No. If I had, I should not have entered the service at all. I was making more money than my salary amounts to.

Mr. ROBSION. You spoke of the young man with the wife, depressed in both body and mind and who was fast losing any hope and ambition?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And by acting right then you likely saved that young fellow?

Mr. GODWIN. He feels that way about it. That is only one of a number of cases that I could have cited; I did not want to burden the record.

Mr. ROBSION. You are in charge of the Kansas City office?

Mr. GODWIN. No; I am the vocational adviser there.

Mr. ROBSION. Who is in charge?

Mr. GODWIN. Mr. G. W. Kirk is in charge of the office there.

Mr. ROBSION. Is he here?

Mr. GODWIN. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you know why he did not come?

Mr. GODWIN. He was not directed to come.

Mr. ROBSION. Have there been any complaints to the Kansas City office about delays?

Mr. GODWIN. Why, certainly.

Mr. ROBSION. How many men have been handled through that office, about?

Mr. GODWIN. I have not kept a record; it would be a guess.

Mr. ROBSION. I should like to have you guess.

Mr. GODWIN. I would say, since I have been there, October 20, up to this time, that I have averaged three new cases a day.

Mr. ROBSION. You have?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir. I am the man who makes the first contact with the man after he is discharged.

Mr. ROBSION. That would represent the increase to that branch office, three cases a day?

which had been referred to this office. I wrote him four days after it had been referred here. I got that case out of the files and find that two days before I got his letter approval had been given and the boy started into training.

In connection with this tuition of $500 we have given the New York office a certain definite list of schools where the tuition is at a higher rate than $500 a year, where those men would be placed without leaving them to the central office. For instance, the West Side Y. M. C. A. school in automechanics, where the tuition rate is $50 a month, which is more than the rate of $500 a year, although for the total length of time that the man is in training it does not amount to $500. They have authority to place a man there, and they have authority to place men in training in a number of institutions there where the tuition rate is more than $500.

Mr. Burroughs raised the question as to the rate of—what university was it?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Alfred.

Mr. LAMKIN. I have not had an opportunity to look it up, but I should not think that the rate was more than $500 a year there. If it is more than $500 a year I see no reason why this same privilege should not be extended to the New York office to put a man in training there; but the difficulty, Mr. Chairman, as you will understand when you get into the administration of it, is that here is a fellow who comes and asks for a course—let me give this specific example: We had a young man who came and asked for a course in a special school in New York. His injury was a slight hernia, for which the doctor stated they would not operate; that operation was not necessary, but he could be cured by the wearing of a truss; and he asked the approval of his course at a tuition which was $700 a year. The general history of such schools is that they are not worth the $700, and we believed that it would be better to keep our hands on expenditures in excess of a reasonable amount.

In the districts, the next officer I would like to speak of is the chief clerk of the district office. The chief clerk of the district office performs the same functions that any Government property agent does. He has charge of the property of the Government in the office. He also has charge of employing the personnel, the clerical personnel. Through the office goes the payment to the soldiers. Our disbursing officer issues the checks which are payable to the soldiers twice a month. Since last December, I am confident that I am correct when I say that the checks for the men in training have always left Washington before the 15th and the 30th of the month. I think, too, you will find that the Federal Board for Vocational Education is the only Government agency that is paying its beneficiaries, outside of the District of Columbia, more than once a month. The Bureau of War Risk Insurance, of course, pays its beneficiaries once a month; the Pension Department pays the pensioners once a month—or is it once a quarter?

Mr. TOWNER. Once every three months.

Mr. LAMKIN. We are paying our boys once every 15 days. I might say to you that that was one of the first things that I directed my attention to when I got here—that the boys might get their money on time. That does not mean that they get their money on the 1st and 16th of the month. In some districts the money is delivered to them on the 5th and 20th; in some districts on the 3d and 18th. It depends on when it can get out; but the point is that we are trying to get the money to the districts so that they can establish definite pay days, and the boys will understand what that definite pay day is. The checks are sent to the district. Some Congressmen have asked why it was that checks were not sent directly to the men. It is not necessary for me to answer that.

You had the case of young Dunstall, who was here on the stand and testified that he had not received a payment from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance nor from the Federal board since his discharge from the hospital; and inquiry from the bureau, which I will file a little later, developed the fact that his checks had gone regularly to the address which he gave, which was in Toronto, Canada; and the check for him, which was due from the Federal Board for Vocational Education, and amounting, as I recall it, to $66 and some odd cents, was then waiting for him at the place where the board knew where he was.

The district office, when it puts a man in training, has authority to change a man from one institution to another, from one course to another, from an institution to training on the job, from training on job to training on another job, from training on the job to an institution. It has authority to change the course and regulate it, without reference to the central office, and it knows where a man is; and consequently we send the checks to the district offices to be distributed to the men; and, as I said earlier, we have not established disbursing offices in the districts because of the fact that the overhead did not justify it. The salary which we can pay for that work will not get men who know Government regulations so that we could entrust them with the payment of money. I might say to you, however, that we appointed a disbursing officer for the two districts west of the Rocky Mountains, and as soon as the Treasury Department approves his bond we will have him disburse the money of the soldiers in training west of the Rocky Mountains.

The chief clerk, therefore, handles the payment of the soldiers in the districts, and he has charge of the preparation and submission to this office of vouchers for all bills.

In that connection I would like to say now, Mr. Chairman, that this is the first time that this class of payments has ever been called upon to be paid by the Treasury Department. We have 30,000 boys scattered over 48 States, 1,300 different institutions, 2,600 different industrial establishments, and each one of them has to have a certain amount of supplies and equipment, and the matter of formulating regulations which will conform to the Treasury requirements for the payment of money has been one of the most difficult problems of administration. I understand that there have been some acts of Congress which have allowed the Treasury to pay bills which were certified as mathematically correct. That would be easily done. I do not know. That is a matter which we should like to have authority to make a little fuller investigation of and report to the committee, because I believe that you want and Congress wants to do everything that can be done to expedite the work and at the same time be fair to the man and fair to the Government.

There are two other persons who are not exactly on the staff of the districts, but who are so closely related to the staff that I would like to describe to you their functions. In the first place, there is what we call the coordinator. You understand that in many of these institutions established particularly for the training of men of elementary grade we have had to try out the boys to see what kind of training they could take, or what kind they wanted. We placed a full-time employee of the board in charge of those institutions, and a man who we call a coordinator, who is supposed to be very close in touch with the men, follow them up very carefully and see that they get what the Government is paying for and to advise with them as to any change of course that may be necessary.

There is another class of men who are stationed at the various institutions, usually a member of the faculty of the colleges. That man is called a counselor. They are paid anywhere from a dollar to $100 a year. None of them is paid more than $100 and none of them is paid less than $1. The reason for paying the $1, of course, is in order that we can call them into conference, if necessary. When they are paid $50 or $100 it is for the purpose of providing the necessary clerical assistance which they have to have. The counselor is the friend of the boys in the school. We usually send the boys direct to the counselor. If he has any difficulty in making a claim for dependency, for instance—and, of course, the question of dependency is an uncertain thing, because a lot of the boys are getting married or having additions to their families—but if there is any question about making out the claim for dependency, or things of that kind, the boy takes it up with the counselor. If he wants to change his course, he consults with the counselor. We have at each of the institutions where we have men in training a counselor, but we have not put coordinators where we do not have at least 100 men in training. If we have 50 or 75 men in training, we have sometimes named a coordinator for two institutions, to spend half his time at each. A coordinator is a full-time employee of the board. A counselor is not a full-time employee of the board.

Mr. ROBSION. What does the coordinator get?

Mr. LAMKIN. He gets anywhere, Mr. Chairman, from $1,800 to $2,400. I can not answer definitely. We take into consideration the place where he is living. In other words, a coordinator can live a good deal more cheaply at Ames, Iowa, or Starkville, Miss., at the agricultural colleges there than he can in the city of New York. I remember that Mr. Nelson, who is our coordinator at the David Rankin School in St. Louis, was paid $2,000.

I have spoken of the branch offices and of the district offices. We have about 98 of them, I believe, 78 of which we have in definite quarters, and about 20 where we have no rented quarters, or quarters that are given to us. You understand that in a number of these branch offices we have rooms either rented to us by the Red Cross or by the city officers, or by the county officials, or by some one of that kind. Of course, in the larger places the demand for office space is increasing so rapidly now that we are having to change our quarters in some of them.

The employees in these branch offices run from one person to probably 20 or 25 in the larger branch offices, such as Detroit, Los Angeles, Cleveland, and some other of the larger offices.

I have spoken to you about the desire to decentralize the central office in the matter of auditing and disbursing, or accounting, I should say, of the disbursing offices. The central office is maintained as a supervising agency. It reaches the districts through the personal visits of the field organizer and the chief of the division when he can get away from Washington. I may say, in passing, that I have been in 8 of the 14 district offices, and if it had not been for being asked to remain or expected to remain here in Washington I would have visited three or four of them during the past 30 days, three or four which I had not yet seen.

It also keeps in touch by personal visits from the members of the advisement and training staffs, and of the Placement Section. These men go out to consult with the various districts officers with regard to the work of the boys.

We also keep in touch with the district offices through the medium of what we call miscellaneous 150, revised, and information and instruction. I am not going to ask that these be included in the record, Mr. Chairman. I think there is nothing in them that is objectionable to being printed, but I know it will not justify the printing. Of course, some of our friends have stated that these compose 1,500 different instructions. As a matter of fact, I think there are 351 different sections instead of 1,500. The sections are numbered from 1 to 100. For instance, the article concerning training pay for the men in training is the 700 group, and in that there are 14 sections, numbered from 700 to 714. The next one is from 800 to 889, but that pertains to the Government regulations regarding expenditures, what are proper charges against the Government, and things of that kind.

Criticism was made here by one employee of the board who stated that these were not furnished to all of the employees of the board. Seven copies of this miscellaneous 150, revised, have been furnished to each one of the districts. They are for the use of the section heads and for constant reference in the sections. They are there, and if anybody in the departments wants to consult them they can be consulted.

The same thing can be said of the instruction letters and the information letters which are sent out in sufficient quantities to supply the persons who need them, but we have not thought it necessary to duplicate a larger number, Mr. Chairman, than was absolutely needed in the several offices. So if I can file those with the chairman for any reference you care to make of them I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. TOWNER. Let the record show that they are filed without printing.

Mr. LAMKIN. As I say, I prefer that some of those be filed, and not be printed. You can do as you please about it, Mr. Chairman. The ones to which I refer are the ones which give information concerning certain schools. That is in the nature more or less of a confidential communication, but the details of the board concerning schools which have been approved we have not regarded as being necessary for public distribution.

I would like to make this statement in connection with the filing of those documents. On October 20, 1919, the following letter was sent from the chief to all the district vocational offices regarding procedure. I shall not ask permission to put all of that letter in the record, unless you insist, Mr. Chairman, but there are three paragraphs from it which I would like to read which pertain to that:

2. This letter is written for the purpose of laying down definite principles and should be considered as official.

3. In the first place, the chief wishes it distinctly understood that all procedure is set up for the purpose of expediting business, not for delaying. That no letter of instructions sent out by this office is to be followed blindly, except in the matter of observing certain definite forms and the keeping of certain definite records upon which depends the legality, as well as the wisdom, of our acts. But no "procedure" sent out from here is intended to interfere with the initiative of the district vocational officers, nor to in any way restrict his authority.

9. In the above (that is the general statement), central office will insist on only two things:

1. That the fewest possible number of men be used on your case conference.

2. That a man's application will be "case boarded" but once so far as the internal case board is concerned.

12. The chief also wishes to call the attention of the district vocational officers to the fact that there must be no duplication of records in the district offices if it can be prevented.

13. Again assuring you of the desire of the central office to give you all the support possible, and of their unwillingness to hamper you by unnecessary instructions, I am,

Yours, very truly,

MEL W. LAMKIN,
Chief Division Rehabilitation.

I think that may give you some information as to whether or not the central office is representing the board more and more in the districts. That letter is dated October 20, 1919.

Mr. ROBSION. Signed by yourself?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes; signed by myself as chief of the Division of Rehabilitation.

In regard to the employment of personnel, the question has been asked by you gentlemen here as to who was responsible for the appointment of personnel and the employment of personnel. I have answered it, but I am glad to answer it again, and that is that all the personnel is under civil-service regulations. In the first place, a man is appointed—or up until this last order came, a man would submit his qualifications and be appointed subject to civil-service requirements—subject to civil-service qualifications. That was the appointment which I got. I got it dated along some time in January, 1919. I had to take an examination for district vocational officer in February. I took it on February 4, 1919, and passed, getting the wonderfully high grade of 70 per cent, I think it was. The civil-service requirements provide that all of these positions with the board can be filled from its certificate, or by transfer or promotion—in one of these three ways. Every staff officer in the central office is under the civil-service regulations.

I think it may be well for me to make this statement now, if you do not object, Mr. Chairman. The question is raised as to the civil-service status of the district vocational officer in New York, Mr. Clark. I shall be glad to submit this statement:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., April 13, 1920.

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Referring to the verbal inquiry of to-day by the chief clerk of your board, you are informed that there are at this time available for certification to the board seven eligibles for district vocational officer. Only one of these eligibles is a resident of the second district, his name and address being Eugene H. Meyer, 149 Fabyan Place, Newark, N. J. Mr. Meyer was selected from certificate 470 for placement officer.

By direction of the commission.

Very respectfully,

MARTIN A. MORRISON,
President.

I should also like to introduce a copy of the "Civil Service Act Rules, amended to January 1, 1918, rule 8, page 54, Temporary appointment," which provides that where a register is not certified containing at least three eligibles, the appointing officer has the right to name some one for temporary appointment not on the register.

(The matter referred to is as follows:)

CIVIL-SERVICE ACT RULES, STATUTES, AND EXECUTIVE ORDERS.

[Amended to Jan. 1, 1918. Rule VIII. Temporary appointment. P. 54.]

PAR. 3. When there is at least one eligible and not more than two eligibles on a register for any grade in which a vacancy exists, the commission shall, upon requisition from the proper appointing officer, certify the name of the one eligible or the names of the two eligibles, which shall be considered by the appointing officer with a view to probational appointment; and if the appointing officer shall elect not to make probational appointment from such certificate of less than three names, then, if temporary appointment is required, it shall be made from such certificate unless reasons satisfactory to the commission are given why such appointment should not be made. Such temporary appointment may continue until three eligibles are provided. If selection is not made from the certificate for either probational or temporary appointment under the provisions of this section, then temporary appointment, if required, may be made under the provisions of section 2 of this rule.

I should also like to state that of the seven eligibles referred to as being eligible for the position of district vocational officer, one is in the service of the board as training assistant, five of them declined——

Mr. BURROUGHS. Declined appointment?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; for one reason or another. For instance, Mr. McCartney, whom I know very well, stated that he would not accept an appointment. Mr. Charles M. Pritchard has written stating that he would be glad to be considered for appointment, but does not care to accept temporary appointment unless a very attractive one. You understand that all of our appointments run to the 30th of June, the end of the fiscal year. Of course, as far as I am concerned, if I make good, I have no doubt I will be continued as long as it is necessary to keep men in the service, but you can not get everybody to see it that way.

Mr. Oscar H. Lipps was in the Indian Office, and Secretary Lane reported the transfer could not be approved when Mr. Lipps asked if he could consider a position with the board.

Mr. Price stated he would consider it if he were given $4,000 a year. Mr. Ford was offered a position, and declined. Mr. Whyte is now with the board in District No. 11, which is in Denver.

I may also state, Mr. Chairman, while I am discussing the question of civil service, that from July 18, 1919, to April 15, 1920, there were 531 men certified by the Civil Service Commission as eligible for staff positions on the board. Of these, 329 of them were employed by the board as temporary employees, pending the certification of the Civil Service Commission; that is 62 per cent. Of those 62 per cent, 286 remained, 826 resigned prior to certification, and 17 were transferred to the United States Public Health Service. We offered positions to 42 others who were not previously employed by the board, or 8 per cent, and they accepted. Eighty-four persons, or 16 per cent of those certified, declined to accept the position offered by the board, for the following reasons: 23 gave no reason; 1 declined on account of illness; 10 declined because they could not leave their present position; 7 declined because they had secured more profitable employment elsewhere; 36 refused to accept the salary offered; and 7 could not be located. We rejected 23 persons, or 4 per cent, because we did not believe they had the proper qualifications for the work. We have 53 men, or 10 per cent, of those who have been certified whose final action is still awaited by the board.

From the above it will be noted that only 328 men, or 62 per cent of the men certified by the Civil Service Commission, accepted or remained in the employ of the board. Of this group, only 42, or 8 per cent, were new employees.

In regard to the clerical personnel in the districts, the district vocational officer, subject to the limitations which have been set by the central office as to the amount of salaries which they may pay, chooses his personnel from the civil-service certifications of those on the regular register. There is in preparation now a revised table of organization based on the experience of the last six months, and I want to say to you that we expect to give the district vocational officers ample clerical assistance to do the job. We expect to hold them responsible for it, and ask them to use every business economy to keep the overhead expenses down. But with the exception of meeting the civil-service regulations in the district in which the office is located we give them absolute authority over the appointment, and not only the appointment but the discharge, the separation from the service, of all clerical appointees.

Of course, I think the time is not here and will not come when the chief of the division will not exercise his authority over the districts when he thinks it is necessary, and I believe you will agree that that is sound administration.

On the question of decentralization, I repeat what Mr. Munroe said this morning that there is no department of the Government at the present time that is decentralized to the extent that the Federal Board for Vocational Education is, when you take into consideration the necessity for maintaining uniform standards all over the country. That has not always been true.

I would like, in passing, to just call the attention of this committee to the fact that there were five former employees who testified before this committee. One of them, Mr. Charles H. Winslow, resigned on the 1st of October; one, Mr. George B. McGovern, on the 1st of August, 1919; Mr. F. G. Wadsworth, on October 1, 1919, but had taken his leave prior to that time, if I recollect correctly; Mr. Arthur W. Griffin, on October 10, but, according to his testimony on page 553, he states he did not know of the workings of the board since the 1st of August when he resigned. Dr. Thomas H. Buckler, on May 1, who stated that he did not know of the workings of the board since that time. See pages 631, 633, and 643 of the testimony.

I might also state with regard to all persons who are not former employees of the board that the majority of the information—and I shall discuss it when I come to it—is taken from the views as they got them prior to the 1st of October, 1919.

It is necessary to maintain uniform standards. Mr. McMurtrie, for instance, compared our work with that of the American Red Cross. The American Red Cross is an organization which is not bound by the regulations of anybody except the American Red Cross. It is a wonderful organization, but the Federal Board for Vocational Education is not only bound by its own regualtions, but by the regulations of the Treasury Department, which we must accept. For instance, a few days ago—I think I spoke of this informally to some members of the committee; it is merely a little thing, but it shows some of the things we have had to deal with—a few days ago we had a notice from the Treasury Department that after the 1st day of May—no; I think it was the 15th day of April—they would not pass for payment any more vouchers for tuition which were based on a 30-day month. I can explain that by saying that if a boy goes in training in a commercial school on the 5th of a month, they had been dealing with his tuition as being twenty-five thirtieths of a month, due at the end of the month. The Treasury Department has held that in future we must compute it, in a 31-day month, as being twenty-five thirty-firsts, and in a 28-day month as being twenty-five twenty-eighths. It means but a few cents, but a 30-day month had passed the Treasury Department, had been approved by the auditors, and had gone on through and payment made on that basis, as some other payments were made.

For instance, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, I think, pays its claims on a basis of a 30-day month, but then this regulation comes and we have to conform to it, and when we do conform to it it causes confusion and causes the statement to be made that we are changing our policy in that way.

For the purpose of keeping uniform standards throughout the country these eligibility men, whom I have described a few minutes ago, were sent out. The eligibility man is the outgrowth of a traveling case-board representative, as he was called. The case board in Washington passed on the cases of soldiers as they were submitted to the Washington office. I can not answer definitely the reason why all of these cases were submitted to Washington. You know, and all of us know, that the number of men approved for training, the number of men probably taking training, is very much larger than anyone anticipated.

I think it was originally estimated before the committee, was it not, Judge, that somewhere between 15,000 and 20,000 would be the maximum who would be entitled to training?

Mr. TOWNER. That was the advice the committee received from the Canadian experts, based upon their experience.

Mr. LAMKIN. Based upon their experience. I want to discuss that a little later, if I may, as to what I think are the reasons for some of the confusion during the early part of the last year. In order to clear these cases, shortly after the passage of the divorce law the cases in the districts that had been sent to Washington were piling up, no doubt because they could not get a decision from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. Mr. Godwin said yesterday that he learned a good deal about the early difficulties, and I am sure I learned a good deal about the early difficulties when I heard Mr. Munroe discuss the matter yesterday. I knew of no dealings with the bureau. Those matters had not been discussed with me. When those cases were submitted here and were decided and referred back to the districts, some one in Washington—I do not know who is responsible; I assume Dr. Smith, who was chief of the division of rehabilitation just prior to my coming here, was responsible—sent what they called a traveling case board representative to the various districts. In other words, if I were in St. Louis I would have been informed that on the 15th day of the month a man would come from the central office and spend a few days with us, and during those days with us he would pass on all these cases. That was followed by eligibility squads, which were organized to go over all the case files, to take the cases and go through them, right straight through to the end, through all the files, and take every folder that was in it, and every man that was in it, and say to the district vocational officer, "This man is entitled to training on this evidence he has here," and say, "This man here is not entitled to training on what you have here, is not legally entitled to training, but you get this evidence which will show whether or not he is entitled to training," and that eligibility squad started out, and we tried that first in Boston. We did not have enough men to do the job quickly in Boston. We increased the number by sending in one man from each of the several districts. We sent, I think, 20 men to New York; I think it was 20. Those men audited the files and learned what they could about handling rapidly the cases in the files.

I would like to read a paragraph or two from a letter of October 14, 1919, stating that the plan of this eligibility or flying squadron would involve the following:

The men would be called into central office for a week's intensive training. They would be divided into groups of say four each. A group would be sent to a district office to go through the files, act on such cases as could be acted upon and note definitely the information that is lacking on others.

You understand, Mr. Chairman, that while our relations have been very cordial with many of the Government agencies, the Bureau of Public Health, which has been examining for the bureau of war risk insurance, was supposed to send copies of the men's medical examination to us, but they have not done so in a great many cases. The Army was supposed to send a copy of the man's discharge to us—I mean the medical examination. We did not get them in a large number of cases.

They would be expected to spend a week in an office, then go to another district office and follow the same procedure. In that way there would be a group in each district office one week in every month. This group would have power to act, but would not necessarily take the place of the traveling case board representative, who would be there when they were not there.

You will note by this plan that you would lose the service of one man from your force. On the other hand, every four weeks you would have four men who would be trained to do the particular thing they are sent out to do.

The man whom you send should be capable of working rapidly, should have good judgment, should have had Army organization experience, if possible. If not, should be able to judge of Army paper, and should be willing to work day and night. In other words, outside of the supervisors in your office, he should be the best man on your force.

It will be the duty of this "squad" to pass upon eligibility for training. In other words, they will say whether or not a man is eligible for training, or if not eligible on the evidence submitted, what additional is necessary. It will then be the duty of the district office to notify the man that he can be placed in training whenever he is willing to start.

Please wire upon receipt of this letter the name of the man whom you will detail for this duty and have him report at Washington, Monday morning, October 20.

Those eligibility squads generally went out to the districts after they left Boston. They worked in the evening and at night. They did it because by doing it they interfered less with the regular work of the office. They went to the office at the closing hour, either 4.30 or 5, whatever it was, and they worked until midnight. They worked 7½ hours, which were the regular Government hours, but they were not interrupted. They worked rapidly, most of the time with their overcoats on, and much of the time with their hats on, in order to keep warm during the time they were out. Those men finished their work about the 1st of February in all of the districts. Since that time there has been a permanent man established in each one of the district offices.

In New York, for instance, we have three, in Chicago, we have two, and we will place as many other men there as necessary, and they are calling for training with the men from the district office, so that if necessary these men can subsequently be withdrawn.

A question was asked yesterday, I believe it was, about carrying the work out into the field. My recollection is that late in January, or early in February, the first one of these men went out into the field away from the District offices. Mr. J. B. Scott went to several towns in Michigan, and the plan was communicated to other district vocational officers. In that case the eligibility man went right out into the field and sat there in the town of Saginaw, or Jackson, or Bay City, or anywhere else, and said to these boys, "Come in and we will have our talk here, and bring to you our board, and examine you, and then say whether or not you are entitled to training, and we will go on away and leave this training man to put you in training and follow you up and remain with you." The Cincinnati office sent these field men out with the papers in their pockets, stating that so and so and so and so were entitled to training, and they were instructed to go out and put them in training, and notify the Cincinnati office who was in training. A little later the Philadelphia office sent what they called a clean-up squad to Pittsburgh. The New York office started it along about the 1st of April, maybe a little earlier than that, maybe the 15th of March—I do not remember that detail, but other officers had been told to do it just as quickly as they could arrange to get their files out into the field.

Personally, I believe that we should invest the authority which is now in the district offices in the branch offices, I mean clear into the field, but that is a question of development, Mr. Chairman, of training your personnel, of extending into the field the authority to act, and you can not do it with men whom you can not pay a reasonable salary to command them.

Our relations with other Government organizations, Mr. Chairman, have been reasonably friendly. I think here in Washington I can say that our relations are better now than they have ever been. I think there can be no cross purposes between the acts of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the Federal Board for Vocational Education. I really feel that our relations with the United States Public Health Service are even a little closer than the relations between the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the United States Public Health Service, possibly because there is no appropriation jealously between us and the bureau, as there may be between the bureau and the Public Health Service.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Would you mind at this point outlining a little bit more fully what your relations are with the Public Health Service?

Mr. LAMKIN. The United States Public Health Service, Mr. Chairman, in the first place furnishes our chief medical officer, Col. McDill, who is a regular employee of the United States Public Health Service, and ranks as Assistant Surgeon General. I spoke to Col. Cholmeley-Jones some time ago about something that was done by the Public Health Service, and he said, "How do you get it over?" I said, "I do not know how it is done. I merely tell Col. McDill what we want, and he goes and gets it."

Our medical officers in the districts are in very close touch with the supervisors. We have made arrangements to get all their medical examinations. We are sending our clerks and stenographers to the offices of the Public Health supervisors in the various districts to make copies of the medical examinations which we need, and which they have not furnished to us. In the Public Health hospitals we have arranged to go in with him and undertake vocational training. There are at present, I believe, some 51 Public Health hospitals. We are now in Greenville, N. C., where we have 127 students. We are now in the Public Health Hospital at Perryville, Md., where we have 78 students in training. We are going into the Public Health Hospital at Norfolk, Mass., which you know is a mental hospital. We are in the Public Health Hospital at Alexandria, La., where we have 173 men now in training. We are going into Biltmore, N. C.; New Haven, Conn.; we are going into the Johnson City, Tenn., soldiers' home, where men with arrested cases of tuberculosis, I believe, are treated. They have set aside a building there where we can give them training on a farm attached to it.

There was, Mr. Chairman, a difference of opinion as to whether or not the work that was done in the Public Health Service Hospital was occupational therapy, curative in its nature, or whether it was really vocational training, but the board has, I think, always been willing to meet the Public Health more than half way on it, and we finally got to the point where we are forgetting whether it is occupational therapy or vocational training, and we are going in and giving the work, putting our teachers in there to lead them, so that we can take advantage of the five or six months that the boys are in the hospital before they get out, so that they can continue right along with their training when they come out. Does that about answer your question?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes, I think so; but perhaps I might state that what led me to make that suggestion was that a month or so ago, when I was at home in New Hampshire, the head of the American

Digitized by Google

Legion in our State, with whom I chanced to be talking, discussing this matter of delays in connection with the Federal board, stated that his experience, latterly, anyway, had been that the chief cause of those delays, so far as they had existed at all, was due rather more to the Public Health Service than to the Federal board officials. Of course, I imagine that he came in contact with the Boston office.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes.

Mr. BURROUGHS. More than with any other. I did not have an opportunity to go into the board fully with him, but I just wondered how that came about.

Mr. LAMKIN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to attempt to throw any blame on any other department of the Government, nor to excuse the delay. The point is that we have got to get rid of delay rather than excuse it. But I think you will find that 75 per cent, I will say, of the sins of omission that have been charged against the Federal board have been largely due to delays of either the bureau or the Public Health Service. I think that is disappearing now, but in the long run the doctor, whose professional honesty is at stake, is the man who is going to take the blame in the minds of a great many of these boys. The Public Health Service was, my last information was, something like 1,000 cases behind our requests in the Boston office. That is my recollection of it.

Our relationship is extending out to the districts. On the 30th of October I sent this following night telegram to every one of our district offices. The same telegram was sent to their representatives by both the bureau and the Public Health Service.

At conference to-day of Public Health Service, War Risk Bureau, Red Cross, and Federal Board it was decided to take steps immediately to house the three Government agencies in one building in each district. Get in touch with representatives of these other organizations, canvass situation, and submit recommendations at earliest practicable moment. Red Cross should be invited to participate in conference to further closer working relations with all.

As the result of that telegram and of our negotiations we are in the same building in Boston, we are in the same building in New York. The War Risk and the Federal board are in the same building in Philadelphia, and the Public Health is coming with us. We are going to the same building they are in in New Orleans. We are in the same building in San Francisco, and we have got our arrangements made in Minneapolis, and the negotiations are under way in other cities. I would rather not state all of our negotiations, because I know that in one city the Public Health Service has been notified that their quarters have been leased to somebody else because they understand they have gotten orders from Washington to combine, and therefore they have got to get out. They are going to get out anyway, but they have got to get out before they are ready. We are going to get together in all of these cities, with the idea that the man, when he comes to one building to see one Government agency can get the service that he needs and get it done. I made the statement to Col. Cholmeley-Jones the other day that whenever he was ready in the city of New York, we were ready; that if he wanted to move the files of the war-risk insurance right up there and decide his cases up there in New York, we would meet him. The Bureau of War Risk Insurance, I might say, is sending us copies of all its awards.

I hope you will understand, gentlemen, that a big organization of this kind is a question of gradual development. It is not a question right now with me as to whether we properly organized to start with. It is the question of a condition as we found it, and what we are going to do to remedy it, and we are developing and cutting down the duplication of work. Now, these eligibility squads have been coming back, and when they come in I say to the men, "Where is it that we can cut out duplication? What is it that we are asking the fellows the same thing for?" And the reply was that we are asking a man for a medical examination when he says he had had a medical examination from the bureau on which he has got an award of compensation.

I immediately went to the bureau and put the proposition up to Col. Cholmeley-Jones and Col. Hallett, in charge of the compensation claims section, and in a few days' time we had an agreement by which they would run us off on their addressograph machine names of the men to whom they were paying awards of compensation, and we had a card printed, what we call Form 553, and we sent them over to the bureau, and they ran them through their addressograph machine, and that gives the man's name, his last known address, and how much compensation he is getting. We send those cards to the various districts, with the instruction, "That you are to accept this card as proof, not evidence, but as proof, first, that the man was honorably discharged from the service. If he was not, he would not get his compensation from the bureau. Second, that he had a disability incurred or increased or aggravated by his service, or traceable to it; if he did not, he would not get his compensation. In other words, we accept as absolute proof the award of any civilian department of the Government that a man was honorably discharged and that he had a disability. Then we instructed every district vocational officer to make an investigation to see whether or not that man was entitled to section 2 training, but, on the basis of the card, to immediately state to him that he was entitled to section 3 training, even if he was not entitled to section 2. We further instructed the district officers, in the case of these men who did not have a certificate of medical examination by the Public Health Service, to send their clerks over to the United States Public Health Service and pull their files and get the medical examination and send them so that we could act on their cases without asking for more. That was not done until this eligibility squad was sent out some time during the first of March, but the bureau is now furnishing us with awards as they are making them from time to time.

Mr. TOWNER. We will have to adjourn at this time until 10 o'clock Monday morning.

(Whereupon the committee adjourned until Monday, May 3, 1920, at 10 o'clock a. m.)

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Monday, May 3, 1920.

The committee met at 10 o'clock a. m., Hon. Simeon D. Fess (chairman) presiding.

TESTIMONY OF MR. UEL W. LAMKIN, CHIEF, DIVISION OF REHABILITATION, FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION—Resumed.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Lamkin, on Saturday, I believe, you were in the process of giving testimony and had not finished?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You may resume your testimony now.

Mr. LAMKIN. Mr. Chairman, I think I had gotten Saturday to our relations with other Government agencies, particularly in Washington. I had stated that I thought they were more friendly and that we were in closer cooperation now than we had ever been. Of course, the three agencies that deal with the soldiers are the Bureau of War Risk, the Federal Board, and the Public Health Service, and they have to be in close cooperation.

I stated Saturday that we had extended that cooperation throughout the districts and that in four cities we were now in the same buildings, and in two cities we would be in the same buildings very shortly.

Our relations with other agencies aside from those Government agencies are very harmonious at this time. The American Red Cross is particularly valuable. The American Red Cross has a work to do which is sometimes confused with the work which Government agencies do. However, it does a social-service work in the aftercare of not only disabled men but other ex-service men who are economically distressed—not physically, but economically distressed. Those, of course, the Federal Board has no authority to assist. The work of the American Red Cross is very largely with the families rather than with the men themselves, although loans are made to the men on occasions.

You had detailed here with a good deal of exactness our relations with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. I think the committee, the Congress, and the American people all agree that the Elks have done a very remarkable and commendatory piece of work.

Our relations with the National Catholic Work Council have been very friendly; in fact, they have put at our disposal hospitals with whom they had contracts which enabled us to take care of some men whom we could not otherwise have taken care of because of the fact that the hospital facilities were not available, and their disabilities did not occur in the military service.

I think our relations with the American Legion are better than they have ever been. The cooperation with the American Legion started some time ago.

On the 7th of November, 1919, the following letter was sent to the district vocational officers, to all of them:

Under arrangements entered into with Mr. Charles P. Sheridan, national war risk officer of the American Legion, district vocational officers will forward to the State chairmen of the various States in their districts complete lists of all men in the respective States who have been approved for training, but who have not yet entered upon their courses of instruction. Supplemental lists are also to be sent from time to time at reasonable intervals as additional men are approved for training.

The idea was to get word out to the American Legion posts that this man had been approved for training and to get into personal touch with him, which the board recognizes is necessary if the man is to take advantage of the opportunities offered to him.

A sufficient number of lists should be furnished to the State chairman in order to provide one for each local post. The number of copies required in your district (Boston) is indicated as follows:

	Copies.
Maine	75
Vermont	80
New Hampshire	70
Massachusetts	235
Rhode Island	35
Total	495

The American Legion representatives have agreed, on their part, upon receipt of the lists of approved men to send a copy to each local post, together with a copy of the inclosed letter and any further instructions which may appear locally advisable. Supplemental lists will be distributed in like manner.

It is hoped by this means to stimulate acceptance of the benefits offered to disabled men by the Federal Board and largely reduce the number who have been approved for training, but who have to date not entered upon it.

Instruction No. 74, as I remember the number, provides that similar lists shall be sent to the American Red Cross division chapters and to the Veterans of Foreign Wars; and it is stated in Instruction No. 74 that the list should give the name of the man, his post-office address, and if desirable, the probable course for which he has been approved. The service and information section of the War Department is also notified so that we can use these various cooperating agencies to get the word over to the man that he is approved for training and to explain to him the benefits which are his under the law.

We are calling in the several States, or asking the American Legion to call in the several States, conferences of what we call vocational-training officers to be appointed by the local posts. This is provided for in Service Bulletin No. 8 of the American Legion, submitted by Commander D'Olier. I think it is not necessary to put that in the record in full. If anybody wants to ask for Bulletin No. 8, the American Legion will be glad to give it to them.

The CHAIRMAN. You can identify it in the record, Mr. Lamkin.

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir; that is a guess.

Mr. ROBSION. Have you any idea of the number when you went into the office?

Mr. GODWIN. We were handling over 800 cases through that office since October or handling them now in process.

Mr. ROBSION. From the time you went there in October up to this time as many as 800 men have made application?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Have made application up to this date?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. How many of those cases have been disposed of?

Mr. GODWIN. That would be another guess.

Mr. ROBSION. Let us have another guess.

Mr. GODWIN. I would say, roughly, 400 of them; 50 per cent.

Mr. ROBSION. You are not maintaining your 80 per cent?

Mr. GODWIN. We can not get to that; we have not had the physical force there to do it.

Mr. ROBSION. I am not asking the reason, I just wanted to find out the condition. Perhaps, you better speak to the central office in Washington.

Mr. GODWIN. No; they are doing what they can.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Munroe testified yesterday that there were $10,000,000 available to the central office that had not been spent.

Mr. GODWIN. We never appealed to the central office for anything that they have not quoted the law on us.

Mr. ROBSION. Does the law provide that you can not pay a stenographer more than $100 a month?

Mr. GODWIN. That is my understanding.

Mr. ROBSION. You have read it and make that statement?

Mr. GODWIN. No; I have not read it.

Mr. ROBSION. Did they write a letter that the law, not their ruling, but the law, not their order, provided that you could not pay a stenographer more than $100 a month?

Mr. GODWIN. I have not the letter before me and I can not say.

Mr. ROBSION. Let us go back to the first principles. The important thing is to get training?

Mr. GODWIN. That is it.

Mr. ROBSION. If he is not getting it this committee wants to find out why he is not getting it, and if Congress is to blame let them bear the blame, and if the central office is to blame I want to put it on them.

Mr. GODWIN. That is right.

Mr. ROBSION. If you are to blame, I would like to see it put there.

Mr. GODWIN. I will take my share.

Mr. ROBSION. There are 800 in your department?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And you think that, perhaps, 400 have been disposed of?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Of course, that leaves 400?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. What have the 400 fellows been saying?

Mr. GODWIN. Some of them have been saying ugly words.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Have they written some ugly words?

Mr. GODWIN. A few of them, not very many.

Mr. ROBSION. You have read two or three very nice letters and I am glad you have.

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. They show appreciation and that you have done some good?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Have you any letters of the fellows complaining of this bureau?

Mr. GODWIN. I have not one with me, but I remember the substance of one of the letters. The young man is now in the Kansas University at his own expense, pending the decision of the board.

Mr. ROBSION. Pending his decision?

Mr. GODWIN. Pending the decision of the board. He is in the Kansas University at Lawrence. Just a few days before I left he wrote and said that he was getting along fine and sent his schedule of work in the university to show what he was doing and said that he had no complaint whatever, though his case had been delayed—he had no complaint to make against the Federal board.

Mr. TOWNER. The committee will adjourn at this time until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

(Thereupon, the committee took a recess until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee reassembled, pursuant to recess, Hon. Horace M. Towner presiding.

STATEMENT OF MR. WILLIAM M. GODWIN—Resumed.

Mr. TOWNER. The committee will come to order. Do you desire to make any additional statement, Mr. Godwin?

Mr. GODWIN. I may have one or two short statements to make, Mr. Chairman. With reference to the figures in the vocational summary, it occurred to me just as I was leaving the room a while ago that those figures bring us up within the vacation period during which time all of the educational institutions are closed and there could be no people inducted into training during that period, and I suspect that if the figures were for October and November that there would be a different story. I would like to call attention to another fact that in July, about the 9th of July, I think it was, I was directed to leave my post at Fort Riley and go into the St. Louis office, and when I arrived there I learned orders had issued suspending the work for a few days because of something that was going on here, and so it was some two weeks, I believe, after I returned to Fort Riley to my work at that time.

Then there was another matter further with reference to the men who refused to take training. When I was in the St. Louis office a day or two ago on my way here, a few days ago, a man came in who had been some months in the hospital and wanted to know why he had been assigned to training. I looked up his record, and he had been assigned to the hospital again, and he had refused to go, and Mr. Stott, the vocational adviser in the St. Louis office, and I were talking to him. He said that he did not want to go to a hospital, as it would take him four or five months, probably that long, to recover, and I had told him he had better do it. It was suggested to him that he had better be in the hospital a year, and be on the ground the balance of the time, but he seemed to think that he wanted to get away from the hospital and into training, although the doctor advised it, and there is no dissention of opinion among the board that he ought to be in a hospital rather than in training. I have found a number of men of that kind.

I want to say also that while I was in the St. Louis office a young soldier came in and was surveyed and accepted section 3 training, and within an hour was assigned to section 3 training. I saw that in the St. Louis office just a few days ago. I thought I had the man's name here, but I do not see it just now. Those are about all of the additional statements that I have to make. There are instances like those I recited this morning which have occurred almost dozens of times almost every day since I have been with the service, and it is not worth while to repeat them.

Mr. ROBSION. I wish you would state how many and who it is you have in the Kansas City branch?

Mr. GODWIN. When I left there Mr. George W. Kirk was the supervisor of training. Mr. W. I. Potter was the supervisor of placement, assisted by Mr. J. C. Neitzel, and I was vocational advisor. We had one stenographer there—Miss Evans—who was a very competent young woman, and I wondered why she stayed with us, because she could have stepped out of that office any day and gotten $50 a month more than she was being paid.

Mr. ROBSION. Outside of the stenographic help, you have sufficient force to handle it?

Mr. GODWIN. In placement; no, sir. Mr. Potter needs two good assistants.

Mr. ROBSION. I think you are in error when you claim that the law limits the stenographer's salary to $100.

Mr. GODWIN. It has been my advice, and I told you I did not read the law.

Mr. ROBSION. I am not blaming you for that. You are not responsible for that. But I have been somewhat struck with the situation that arises here. Quite a number of the staff at New York testifying here claimed that they are short of help, but under the law they could have all the stenographers and clerical force they needed and had plenty of them and could have had under the law, but they could not use up all the funds provided for stenographers and clerical help. Now, you put it on the other ground that in your office you can not get sufficient help.

Mr. GODWIN. My information was we were limited to $100 for a temporary stenographer; we could not get them at that price that could do the work.

Mr. ROBSION. How many of these 400 men that you think have been passed up for training have been actually placed in training, in your opinion?

Mr. GODWIN. You want my opinion and guess?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Digitized by Google

Mr. GODWIN. I do not believe it would be worth much, because when I survey a man, get him in full sympathy with us and we with him, he is then turned over to the supervisor of training, and I keep no record.

Mr. ROBSION. What is your best estimate?

Mr. GODWIN. My best estimate is that 90 per cent of those who will accept training at this time are in training.

Mr. ROBSION. Have any of them completed their training?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir; some have completed their training and are in placement.

Mr. ROBSION. And upon what terms do you put them in placement training?

Mr. GODWIN. Mr. Potter takes them. He finds the job for which they have been prepared and puts them on the job just the same as if they were still in the institution of the training.

Mr. ROBSION. Do they get paid?

Mr. GODWIN. They are paid by the board.

Mr. ROBSION. Is that the only pay they get?

Mr. GODWIN. Sometimes I understand that their employers pay them some.

Mr. ROBSION. Are they put in business enterprises in groups?

Mr. GODWIN. That is outside of my department. I do not know, but I think not.

Mr. ROBSION. You took occasion to explain the reason of the small number of cases that have been passed upon as compared with the lists read by Mr. Burroughs by stating that last August was the vacation season.

Mr. GODWIN. June, July, and August, generally.

Mr. ROBSION. Would that have anything to do with passing on a man's case?

Mr. GODWIN. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. So these figures that Mr. Burroughs read in that report simply deal with the number of persons who have registered and the persons whose cases have been passed upon, did it not?

Mr. GODWIN. My understanding is that it was the ones who had been placed in training.

Mr. ROBSION. Your figures did not relate to persons placed in training, did they?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Those total figures that I read represented the total cases surveyed, and then the other figures on the same date represented the total number that had actually been placed in training.

Mr. GODWIN. That is my understanding.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Was that correct? May be I am not right in that. Perhaps it was the number that had been actually recommended to the case board.

Mr. ROBSION. I would like to get it. I understand the board did not give the figures of cases that have been passed upon and recommended either for section 2 or section 3 training.

Mr. GODWIN. The record will show that.

Mr. ROBSION. I developed again right along that line after I took you by making a comparison showing there that you had 6,000 cases registered when you went there in July, and when you gave the last figures in August there was only about 2,000 in training, and after the 80 per cent perhaps there were 2,800 whose cases had not been passed upon in the four months.

Digitized by Google

Mr. GODWIN. The records will all show that.

Mr. ROBSION. So, if Mr. Burroughs was merely reading the figures in the cases that were passed upon and not in training, then your observations about vacation would not apply at all to them. In other words, the matter of the vacation going on in the country in the schools would not interrupt the work of passing on the cases in determining whether or not a fellow would have training, would it?

Mr. GODWIN. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. You spoke of some young man that had written a letter of complaint that was in a university at his own expense.

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Waiting on his case. How long had he been waiting?

Mr. GODWIN. His case, I think, was taken up in January or February of this year.

Mr. ROBSION. When did you get the letter?

Mr. GODWIN. I would say about the first of April.

Mr. ROBSION. What was holding his case up?

Mr. GODWIN. The question as to whether he is a section 2 or section 3 man.

Mr. ROBSION. You have the power in Kansas City to pass on that question, do you not?

Mr. GODWIN. No, sir; that is a matter that is fixed by the medical board in St. Louis.

Mr. ROBSION. St. Louis has the authority to pass on that?

Mr. GODWIN. St. Louis has the power; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Why is it that it would take three or four months to pass on that boy's case?

Mr. GODWIN. Really, I do not know.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, that is not the only letter of complaint that you received at the Kansas City branch, is it?

Mr. GODWIN. No; I think I have received about three others besides that.

Mr. ROBSION. What was the tenor of those letters?

Mr. GODWIN. They were wondering why their cases could not be decided.

Mr. ROBSION. But you have demonstrated to the board here from your actual experience that cases can be and have been passed on in a short time, have you not?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir; they can be and have been.

Mr. ROBSION. That is all.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Lamkin, do you desire to take the stand at this time?

Mr. LAMKIN. Whenever you are ready.

Mr. TOWNER. You may proceed, then.

STATEMENT OF MR. UEL W. LAMKIN, CHIEF DIVISION OF REHABILITATION, FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

(The witness was duly sworn by the acting chairman.)

Mr. TOWNER. Give your name and address to the stenographer.

Mr. LAMKIN. My name is Uel W. Lamkin; my legal residence is in Missouri, and my present residence is in Congress Hall Hotel, Washington, D. C., which is my present address.

Mr. TOWNER. What is your present position with the Federal board?

Mr. LAMKIN. Chief Division of Rehabilitation.

Mr. TOWNER. When did you enter upon your duties?

Mr. LAMKIN. As chief?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAMKIN. September 15, 1919.

Mr. TOWNER. What was your prior occupation?

Mr. LAMKIN. May I make rather an extended statement about that?

Mr. TOWNER. Just as you choose about that.

Mr. LAMKIN. I spent most of my life in administrative school work. That is what my chief occupation has been, although my education was for law. I was admitted to the bar and went back to school administration immediately upon admission. On account of the economic conditions facing school-teachers, I went into business and was in business in September, 1916, when the State superintendent of schools of the State of Missouri died. The governor of Missouri, without solicitation on my part, appointed me to succeed him. I was State superintendent of schools at the outbreak of the war. I would like to make this statement because of the background, which may be valuable in your considering all the phases of the administration of the rehabilitation act. Before the war was declared the schools of Missouri had started on a food-production campaign that, I think, was not excelled by any State in the Union. During the war I did my part as a State official. I am now 43 years old and was then 41. I did not see military service, although I made inquiry as to enlisting and was told that I might get a place in the Army, detailed to Washington. There was no chance for any overseas service or any active service, and I remained where I was. I claimed no exemption, although a State officer, although married, and with a boy whose physical condition has always given us a good deal of concern. As State superintendent of schools it was my privilege to take a very decided stand in regard to the teaching of foreign languages in the elementary schools of the State, and whether anyone agrees or disagrees with my position on that subject, I lost enough votes in the counties where the German language was the language of the playground to make a difference in the election. Just after the election, in which I was defeated for reelection in a popular vote of about 1,000, while the head of the ticket—I being in second place on the ticket—was defeated by 36,000, the then Chief of the Division of Rehabilitation, Dr. Chandler, wired me asking if I would take charge of the St. Louis office of this board. I agreed to do so.

Digitized by Google

Early in January I became district vocational adviser in St. Louis. I remained there until the 1st of July.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What year was that?

Mr. LAMKIN. 1919. I remained there until the 1st of July, 1919, when I was asked to come to the central office as field organizer. I came. My first assignment was to Philadelphia to succeed Dr. A. J. Roland who was resigning to enter into industrial education work in the city of Milwaukee. I was in charge of the Philadelphia office until the new district vocational officer was appointed. If I remember correctly, Mr. Charles E. Cullen was appointed in Philadelphia about July 23, 1919. I was there until the latter part of July.

Mr. Arthur W. Griffin was being replaced in New York at that timew hile Mr. S. E. Farwell was being transferred to the Boston office. I was asked to take charge of the New York office during the interim of 10 days. I did so and was in charge for 10 days in New York until Mr. Farwell reached there. I then was in the field until the 15th of September. I think I got back to Washington the 11th or 12th and assumed charge of the Rehabilitation Division of the Federal board on September 15, 1919.

I am very glad in this investigation, Mr. Chairman, to answer any questions that I can, but I would like to have it remembered that prior to September 15 my testimony will have to be as a district officer or will have to be taken from the records as I find them in the central office. Since September 15, 1919, I shall be glad to testify concerning my relations as Chief of the Division of Rehabilitation.

Mr. TOWNER. I think the committee will be glad to have you state in your own way the conditions as you fonud them to exist here in Washington at the time when you assumed charge of this rehabilitation work.

Mr. LAMKIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hardly know just how to answer your question. I think in order that this committee should get a comprehensive view of the whole situation some statement and explanation should be made concerning the work of the board and the organization of the board, as a whole, if you would care to have that done.

Mr. TOWNER. We will be very glad to have it.

Mr. LAMKIN. Then I shall be very glad to tell you what the situation was as I saw it here when I came.

I have here a chart showing the organization of the office.

Mr. TOWNER. We would like to have that. I think the committee would like to have that inserted in the record.

Mr. LAMKIN. I will be very glad to do that and I have here several copies.

(Mr. Lamkin distributed copies to each member of the committee.)

Mr. TOWNER. I think that will enable your testimony to be followed more intelligently.

Mr. LAMKIN. The Federal Board for Vocational Education, as has been stated, is composed of seven members. The active members who are on the job all the time are the members of the standing committee, three members. The work of the board falls under two heads, for which there are separate chiefs of divisions and separate appropriations, entirely distinct and separate work. One is the Division of Vocational Education and the other is the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation. The work of the Vocational Education Division, as you know, has to do with the cooperation with the States in promoting vocational education among the schools. The vocational education is the division which is established for the purpose of rehabilitating the disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines. The executive officer of the Vocational Rehabilitation Division is called the chief.

I may say that the executive officer of the whole board, prior to my coming, was called a director. That man was Dr. C. A. Prosser, who resigned October 1, 1915. He acted as executive of the standing committee for both divisions, but since Dr. Prosser's resignation there has been no director, but there have been two chiefs. The chief has as assistants in the central office the chief medical officer, a superintendent of advisement training, a superintendent of placement, a case board, which is headed by the chairman.

I will discuss what the superintendent of records and returns and the case superintendent do a little later, if I may. There is the personnel officer and the chief clerk, the auditor, and the disbursing officer. The corresponding officer in the district is called a district vocational officer. Personal contact with the district vocational officer is made through the field organizers, of whom we have two. These two field organizers are Mr. R. T. Fisher, who was district vocational officer at San Francisco, and Mr. W. F. Shaw, formerly district vocational officer at Cincinnati.

In the district you will find the district medical officer, the supervisor of advisement and training, the supervisor of placement, the case officer, the case board, and the chief clerk. You will find that where we refer to the superintendent of advisement and training it refers to a man in the central office, whereas when referring to the supervisor of training it refers to the man in the district office.

The chief medical officer has, of course, supervisory control only and is the advisor, I should say, as well as supervisor, over the district medical officer. It is the same with the supervisor of advisement and the superintendent of placement. The functions of the case board, records and returns, and the case superintendent are combined in the district under the case officer. The functions of personnel clerk, chief clerk, and auditor and disbursement officer are in the districts under the chief clerk. The supervisor of advisement and training, for instance, keeps in touch with the various educational opportunities in the various districts. He also acts as a clearing house for all questions of advisements, and helps to direct the vocational advisors in the field in their contact with the men. He also has general supervision over the work of follow up of the men in institutional training, as we call it. I do not like the words institutional training. I would like to say training in institutions rather than to call it institutional training. At the conclusion of it the men are turned over to the placement section. The placement section has a double duty. In the first place, it supervises the instruction of the men on the job, or, as we call it, in placement training. In the second place, after the men have been trained in institutions, it is the placement sections duty to see that they are placed in employment and that they can "carry on" in employment.

The case board in both district and central office passes on the cases on the legal evidence, in the first place, and in the second place, as to whether or not the recommendations of the advisors are sound. The records and returns section of the central office, as you can readily surmise, is the department that has charge of the records that are sent in here. The case superintendent in central office passes on matters concerning dependency and claims, and keeps records as to whether or not the man has been in training for the period for which he is placed, and passes on legal questions. He is legal advisor as well as case superintendent. The personnel officer has charge of the personnel of employees in the central office. The chief clerk has charge of the property of the board, of the file room, and performs the ordinary duties of a chief clerk. The auditor or accounting officer is the person who audits the accounts and the disbursing officer pays them.

Now, in the districts, Mr. Chairman, we have similar organizations, except that they are in direct touch with the men. You will notice that the medical officer, supervisor of advisement and training, and the supervisor of placement are similar. Our central office case board has been reduced in the past few months from about 25 or 26 men to 8. Within the next week or so it will be reduced to two or three at the outside. The reason for the reduction is that we are putting the functions of the case board, practically all of them, more largely all the time in the hands of the districts, so that our case board in the central office will pass only on cases that are appealed from the districts here. If the district says "yes" to the boys, the board will stand back of it; and if it says "no" the boys have the right to appeal to the central authorities. The chief clerk of the district performs, as is noted on this chart, duties which correspond to those of chief clerk, auditor, disbursing officer, and personnel officer in the central office. We have not yet decentralized our audit and disbursing functions of the board. There is reason for it. In the first place, I have felt that it was more important to decentralize the other functions first. In the second place, Treasury regulations are rather technical and difficult to meet, and we have not 14 men who know Treasury regulations whom we can place in the 14 districts, and we can rely upon to see that the legal requirements are met, and we have to keep a hand on that part of the work here in central office until we can ge the men and get them trained and put them in the districts. The records and returns will be kept, at least, for a while here, because of the fact that the numbers of men in the several districts are not large enough to justify the overhead of 14 statistical agencies, and so one is kept.

On the other hand, the functions of the board so far as passing on the cases of the men, the advising with them, of approving their training, of putting them in training, of supervising them and following them up while in training, of seeing that they are employed and properly employed, is delegated to the districts, and central office expects to maintain solely the supervisory function which was so well described by some witnesses here, and which I am sure the committee as well as the board approve. Shall I go on?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. LAMKIN. I would like to discuss as briefly as I can the functions of some of these men in the several districts. I believe this committee is trying to get a comprehensive view of the whole situation.

In the first place, the first man to pass on a case, that the boy comes in contact with, is the vocational advisor. Ever since we could get into hospitals we have had men in the hospitals. I had some work here in central office for Mr. Godwin to do, and have had him at work on it when he was here. I called him in for that work, and in order that he might tell you what was being done and what had been done in the hospitals in the St. Louis district. You understand, of course, that the St. Louis district is but 1 of the 14 districts of the country. The districts were established by the board and rather closely follow the districts of the United States Public Health Service and the National Red Cross.

I understand that the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is asking for authority to establish branch offices, district offices, through the Wason bill, which expects to follow these district lines. In addition to the offices we have certain branch offices in the country. The statement has been made that we have not had any branch offices or do not have any branch offices.

Here is a map showing by the red dots where we have branch offices in the United States; the green stars are our district offices. In the State of California there are some of them, which are marked with black crosses. At those places we are not paying rent. We are paying men for "piecework," as you may call it. We are paying them 95 cents an hour, so that we can call upon them for service at any time when in need. We have in addition to that 16 men situated in various parts of the State of Montana whom we are employing at a dollar a year, so we can call upon them for work if necessary. We have men stationed all through the State of South Dakota at this time. We are planning to have similar ones stationed throughout all the States in district No. 5. These men are recommended to us by the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, or the American Red Cross.

You may be interested in that. I think Mr. Munroe put a list of the branch offices in the record yesterday.

I would like to insert, Mr. Chairman, if I may, in the record, a statement which I thought I had right at my hands showing when these branch offices were established, showing they were established as early as December, 1918. I thought I had it right at my hand, but I will insert the statement later.

This vocational adviser is one of the staff members, as we call him, of the district offices in all the branch offices. I may say in that connection, in reference to Mr. Godwin's testimony, that there is no lack of money for the employment of stenographers. I do not remember that the matter has been put up to me. My judgment is that the difficulty is that we can not get competent stenographers certified from the civil service at $1,200. You understand, Mr. Chairman, that the civil service will certify stenographers to the Federal Board at, say, $1,200, and will certify them to the United States Public Health Service at $1,200, and they will draw the bonus in the United States Public Health Service, the $240, and will not draw it from us. Consequently they will go to the United States Public Health Service, and until they serve the probationary period of six months we can not meet them on equal salary terms. However, we want it understood that we are making arrangements with the Civil Service Commission so that they will certify them to us at the base salary plus the bonus, so that we can pay them $1,440 instead of them being paid $1,200 and the $240 bonus. The psychological effect probably is not quite as good, because the clerk likes to get something for nothing in the way of a bonus, although they get the same amount of money. From the viewpoint of our appropriation it is not quite as good, because that is the large question of whether the overhead, the $1,440, and the $240 bonus will be charged against our overhead, and as all of their services were to be paid out by the different appropriations, the charge against their appropriations and that service, the money comes from the same sources, and we do not believe that Congress is going to be antagonistic at all in the matter of appropriations that are necessary to carry on this work.

The vocational adviser, as I say, is the first one of the staff to meet the soldier. We fill these staff positions subject to later qualification by the Civil Service Commission.

On the 3d of March I had a letter from the Civil Service Commission of which I will read only the first paragraph. I do not wish to burden the record with too much.

> In view of the fact that boards had ample registers of eligibles resulting from examinations for training officers, training assistants, placement officers, and assistant medical officers, no further temporary appointments to those positions will be authorized outside of the register.

So we are filling our staff places as we have to have them from the regular civil-service register. We are assigning them to certain districts. The way they are assigned is something like this: We appoint Mr. A. B. to the position as training assistant or training officer. He is sent out to the Chicago district. The district vocational officer at Chicago is authorized to use this man as he sees fit for a period of one or two or three weeks. If he wants him permanently assigned to the staff he can have him. If he does not want him, if he is not satisfactory, he will be moved somewhere else. So, with that understanding, the district vocational officers are free in the selection of their men, as far as the clerical positions are concerned, since the 1st of October. Each district vocational officer has been authorized to employ not to exceed so many clerks, stenographers, at so much money per clerk or per stenographer. They must abide by the civil-service regulations. Further than that the central office has exercised no jurisdiction and proposes to exercise no jurisdiction. It is not necessary for me to say that in any administrative Government office there are constantly requests being made for transfers from Washington to various positions in the field and from one part of the field to another. These matters are always referred to the district vocational officer. If he approves the transfer is made. If he does not approve the transfer is not made. Since the 15th of September, and I am sure before that, there has not been any clerk sent to a district that was not acceptable to the district vocational officer.

The vocational adviser surveys the man. Survey is simply putting on a piece of paper what you can find out about the man's past history, his education, his disability, his preference, and his opportunity for employment. We heard in the early part of this hearing, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Blanton, I believe it was, discuss the ideas which the committee had in framing the legislation. In other words, they wanted to do the best thing they could for each one of the boys. I am sure that has been the attitude of the board. There have been five principal things to take into consideration. In the first place, we have to find out his previous education. It is not necessary for me to say to you that these boys are coming to us ranging from illiterates to college graduates—from the man who never saw the inside of a school to the man who carries a doctor's degree. The second thing that we have to consider is the matter of their previous industrial experience, and we have men who have come to us and know nothing but the ordinary day labor, as you would call it—the man who worked at a wage all his life, or, at least until he went into the service. We have the fellow who had never had any industrial experience of any kind, but was a student. We have the man who has been a corporation lawyer, or a specialist in eye, ear, nose, and throat surgery.

The other thing which we have to consider, and it is the most difficult of any of them, Mr. Chairman, is the question of the man's disability. They vary in degrees of disability from the man who has lost his members in the amputation cases down to the fellow who has become very slightly disabled and possibly has practically no disability at all. Some of them were rated to us by the Army surgeon as 5 per cent. You are interested, and you may be interested now in this, Mr. Chairman. Let me put it this way, that 25 per cent of the persons to whom the Bureau of War Risk Insurance now awards compensation were discharged with no particular disability, and that makes the problem exceedingly difficult. The number of what you might call "basket" cases is very small, indeed, and I think the American people should be extremely thankful that it is so, and that there are so few cases who have lost both arms and both legs and both eyes. So far as I have heard, I have heard of none who have lost all of those. The blinded cases are small in number, comparatively speaking.

Those two things, Mr. Chairman, I would like for the committee to remember. When you were speaking about training we usually think about schools and colleges. Well, the great majority of these men are not of college-grade education. When you are speaking about disabilities, we instinctively picture in our mind the fellow with the leg or arm off. I would like the newspapers of the country to find me the men who have suffered major amputations. I am willing to say that no one who has suffered a major amputation and who has been outside of the hospital 48 hours has not been offered vocational training. In any such case I will guarantee that within 24 hours he will be offered vocational training if it is called to the attention of the central office.

There are two other things that should be considered, fourth, the man's preference concerning what he wants to do. You know and

Digitized by Google

I know that in dealing with boys very frequently they want to do things that they are not capable of doing. The statement was made to me the other day that in one of the New York universities, I do not like to put the names in the public record, but in a New York university there are a number of men who they say wanted to be public accountants. They will never become accountants, but would make good bookkeepers. They have not had the education and business background for certified public accountant. We gave them the opportunity and now will have to drop them back into first-class commercial schools to make good bookkeepers of them. The fifth thing and the last to be considered is the man's opportunity for employment, his employability after he has been trained. Personally, I think that any man who is properly trained can get a job. The difficulty is to see that he is getting the proper training. I personally believe that in America there is room enough for every man that is properly trained to get a job to make a living.

The vocational adviser gets that information. He gets it in as confidential a manner as he can, and he gets it sitting at a table or by his side. It is necessary for me to say to this committee that the man who is to advise the boys, or your boy, or my boy, is worth more than $2,400 a year. I said it last summer when I was here talking to some Members of Congress, and I say it now. Whether or not some men are working for the board at $2,400 a year now is beside the question. He is worth considerably more than that amount of money.

As soon as this information is gotten and the boy surveyed, he is given a medical examination, if we have no medical information on file. If we have a medical history from the Army or from the doctor of thePublic Health Service or the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, that is referred to the medical examiner for rating as to whether or not he is handicapped so that he is entitled to training. The eligibility man who is situated in the district offices is situated there for the sole purpose of determining whether or not the legal evidence on which is based the award of training, which involves the expediture of governmental funds, to see whether or not that legal evidence is in the folder. That legal evidence must constitute, first, some showing that the man was discharged from the Army under honorable conditions; and, second, that he has a disability incurred, increased, or aggravated by his service or traceable to his service; third, that the disability is a vocational handicap; and, fourth, that the training is feasible from a physical and mental standpoint.

That follows the language of section 2 of the vocational rehabilitation act, and in order to legally expend Government money that information must be in the man's folder, and the eligibility man is situated there to see that it is in the man's folder.

The statement has been made that this eligibility man in the district is responsible to the central office. That is true. The reason for that is twofold. In the first place, the district vocational officer says that he would rather have him responsible to Washington for the passing on the eligibility on the legal evidence in the folder, rather than have him responsible to the district office. There is no use of trying to persuade ourselves that there is no pressure brought to bear on district officers to give men training who are not entitled to it. I think I would be insulting the intelligence of a Congressman if I would say that he did not understand that. The district vocational officers have said to me, "I want this eligibility man whom you placed here pass on the legal evidence in the folder on which the expenditure of the Government's money is to be charged responsible to the central office and not to me." There is another reason for it. The eligibility man can not be sent out to do any other work if he has any work on these cases before him. In other words, we want him to attend to the business which he is sent out to do, and we have told him he must see that every case that is brought to him is given attention, and we will give him the necessary help.

There is a case board, or a case conference, as we call it, which passes on the recommendations of the vocational adviser. We are reducing machinery, as we have learned the job, so that we can expedite action on these cases. But here is our vocational adviser. I dare say there is no man in the employ of the board who knows definitely the 800 or 900 various occupations within which men are being trained, and you can not expect one man to know them. Consequently, for a review of the vocational advisement, it is referred to this case conference, which is composed of a doctor, who passes on the physical disability of a representative of the training section, who passes on the manner of training, of a representative of the placement section, to see whether or not he can be employed after being trained, and of the permanent secretary, who serves to keep the cases regularly flowing past the case conference. These other men—the doctor, the training representative, and the placement representative—vary; they are changed from time to time. Before a man would be trained in agriculture, for instance, you will call from your training section the man who knows agricultural training to help prescribe the course. If, on the other hand, you are going to place him, after training, in a machine shop, you will call the man from the placement section who knows that occupation to pass on the probability of his future employment. If he is to be a printer, you will call the man who knows printing and knows the trades.

After that is done he is turned over to the supervision of the training section or placement section for his training, which depends on whether he is to be in an institution or on the job. The supervision and follow-up work is done by training officers or placement officers, as he may be in an institution or on the job. The medical follow-up of the men in training is done by the doctor. We are looking after the health of the men who are in training, and our instructions to the districts are to the effect that if a man is taken sick that he must have immediate attention. If it is a recurrence of his war disability the Bureau of War Risk Insurance will pay for his treatment. If it is not a recurrence of his war disability the Federal Board for Vocational Training will pay for it. A man must have immediate attention if he gets sick, and the question of which department of the Government pays for it will be settled later. The money comes from the same source, the Government, and it matters very little so the man gets the attention and gets it at a reasonable cost to the Government.

I have explained to you what placement training means, but the placement section has not only supervised the men who are in placement training, but after a man completes his training the placement section sees that the man has a job in which he can carry on successfully. If the eligibility officer who is stationed in the central office states that on the evidence which has been submitted a man is not entitled to either section 2 or section 3 training, there is in each district what is called a board of appeals. The board of appeals is composed of the district vocational officer or his representative, the chief medical officer or his representative, and the eligibility man from the central office. If the board of appeals decides or holds that a man is not entitled to the training and he still wishes to do so, he can appeal to the central office for review and decision. You may be interested in knowing that the board of appeals is working nicely and that fewer cases are coming to the central office.

For instance, there were two reports made, one from Boston and one from St. Louis, on the 20th of April, as to how the boards of appeals were working in these two districts. In Boston 56 cases had been appealed from the decision of the eligibility officer. Fourteen of them had decided that the man was entitled to section 2 training out of the 56. Thirty-six had been appealed in the St. Louis district. In 13 of them the board of appeals decided that the man should have section 2 training.

As has been stated before, the district office now has authority to approve cases of training which do not extend more than two years in length and which do not involve an expenditure of more than $500 per year for tuition, transportation, books, and supplies. That is a question of administration, Mr. Chairman. It is an attempt to safeguard the moneys of the United States Government. I do not mean it is an attempt to be niggardly at all; it is not. But when you have two institutions, one of them where a man can get training at a cost of $300 a year, and another one where he can get training at a cost of $600 a year, we want to know why the boy is being sent to the school that charges $600 a year. So far as I know of, there has been no refusal to give the man the training that he should have because of the cost. But we have to set up a liability register, and we have to know how much money these men are costing the Government.

I believe you will agree with me, Mr. Chairman, that there was some crticism at one time of this board, because we did not know how much money we were going to have to have. I want to say that I think in the record of the Senate hearing on the first deficiency appriation bill of 1920, when we made our request for a deficiency appropriation of $20,000,000, that on the estimates which we had then as to the men going into training, if the same number had gone into training, we would have had money enough to come out at the end of the 30th of June just about even. In other words, the estimates which were made were remarkably good estimates for a Government department that is dealing with as uncertain a thing as how many men are going into training. It is sound business when you set reasonable limits on the expenditure of money for tuition and ask that any additional or higher tuition rates be referred to this office for approval.

I may say to you that Mr. Wickersham, when he was here a few days ago, stated that he wrote to me personally in regard to a case

Mr. LAMKIN. That is what it is, Service Bulletin No. 8. The purpose of these vocational training conferences with the legion is to perfect plans by which not only will the man be told of his opportunity for training but that the local posts and particularly the woman's auxiliary will help follow up these boys after they are in training and see that they keep satisfied while they are in training, which I know we all regard as a particularly important piece of work.

The CHAIRMAN. We have the right to believe that the legion will be more sympathetic about that sort of work than some outside organization.

Mr. LAMKIN. I have no doubt about that, and we are in the attitude, and have been in the attitude, of using the legion as fully as it will cooperate and act.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you find the legion ready and willing to do this or do they receive it as a task that they think ought to be exercised by the board?

Mr. LAMKIN. Some States receive it very readily, and in other States they are slow to take hold. I think in the States that are slow to take hold the difficulty is very largely a financial one in getting their conferences called. Some of the State legion organizations have not much money with which they can call these conferences.

As far as the actual work being done is concerned, I think we should use all cooperating agencies, Mr. Chairman, but I feel very strongly that this is a governmental problem, and as far as the bills are concerned the United States Government ought to pay all the bills contracted with it.

The CHAIRMAN. I agree with you.

Mr. LAMKIN. I believe you will agree with that.

There is one other cooperating agency of which I would like to speak, and that is the National Antituberculosis Association, and I would like to speak of that at this time, particularly in view of the statements made in the testimony of Mr. McMurtrie, in which it was stated that we had not cooperated with the National Antituberculosis Association.

The National Antituberculosis Association created a special advisory committee which did, and does now, serve as an advisory committee to the board on the question of the training of men suffering with tuberculosis.

I think, aside from the question of the rehabilitation of men disabled in the military service, the tuberculosis problem in the country as a whole is recognized as one of the serious problems of America. I remember upon my first experience with a congressional committee a Senator questioned me concerning the treatment, or rather the training, of men suffering with tuberculosis. I think I can speak for the board—I know I can speak for myself—when I say that in the training of these men we expect to follow as closely as we can the advice and suggestions which are given by this organization which is devoting its entire attention to the tuberculosis problem.

The CHAIRMAN. You might be interested, Mr. Lamkin, in having your memory refreshed, if you were not present at the hearing, that when the joint hearings were held by this committee and the Senate committee on the industrial cripple bill, a bill that was to add to the rehabilitation of the soldiers, this association to which you refer, the Antituberculosis Association, was very exacting in its demand that the Government do something outside of the soldier work; and you have made an affiliation with that association.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir. I was not present at that hearing of which you speak, but I am sure they are exacting. As I recall the testimony of Mr. McMurtrie, he stated that we had not followed the suggestions which the National Antituberculosis Association made.

Here is a summary of a report dated June 10, 1919, by the advisory committee on tuberculosis, which is drawn up by the secretary of that committee:

In October, 1918, the National Tuberculosis Association was asked to cooperate with the Federal Board in an investigation of problems involved in rehabilitation of tuberculous soldiers, sailors, and marines. An advisory committee was appointed by the president, with the medical field secretary acting as secretary to the committee.

The work of the committee may be summarized as follows:

1. Unanimous conclusion that every man who has once manifested active tuberculosis must be considered to have a more or less permanent disability. The board of directors of the association, March 5, passed a resolution that a man with proven tuberculosis is entitled to compensation, the minimum rate to be not less than 25 per cent. Copies of this resolution were sent to the Surgeon General of the Army and directors of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the Federal board.

That is their first recommendation. Instruction No. 20, under date of the 18th of August, 1919, of the Federal Board, applies directly to that recommendation, that a man shall be considered to have a 25 per cent disability if he is suffering from tuberculosis.

2. Suggested that every award to cases of tuberculosis be subject to possible downward revision after lapse of not less than three years.

Mr. TOWNER. Who was it that made that suggestion?

Mr. LAMKIN. The advisory committee of the National Antituberculosis Association.

Mr. TOWNER. What does that mean?

Mr. LAMKIN. If you will just let me read the next sentence, Judge:

Men should always have opportunity to apply for increased compensation.

That section applies solely to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and not to the board. In other words, if a man regains his earning capacity the award of compensation is subject to downward revision. As far as the board is concerned, we are considering the man to have a major vocational handicap if he has suffered tuberculosis in the service, and I believe that the attitude of Congress, as well as the board and the American people, is that when you start upon a program of vocational rehabilitation it should be completed.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me make an observation here, Mr. Lamkin. I do not know whether the other members of the committee will agree with me or not, but this is my personal impression. I think that it is very unfortunate from a good many standpoints, after having made an award, to decrease it because a man gets better. It occurs to me that the only fair thing to do is to not put a premium upon a man's remaining always incapacitated, but to give him the initial rate or the larger rate, whatever it may be, until the man is finally discharged. It occurs to me that is the better and the more liberal and the more defensible policy with regard to the board's action.

Mr. LAMKIN. Well, Mr. Chairman, may I ask the judge to differentiate between the board and the bureau in that respect. As far as the board is concerned, if you will let me a little later I would like to read into the record a letter or two which definitely states that that is the view which we are taking of it. I believe with you that if we say to this man, "You are entitled to training," we should finish the job until he can stand on his own feet.

Mr. TOWNER. More particularly, the matter has been called to our attention from the demotions from the second to the third grade, a thing that in my judgment ought never to occur unless it is a case of fraud or deception or something of that sort.

Mr. LAMKIN. I would like to discuss that. I think we are not far apart on that matter.

Reading from this same report:

3. Compensation should not be withdrawn because of success in overcoming handicap. It was the sense of the committee that tuberculosis should be included among specific injuries of Article III, section 302 (2) of the war risk insurance act.

Again, that is a problem for the bureau and not the board.

4. Recommended that Federal Board exert every effort to secure a clear-cut definition of policy by Bureau of War Risk so that its own policies and program may be stabilized and delays reduced.

That was covered by the legislation of July 11.

5. Recommended that Federal Board make every effort to induce bureau to concentrate in selected sanatoria, so far as possible, the compensable tuberculous cases and that Federal Board provide occupational therapy and prevocational training wherever 20 or more such cases are in one institution.

The Federal Board, of course, has no authority to provide either occupational therapy or prevocational training.

The CHAIRMAN. That is purely by permission of the hospital authorities?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir. We are going into any Public Health hospital where they have 30 patients. We believe that out of 30 patients, probably 60 per cent of them, or 18 men, will be ready for training.

The CHAIRMAN. But even in that case it must be at the option of the hospital authorities.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; some of these boys may be able to take an hour a day, some three or four hours a day, and we are appointing the teachers and sending them in. We are not saying that we have to have one teacher or two or three teachers for a certain number of men; we are going to furnish the teachers that are necessary to do the job, and we are forgetting whether it is "occupational therapy" or "prevocational training" or "vocational training"; it is a job which the Government must do and must undertake as soon as the boy can begin training and carry it through to completion after he gets out of the hospital.

6. Considered inadvisable for the present to attempt to devise a list of occupations which are or are not suitable for the tuberculous.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Lamkin, if it would not interrupt you, I would like to know whether the board has had any trouble about getting into the hospitals for occupational therapy.

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. Considerable trouble.

The CHAIRMAN. You have?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; I think that is obviated at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. That was a phase of the problem that was difficult to get at when the bill was framed. It appeared to us that there ought to be some bedside curative work done.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. That the prevocational training ought to start in the hospitals, but just how to adjust it so as to have no confusion was a very difficult problem, and finally it was left purely to the option of the authorities.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You could go in provided they would admit you, and they could follow up the soldier after his discharge, provided the board would permit it, and it has been a matter of speculation with me as to whether that has worked satisfactorily or not.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think it is working now. It was slow, of course, in getting underway. I would like to make this statement, Mr. Chairman, that in at least one hospital where we found the commanding officer unfriendly to beginning vocational training in the hospital, representations were made to the Surgeon General and a new commanding officer took his place. Consequently we are in that hospital now with a number of patients.

The CHAIRMAN. As Judge Towner suggested a moment ago, it takes the closest cooperation of the two functions to do this work.

Mr. LAMKIN. There is no question about that. In fact, the medical follow-up of men suffering from tuberculosis, after they have been discharged, is one of the most serious problems of the whole reconstruction program.

The CHAIRMAN. That would appear so to the committee.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think we will agree with you that training and treatment should be simultaneous and the follow-up medical care should be simultaneous with training.

7. Recommended a special medical survey form for arrested cases.

That was prepared and is used.

8. A circular on treatment and training for the tuberculous was prepared for use of instruction of vocational advisers. It was first mimeographed and then printed and distributed to camps, Red Cross chapters, etc. Literature to stimulate ambition and determination in the men to reestablish themselves physically and industrially has been printed and distributed.

That has been done.

9. To supplement printed bulletins and leaflets, the committee passed a resolution that direct instruction by a specialist in tuberculosis be provided in the various district offices to include conferences with the district vocational officers and with medical examiners; that an expert on tuberculosis be engaged as an assistant to chief medical officer of Federal board.

That has been done.

10. The committee emphasized the point that any assignment of occupation to a tuberculous man should be considered as tentative only, and that careful supervision by experts is essential. In connection with this, the committee recommended that the board make a survey of Rutland Private Sanatorium.

That was done. The Rutland Private Sanatorium now has a contract with the board by which the training of the men who are placed there by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is begun, and their training is continued in the same institution, except they are transferred over to another building where they keep on in the same shops, under the same medical supervision, until we can complete their training there. So the only difference between a man whose case is not arrested and a man whose cases is arrested is whether he is living in this building or in that building at the Rutland Sanatorium.

11. Recommended the use of the sanitary standards for nonhazardous industries adopted by the committee on shop and industrial sanitation of the Council of National Defense.

They were adopted.

12. Memorandum was prepared setting forth benefits to be derived from the productive vocational workshop for the "industrial convalescence" of arrested cases under proper medical supervision. At its meeting on March 5 the National Tuberculosis Association appointed a committee to confer with the New York committee on tuberculosis of the Charity Organization Society as to possibility of that organization's undertaking the establishment of such a shop. National Tuberculosis Association has agreed to assist financially up to $10,000.

The CHAIRMAN. What is this New York committee?

Mr. LAMKIN. It is a branch of the National Tuberculosis Association.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not governmental.

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir. They have not yet provided their cooperative workshop which they suggested they could furnish.

13. Memorandum presenting definite plan for the establishment of a colony for arrested or quiescent cases was considered and following resolution adopted:

That it is the sense of the advisory committee that the plan for an industrial community for tuberculous people who are able to work, as presented by the secretary, is replete with interest and deserves further study. It is recommended that the plan be published and that discussion be invited from all agencies interested in the subject.

They have not yet provided the colony.

14. Recommended that there be an after-care secretary in the central office who would put into the hands of the district officers all the follow-up information that can be obtained; prepare proper forms for follow-up reports; and in all ways counsel with the officers on follow-up service. He should cooperate with existing agencies thus making it unnecessary for the board to build up a social service organization of its own.

Mr. TOWNER. That is a recommendation for your action, is it?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Have you not done that already?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. And do you not do that already?

Mr. LAMKIN. Judge, this whole thing was June 10, 1919.

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, I see.

Mr. LAMKIN. And while we have not employed a man whom we call the after-care secretary, it has been because we have not been able to get just exactly the man, but we are doing it through our medical officers. We have a specialist on tuberculosis not only in this office but a specialist on tuberculosis in every one of the district offices, a medical officer who is giving his time to that work.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. The important point is that somebody should do it. It is immaterial what you call him.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes. I have read this, Mr. Chairman, in order to show that so far as we have been able to do so, we have absolutely followed the directions and suggestions of the National Antituberculosis Association.

The CHAIRMAN. Those recommendations were made in June, 1919?

Mr. LAMKIN. June 10, 1919.

The CHAIRMAN. And there are a dozen or more of them?

Mr. LAMKIN. Fourteen of them.

The CHAIRMAN. And you have acted favorably on how many?

Mr. LAMKIN. We have acted favorably on all except on that we were to act on.

The CHAIRMAN. And how soon did you act upon them, generally speaking, I mean?

Mr. LAMKIN. I can not answer that definitely, Mr. Chairman, because most of them were acted upon when I got here in September.

The CHAIRMAN. You came here last September?

Mr. LAMKIN. The 15th of September.

The CHAIRMAN. So that they are all in operation now?

Mr. LAMKIN. They are in operation now. We recently had two conferences on the question of tuberculosis, one in New York City along in the first part of February, and the other in Colorado the latter part of February, as I remember, to which an adviser and a medical officer from each district went, and at which the National Antituberculosis Association sent their experts to discuss with these officers of ours the problems of tuberculosis.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is one other very important Government agency which I would like to discuss just a minute or two, and that is our relations to Congress——

Mr. TOWNER (interposing). One of the most difficult problems that we have to consider, and one of the most difficult problems for any governmental agency that has anything to do with this work of rehabilitation, is the treatment and care and education, so far as possible, of the tubercular soldiers, those who have incurred it during the war or since because of disabilities incurred in the war, and the fact seems to be very deepely impressed, I think, upon the minds of the committee, that there ought to be the most earnest and cordial cooperation between governmental agencies, especially with regard to this class of men, and also with the antituberculosis association which is an outside agency but which, of course, is interested in this work of the Government, and if there is anything that may be suggested by the board that will throw further light upon the matter, I am quite sure, the committee will be very glad, indeed, to have it.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think, Mr. Chairman, the board recognizes the difficulty and the importance of the treatment and training of these tubercular men. You have this other phase or element in it, which makes it even more difficult, and that is the mental attitude of the man himself. In the first place, he is a wanderer. The psychology of the man suffering from tuberculosis is that he can get his health over in the next county or the next State or somewhere else. He wants to change. He wants to move, and tuberculosis authorities state that that is not necessary at all. There is another thing that you have to take into consideration, and that is the desire of the man suffering from tuberculosis to be at home, when probably the home is not the best place for him to recover his health. I think it would not be out of the way to make this statement: The Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and I were in Boston along in the first of January and the director was told of a man who was suffering from tuberculosis and had not had care. The director got in a taxicab and went down to the boy's house and persuaded the mother and the boy to let him go to a Public Health Service hospital. The Public Health Service was ready and willing and wanted to help him, but the boy would not go. The boy could not be taken care of at his home. They had no facilities for taking care of him. So the director got him in the taxicab and sent him over to the Public Health hospital and got him admitted where he could get good care. As soon as he got his money under the Sweet bill, he left the hospital and went back home. His mother said she wanted her boy at home and the boy wanted to go.

Now, those are just some problems that complicate the whole situation.

I may say in reference to our relations with Congress, Mr. Chairman, that the standing committee of the board, as I understand it, has been the official representative of the board before congressional committees and before Members of Congress, and as far as my relations as chief of the division are concerned, I have met the individual members only and have been called to committee hearings in one instance only by the chairman of the committee; on other occasions I have gone with the members of the standing committee. I would like to state, however, one or two things which you may want said or may want to be reminded of. The question has been continually raised here about the matter of money and appropriations. I would like to call your attention to the hearings before the Senate committee on the first deficiency appropriation bill on October 17, 1919.

Senator Curtis made this statement:

Senator CURTIS. I think you are wrong about your dates—

I was speaking about how long it took to get a deficiency bill passed—

I think we provided for the War Risk in an urgent bill and urgent bills go through in a rush. The general deficiency bill is the one that is delayed until the last of the session.

Mr. LAMKIN. I can say for the board that if you will see to it that we have the money so that we will not have to make the soldiers wait, it is immaterial to us whether you give it to us at one time or at another time.

The CHAIRMAN (Senator Warren). Your entire board and all the employees under it are satisfied, are you not, that that institution is going to be provided for?

Mr. LAMKIN. There is no question about that.

The CHAIRMAN (Senator Warren). In other words, you are not going to lose your employees because the money is not appropriated a year ahead?

Mr. LAMKIN. Oh, no; we have gone on the theory that Congress is going to see that this work is done, that Congress has given us a definite work to do, and that they will provide us the money to do it.

Now, Mr. Wickersham, when he was here, introduced the statement which I made before the American Legion commanders assembled at the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. I could say some things about that meeting, if necessary. The meeting was called by the bureau. The statement was made that it was called by the bureau and the board and the Public Health Service. The board was present for a part of a day, and we had no notice of it except what came indirectly to us, and the American Legion commanders were specifically asked twice in that half day's session to come over to see the board and investigate its working, and so on and so forth, and I think two members came.

Digitized by Google

Mr. WICKERSHAM. You speak of expense—

This was about the 17th of December, I believe—is it the policy of the board to attempt to be economical, or is it the idea of the board to do all it can and when it runs out of money to go back to Congress for another appropriation?

Mr. LAMKIN. That is the policy of the board—to keep the overhead expense as low as possible, to spend everything for it the men need, and go back to Congress for more money if necessary.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Do you think you will need more money before the year is out in order to permit the fullest possible scope in your board?

Mr. LAMKIN. No question about it.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Do you contemplate going to Congress and asking for an additional appropriation?

Mr. LAMKIN. I can reply to that by saying that the Senate Committee on Appropriations called for representatives of the board to appear before them. Senator Warren asked the chief of the division as to whether or not it would be satisfactory to the board to give them $5,000,000, or part of the money he said was necessary, and give them the rest later. We replied it did not make any difference to us how they gave us the money, just so long as they gave us enough and gave it to us quick enough, so the disabled men would not have to wait because of lack of appropriations, and Senator Warren assured us they would appropriate all the money necessary.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. You have no information from any congressional source that Congress would not be ready and willing to appropriate any amount of money necessary for this work?

Mr. LAMKIN. Not a particle.

I think that it is just to the Members of Congress, Mr. Chairman, for a representative of the board, at least, to say that the board has no doubt that Congress is going to appropriate the money that is necessary to put the job through.

The CHAIRMAN. We are glad to have you make that statement, Mr. Lamkin, because there is no doubt but what that is the situation. However, it must be understood that the necessity for the money must be made clear, because Congress is not going to make unusual appropriations on speculation.

Mr. LAMKIN. Congress should not do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The situation is such that Congress would not do that.

Mr. LAMKIN. As far as figuring the expense of the work, Mr. Chairman, is concerned, I think you can figure it only in one way, and that is by the acturial method. That is the way in which we have attempted to figure it out. It cost so much per man per month for tuition, so much per man per month for books and supplies, so much per man per month for maintenance, so much per man per month for his traveling expense and for his maintenance while traveling, and so much per man per month overhead.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, upon that basis you made your representations to the committee and asked for how much this year?

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. For the next year, $90,303,000.

The CHAIRMAN. And it was allowed?

Mr. LAMKIN. And I understand that the sundry civil bill carries $90,000,000. In October, 1919, we estimated that it would take $20,000,000 on that basis, to run us until the 30th of June, 1920, but we estimated at that time, Mr. Chairman, we would have 30,000 men in training in the months of April, May, and June, 1920. I believe those were the three months.

The CHAIRMAN. I have not consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations but in his opening remarks in presenting the sundry civil bill he reported, I remember, from the floor, $90,000,000 for this work, and I think you are to be congratulated on that because I know of no other item that has not been cut from the amount of the estimate. It has been the business of the Committee on Appropriations to cut wherever they could.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations is acting from necessity as well as from wisdom in that matter. We have tried to keep the overhead expenses down. I believe that you will find some criticism is made in regard to the nonpayment of bills, because some are being held up because of what we believe are unnecessary expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. When you are ready to go into it, Mr. Lamkin, although some other members of the board may have gone into it while I was absent, I would like to take up the statement that was made that of an amount of something like $116 expended only about $6 was devoted to rehabilitation.

Mr. LAMKIN. I am prepared to give you a statement of the complete expenditures of the board for rehabilitation work from the date that we began the organization to the 1st day of April which will show you that the total overhead is something less than 25 per cent of the total appropriation; that since the 1st day of last July until the 1st of April—and you told me not to go beyond April, although I can give you the balances—the total overhead is less than 20 per cent, and for the last month or two the total overhead has been less than 15 per cent of the expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. We want to go into that in detail.

Mr. LAMKIN. I am very glad to give you those figures.

There is one relation with Congress which I would like to discuss very briefly, and that is because the man's name has been brought into this hearing on one or two occasions. When I came to the central office on the 15th of September, one of the first questions that was raised was the question of whether or not Members of Congress and others were receiving prompt replies to their inquiries concerning disabled men. A man had been definitely assigned to that work. I called Mr. U. G. Smith from down in the main body of the office—we were then in Convention Hall and you gentlemen have been there—we had the balcony on which the administrative offices were located, the other offices being downstairs in a great, open floor—and gave him a room and a stenographer, and later an assistant, adjoining or practically adjoining my room, and every inquiry that came from a Member of Congress or came from an American Legion post or came from the Veterans of Foreign Wars or came from the Red Cross or came from an individual was referred to Mr. U. G.

Digitized by Google

Smith, and he was told to get a reply back to the person asking for it immediately. Now, if that is a wrong practice, I am willing to assume responsibility for it, but I believe that when a Member of Congress asks any Government agency for information, he ought to have it and have it at once. One day last week I made inquiry and found that not a case that had been referred to Mr. Smith had laid there longer than 48 hours unanswered.

Now, that does not apply solely to Members of Congress, Mr. Chairman, and I deny any statement that is made that a Congressman has to ask, in order to get a decision on a boy's case or that a Congressman gets a decision, "Yes," merely because he asks for it. I do believe that a Congressman, whose constituent has a right to ask him to follow up his case, has the right to get a reply from any department of the Government, and we are going to give it to him; but I want to emphasize the fact that we will give the information just as quickly to the boy or just as quickly to the boy's father or just as quickly to the boy's friend as we will to anyone else who makes inquiry of us.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, it is not necessary to have a "pull" in order to get action.

Mr. LAMKIN. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Some of the boys who have appeared here, in their testimony, seem to think that in order to get action there has got to be the influence of a Congressman brought to bear. I think you heard testimony of that kind.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; I heard testimony to that effect. I think it is impossible and I think it is unwise to say that you will not take any boy's case out of the regular routine if a special inquiry is made concerning it. I remember the case of Frank Hammond, who came here. He testified that Congressman Hicks became interested in his case. Well, Hammond was awarded section 3 training, but if it had gotten consideration he would have been awarded section 3 training without Congressman Hicks's influence, if you want to call it influence, as quick as with it, and I do not believe that the majority of Congressmen are bringing influence to bear. I do not think it is a question of influence. I think they want a decision rendered in the case.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to go into another matter, if I may, that is a source of considerable annoyance and of considerable misunderstanding.

I would like to discuss just as briefly as I can the law and the regulations of the board. The original rehabilitation act, section 2——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Mr. Lamkin, before you enter upon that, in connection with the necessity of having a Congressman intercede, may I ask you about a case that has come to my attention from Brownsville, Tex. I think you probably have noted it. It is the case of a man by the name of Joseph Thiesmeyer:

We thought that the case of Joseph Thiesmeyer had been finally settled and that the soldier would be permitted to take training through the Board for Vocational Education. On March 25 the soldier received an order from W. F. Doughty to report to San Antonio, for some cause which he has not yet discovered. Upon his arrival in San Antonio he went to the office of W. J. Bollen and Jourdan, in the Moore Building, these two gentlemen being the Board of Vocational Education in San Antonio.

Digitized by Google

I wish to protest to you, and I trust through you to this Vocational Board, about the treatment this soldier received. Bollen and Jourdan acted toward him as if he had been a dirty crook. Regardless of the fact that the soldier was reporting on W. F. Doughty's order, they told him Doughty had no authority to send him there; told him he had no authority and no right to take this matter up with his Congressman, or directly with Washington, and, in their entire demeanor, conducted themselves as if they were paying out of their own personal funds the money for this wounded soldier to get a gainful education, and said to him, when he left, "There is no use in your getting up on your high horse and trying to bull things—sending a wire to your Congressman in Washington will not do you any good," etc.

I referred this to you or to some one to make a report on it, and I have the letter which you sent to Mr. Garner. Your letter was written to Mr. John N. Garner, of Texas, and he has referred it to me. Do you remember that case?

Mr. LAMKIN. I do not remember the case at all, but I will be very glad to look into the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. It strikes me that there is either some misinformation down there or else two members of the board are acting very unwisely.

Mr. LAMKIN. Mr. Chairman, I think you will find there are two sides——

The CHAIRMAN. When I refer to members of the board——

Mr. LAMKIN. I think you will find there are two sides to most of these cases.

The CHAIRMAN. When I said members of the board I meant persons attached to your work.

Mr. LAMKIN. I understand that. I am getting out of my line, but I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I will be very glad to have you or any member of this committee interrupt me at any time, because I can always get back to my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. You were on that particular subject.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes. Concerning the question of discourtesy, I will say that nobody is "tied" to any of these places, and if it is shown that any man is discourteous to any disabled man we will separate him from the service; but I want to be shown.

The CHAIRMAN. That is proper, of course.

Mr. LAMKIN. And I shall be very glad to investigate that case and find out just exactly what the conditions are, but as has been stated here time and again, and as you gentlemen realize, the majority of these men are not in a normal mental condition. I do not mean they are deficient, but they have been through an experience that none of us has been through.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by a majority of these men are not in a normal mental condition?

Mr. LAMKIN. I mean the disabled men, men who suffered disability and came back from the service; they are in a nervous condition, at least strained, to say the least about it. The boys, many of them suffered "shell shock."

Mr. BURROUGHS. Assuming that is true, and I think it is true, would that not of itself impose upon the official an even greater obligation to use an exceptional amount of care?

Mr. LAMKIN. I think there is no question about that, Mr. Chairman. Again, let me remind you that when you take everybody who comes from the civil service and passes an examination making

Digitized by Google

70 per cent or more, you will not always get men who can keep their tempers, and a man who would be all right if entirely normal would magnify little things until they have a very different and disagreeable meaning.

If you have no objection, I should like to discuss, as briefly as I can, before a committee composed largely of lawyers the law.

The original vocational rehabilitation act, not the one which you have, but the original act, passed in June, 1918, read as follows:

SEC. 2. That every person who is disabled under circumstances entitling him, after discharge from the military or naval forces of the United States, to compensation under Article III of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved October 6, 1917," hereinafter referred to as 'said act,' and who, after his discharge, in the opinion of the board, is unable to carry on a gainful occupation, to resume his former occupation, or to enter upon some other occupation, or having resumed or entered upon such occupation is unable to continue the same successfully, shall be furnished by the said board, where vocational rehabilitation is feasible, such course of vocational rehabilitation as the board shall prescribe and provide.

That is at the bottom of page 3.

I would like for you to note the two requirements in section 2. The first one is that every person who is disabled under circumstances entitling him, after discharge, to compensation. That is the first requirement. The second requirement was that if in the opinion of the board he was unable to carry on some gainful occupation, to resume his former occupation, or to enter upon some other occupation, or having resumed or entered upon such occupation is unable to continue the same successfully. You can see that that would narrow the vocational retraining to a very material extent. A man must, in the first place, be entitled to compensation, and, in the second place, it says can not carry on a gainful occupation, he can not resume his former occupation or can not enter upon some other occupation, or if he has resumed or entered upon such occupation is unable to continue or carry on the same successfully. That was the original law. That was the law until the 11th of July, 1919. I do not know who is responsible, I am not trying to fix the responsibility, I think it is a great deal more important to get the job done and get it done now than to try and go back and fix the responsibility for something settled or done then. I think it was partly due to the fact at first, the advisers could "pass the buck" to the bureau and tell the disabled men to "wait until you are declared compensable." That got out to the boys. They remembered the first condition was "discharge under conditions entitling them to compensation" and the second series of requirements were lost sight of. As I understand the war-risk insurance act, it provides that a man in order to receive certain benefits for dismemberment, in order to receive any compensation at all, must be 10 per cent disabled.

Mr. DALLINGER. The law does not say so?

Mr. LAMKIN. I mean the war risk insurance act.

Mr. DALLINGER. That was a ruling of the board?

Mr. LAMKIN. I am speaking of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. I am not positive about that, but my recollection is that the law says that, but either way, it does not matter. He got no compensation until he was 10 per cent disabled. Consequently, it got out among the men, it was repeated by agents of the board, it was stated to them by agents of the Red Cross, and by representatives of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, that if you have a 10 per cent disability you are entitled to vocational training. The Army officers got it. The Army officers, surgeons, and examining boards, time after time, would say, "There is not much the matter with this boy, but if we give him 10 per cent disability he will be entitled to vocational training, let us give it to him," and they gave him 10 per cent disability and discharged him.

Digitized by Google

Mr. DALLINGER. And the board got out some literature?

Mr. LAMKIN. That is true. I do not think that it was specifically so stated in terms, but I think anybody who read that literature would say that if a man was discharged with a disability he could be put in practically any training that he wanted. I am not trying to say who was or who was not responsible, I am trying to speak of what the conditions were. The result was that as these men came out the "surveys" began to pile up, and the board could not act until the bureau had determined the compensatability. In the meantime, when the law of July 11 was passed Congress liberalized the provisions. From the reading of this law as it stands here, instead of section 2 now stating that a man must not be able to carry on a gainful occupation or must not be able to resume his former occupation or must not be able to enter upon some other occupation, or having resumed such occupation, can not carry it on. The present law, while liberalized by this committee itself, reads, on page 4:

> Or later developing a disability traceable in the opinion of the board to service with such forces, and who, in the opinion of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, is in need of vocational rehabilitation to overcome the handicap of such disability.

Thus Congress recognized that a man wounded could carry on a gainful occupation and could enter upon another occupation, but when he did he was handicapped in doing it, and provided for those people in section 2.

Mr. DALLINGER. The whole question of whether he was handicapped and whether he was entitled to training is a matter of judgment?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir. I have not any doubt that a good many times the board has erred in its judgment, but any human organization will err in its judgment.

Here are the instructions of the board which I filed the other day, Miscellaneous, 150, section 400. I should like to read that in connection with section 2 of the law.

> 400. A disabled person who meets the following conditions is entitled to vocational rehabilitation under section 2 of the law:
> (a) He must have been separated from the military or naval forces of the United States under honorable conditions since April 7, 1917.

The law says:

> Who, since April 7, 1917, has resigned or has been discharged or furloughed therefrom under honorable conditions.

So you must be separated from it under honorable conditions.

Digitized by Google

(b) He must have a disability that was incurred, increased, or aggravated while he was a member of such forces or that is traceable, in the opinion of the board, to service in such forces.

The act reads, "having a disability incurred, increased, or aggravated while a member of such forces, or later developing a disability traceable, in the opinion of the board, to service with such forces."

(c) His disability, in the opinion of the board, must be such as to cause him to be in need of vocational rehabilitation to overcome the handicap of his disability.

The language of the law is, "who, in the opinion of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, is in need of vocational rehabilitation to overcome the handicap of such disability."

(d) His physical and mental condition must be such, in the opinion of the board, as to make vocational rehabilitation feasible.

The law says:

Shall be furnished by the said board, where vocational rehabilitation is feasible, such course of vocational rehabilitation as the board shall prescribe and provide.

The law further goes on and makes this statement in section 3, which we call section 3 cases:

That the courses of vocational rehabilitation provided for under this act shall, as far as practicable and under such conditions as the board may prescribe, be made available without cost for instruction for the benefit of any person who is disabled under circumstances entitling him, after discharge from the military or naval forces of the United States, to compensation under Article III of this act and who is not included in section 2 hereof.

The difference, of course, between a man who is compensable under section 2 and may not be compensable under section 3 is, that if he is handicapped in carrying on his occupation, in the opinion of the board, he is entitled to section 2 of the training, and if he is not handicapped but is still compensable, he is entitled to section 3 training. That is a question of judgment.

Mr. ROBSION. No soldier or sailor can get training unless compensable?

Mr. LAMKIN. If he is 10 per cent disabled and is not handicapped vocationally, he is entitled under the law to section 3 training. If he is handicapped vocationally, he is entitled to section 2 training, and so on. A wood polisher who had a reduction of hearing in one of his ears, on the face of the case the man's employability was not lessened, there was no handicap from the vocational standpoint, but he was entitled and is entitled to money compensation for the damage which he has received; but under the law he is not entitled to retraining, because he can go back to his same occupation and earn exactly the same money as he did before.

Mr. ROBSION. He is not entitled to training under section 2?

Mr. LAMKIN. He is not entitled to training under section 2. Here is another situation: One man in the Army was kicked in the mouth by a Missouri mule. His upper lip was split. The Bureau of War Risk Insurance did not pay him compensation. He was, however, disabled under circumstances entitling him to compensation, and, being a professional clarionet player, he was vocationally handicapped to such an extent that vocational training was necessary and was given him. As far as his vocation was concerned, he was as badly handicapped as if he had a very serious disability. As far as his employment in the general labor market was concerned, it was not affected at all.

Digitized by Google

Take the case of a man who has an injury to one finger of his left hand, if he is a bookkeper he is entitled to compensation in money damage for the physical suffering which he has had. I am speaking of the theories of the law. As a boookkeeper he is entitled to section 3 training, which will let him take a night course, a commercial correspondence course, and which will let him become a better bookkeeper, a better acountant, but if he had an injury that even stiffened the third finger of his left hand and was a violinist by profession, he is 100 per cent vocationally handicapped.

If you ask my personal opinion, I would like to see every man who went into the service of the United States given any vocational training that he wants. If the Government can not afford that money, I should like to see every man who is awarded compensation vocationally rehabilitated, any man discharged under a 10 per cent injury.

Mr. DALLINGER. You are in favor of the Rogers bill?

Mr. LAMKIN. I am. I think the boys have a right to expect this. I think a good deal of our difficulty—I am not speaking about the board—I am speaking about the United States Government, we are all one, the United States Government—I think a great deal of our difficulty is due to the fact that the boys have been led to believe and they were satisfied that they would get vocational training from the Government. It is not the law. I do not know who is responsible for the circulation of the statement, but it was circulated by regular Government employees and the literature was sent out by a Government agency.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to go on, if I may, with the question of follow-up. It has been charged that there was no follow-up service. I do not like to say it has been charged, because my understanding is that this investigation is more to improve the service and to give the boys what they need than it is anything else. The training of these men has involved a tremendous problem that is sometimes not fully realized by persons who are not intimately connected with it. In the first place, we have to train the faculties of the institutions where the boys go. I think Mr. McMurtrie brought that to your attention when discussing it with you. He spoke of the special schools and said that other countries had established special schools. We have not in this country. We have tried, with very few exceptions, to use the existing educational institutions. It is, in the first place, cheaper; in the second place it is more permanent. It is a better thing for the country as a whole to build up the educational institutions which you have rather than to establish special schools which will be torn down after this work is over. As I told the gentleman from the vice chairman's State, Iowa, this question of rehabilitation is a challenge to the educational system and educational establishments of this country, to take these boys and fit them for the jobs. If the school system of America can not fit the boys for the jobs it needs revision, and a very material revision. We have to use the universities or the higher schools, because the men who are sent there, they are men, they are not boys any longer. If I may be pardoned this personal reference, I remember that I went to five deans of one great educational institution in order to get a boy who was not yet through his high school admitted to the university as a special student. They said to me, "We can not admit him, because he has not sufficient high-school credits."

I told them that boys who served two years overseas were mature enough to go into the institution, and apparently my statement had some effect on the five deans, because that educational institution is admitting ex-service men and is waiving the entrance requirement for men who served in the United States Army. We have had to train faculties to take hold of these men and to get into proper contact and proper relationship with them. We are trying to do it through personal touch or through our counselors and representatives. We have had to train the men. We have had to organize courses of study. I think probably Mr. Nelson, who is a farmer—I do not know whether any of the other members of the committee are farmers—but that Mr. Nelson would be very much interested in the short course, the unit course of agriculture that has been adopted and put into effect in many of the institutions of the country, particularly at the Massachusetts Agricultural Institute at Amherst, whereby these disabled men can enter at the beginning of any month if they want to get the unit course of a month's duration, and then take up another subject, and so on. I think you would be very much interested in the courses of study that have been formulated by agents of this board working in conjunction with the agricultural colleges of the United States. The agricultural colleges, of course, as you understand, are a little easier to get into than any other colleges, because they are used to handling short courses and the short courses are usually more for mature men than the others. We had to follow up these fellows by the establishment, as far as we could, of the big brother feeling among every man in the institution, the instructors, and all the people in the town.

I think when you analyze this whole question you will find one of the most difficult problems that we have to solve is the economic and social rehabilitation of these men. This aid that the Government gives them is not charity. These men must live on their income. They should not have to provide for themselves from outside sources; they must be taught to live on their income. They should not be, to use a slang phrase, "petted"; they are men, men who have served in the Army of the United States and they need assistance to get back on their own feet. We are having difficulty in some places by some well-meaning persons likely to think that they need "petting." After a man completes his training in an institution we will give him 60 days' training on the job as a follow-up to see if he can carry on.

I should like to discuss, if I may, the question of statistics a little more, Mr. Chairman. I have never regarded it as the prime duty and function of the board to gather statistics. I do not regard these statistics very highly. They do not always agree for the same dates, and I can tell you why. When a man goes into training in a district a notification that he has gone into training is sent to the central office at Washington. That notification is what we call our Form 107. As soon as that gets to the central office it goes first thing to the department that puts the fellow on the pay roll, in order to get him his training pay. After that it goes to the particular organization that puts the man's name on the card in the card index to show where he is in school, how much money he is getting, etc. Then it goes to the person who compiles the statistics of the number of men in training. That is reported to me every day. On Saturday my reports showed, I think, that we had 33,650 men in training that day. That is, that we had that many notices in from the districts. That was on the 1st of May. Should we ask on that same day the first district to report how many men they had in training on May 1 they would give us the number of men who had gone into training in that district on that date and not the number of men for whom notices had reached this office and gotten on our statistical report.

As a consequence the compilation of figures from the districts and the compilation of figures in the central office would not agree. So the statement that the statistics we give here and those given there do not agree is correct. I have nothing to do, of course, with the publication of the figures in the Vocational Summary. The old compilation, so many men surveyed, so many men contacted, etc., I think, is practically useless. The first figure that is always given is the number of registrations, which is entirely misleading and which should not be the basis of any calculation. Let me give you this example. Men were discharged, as you know, from the Eastern States, the discharge points were largely, at least, along the Atlantic coast. The result is a large number of cases passed through the Atlanta district. They were surveyed and the men were sent to hospitals in the district of which Atlanta was the center. Consequently all of those men's names were registered in the Atlanta office. The men discharged from the New York district, all of their names were registered in the New York office and the number discharged in the Boston district was registered in the Boston office. As soon as a man was discharged in the Atlanta district, if he lived in Indiana he went home, and yet papers were sent from the Atlanta district to the Cincinnati district that controls Indiana. Consequently that man's name appeared both on the Atlanta and Cincinnati rolls, and the statement has been made that there were two registrations, but at the same time it was overlooked in exactly the same statement that this included duplicates, included transfers from one district to another. It has also been a question with the district offices and conferences were held like the conference in June and the question arose when is a case a case. Efforts were made to go after the men to see whether there was anything the matter or whether they were entitled to training. The Red Cross in their commendable zeal sent in the names of every man who they heard was disabled.

We had many cases. As soon as they heard that a boy was wounded they sent in the name and in some of the districts they opened up folders on that. Some of the districts opened up folders on every man who has applied for compensation whose name they have. So the double registration. That meant really a double number of names that had been handed in by somebody to various district offices. There were duplications. Nobody denies it. Nobody ought to deny it. I do not think anybody does.

In anything that I say I do not expect to criticize Mr. Griffin or anybody else if I can avoid it. I remember that Mr. Griffin in one of the conferences insisted that of every survey that came through the New York office there must be a typewritten copy left in the New York office and in Washington. It congested the work in the office. I know what we did in the St. Louis office. If a man was transferred at Camp Dodge and lived in Denver we sent all the papers out to the Denver office and left merely a card in the case that "John Smith was discharged at Camp Dodge" and that all his papers had been sent to the Denver office. In the case of what we called a prospect, if we got a man's name, we put that in the "prospect" file and we sent the name to the Red Cross and asked them to get in touch and see if he was entitled to training and send information, or we would send out a man in the district to get in contact with him. We would not open a case on it. Some of the districts did open cases. We have so many cases that the result is frequently the districts have measured the amount of their job not by the number of men with whom they had come in contact, but by the number of cases in their files. That was one of the reasons for sending out the "eligibility squads" in December, to go through those files and to cut out the duplicates, cut out the transfers, and to cut out the folders of those men who had died—a number of the men have died since we got their names—and to cut out all cases where there was no information on which to base a case, the fact that he is entitled to anything, that he wants anything, and to report definitely the number of men who are really chargeable to the district.

I said Saturday that this was a question of development. It is a question of development. You can not do things all at once. We have been working for a month on a new report form from the districts, to consolidate all reports into one and to make one report to this office, so that we can handle the statistics in as economical a manner as possible.

I told Mr. Robsion personally the other day—which I will say to the committee as a whole—that Mr. Matthews, who left the office, was a tower of strength in the matter of statistics. Mr. Matthews left us because he was offered a place in Iowa where he was guaranteed one-half the profit from a big farm which he later declined to sell for $500 an acre, and the income he is receiving is a minimum of $5,000. He left a $4,000 place to go and take the Iowa place. Mr. Matthews reduced the number of employees in one section from three hundred and some down to two hundred and some by the time he left. We are trying to consolidate all of the records of the statistics so they will be worth something and so we will not have to consult the papers for anything more than necessary. If that was done—I have been here for the past 30 days practically all the time—right away we would abolish our report system from the districts and require them to report upon only a few items; first, how many men are there in your district, net—that is, the net number of men in your district; how many of them have been proved as eligible for training, section 2 or section 3; how many of them have you declared ineligible for training of any kind; and the difference is the pending load of definite cases.

Digitized by Google

As far as I am concerned, I do not care whether it is lack of medical examination or lack of coming in contact with the man, those cases are charged against that district as pending, and we are going to hold the officer responsible for getting them out of the way. If it is lack of contact, we will get that, and if it is lack of examination by the Public Health Service, we will pay the doctors to make the examination; but I do not believe that we ought to spend too much time in compiling statistics as to how many men we have seen, how many we have written, how many have been surveyed for medical examination, and so on; how many men are entitled to some consideration or how many have been acted on favorably and unfavorably, etc.; and then let them have an audit of their files and go after them. It is a different situation.

There is always this difficulty—that is, where you have 14 district offices, there is a tendency to create new forms and to get up new schemes and to get new information, and things of that kind. I think you had here Mr. Wadsworth to testify—a very strong, capable man from New York. I think he is responsible for some duplication of work in the New York office. I think he will agree to it. He thought that the advisers were not doing their jobs properly; that after the adviser in advisement section, in his opinion, there should be an adviser in training section. The result was that the man was handled twice in the New York office, when he should have been handled but once. When Mr. Wadsworth left the New York office, we combined the offices of advisement and training sections under one head, so that we will have but one survey made. That is one of the difficulties we have in the districts. I am merely stating it to you.

There is another matter in connection with the work concerning a man entering training, that is, we do not always realize that it takes just as much time and probably more time for a man to be told "no," that under the law he is not entitled to training, as it does to tell him "yes," that a fellow has to use a great deal more patience, a great deal more kindness with him sometimes than with the man to whom you can say, "Yes, I will send you this afternoon."

Again, I want to emphasize the fact that men with major amputations, there is no reason for them waiting an hour—I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that there are men with major amputations who have been discharged from the hospitals for 48 hours that have not been offered a course of vocational education.

Mr. Rogsion. I did not catch that last statement, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. Lamkin. I do not believe that there is any man in this country, discharged from the hospital 48 hours, who has not been offered a course of reeducation, men with major amputations, if there is, I should like to know his name. Some are not taking training, but that is because they are unwilling for one reason or another.

Men with systemtic troubles, men who merely complain about this hurt or that or the other, which the doctors can not find, are the cause of a great deal of our trouble. It not only takes as long to tell a man "no" as "yes," but there is a large number of changes or courses. The boy does not know, the adviser guesses wrong and the boy goes into training and finds out that he can not take that kind of training, and we have to change him. I remember the instance of a boy at the hospital instead of field contact with each man would save the Government almost $6,000,000.

To make this saving the board must, for a short period of about six months, increase the number of its field workers under Civil Service regulations employed as vocational advisers in hospitals, and to do this the unexpended balances in the appropriations for rent, equipment, and tuition should be made available.

3. The amendment to the bill providing that unexpended balances in the appropriation for rent, equipment, and tuition be used for expenditures incurred in the investigation necessary to determine the eligibility of men for training and for expenditures necessary to the proper placement of men in employment is urged in order that there may be no question as to the duty and authority of the board to make expenditures for these purposes. Unless they are made some men will lack intelligent treatment, proper care, and the prompt action necessary to save the handicapped man from humiliation, hardship, or failure in the effort of the Government to rehabilitate him vocationally.

[S. 5038.]

AN ACT Extending the use of the special fund for vocational education provided by section seven of the vocational rehabilitation act, approved June twenty-seventh, nineteen hundred and eighteen, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the special fund for vocational education, authorized by section seven of the vocational rehabilitation act, approved June twenty-seventh, nineteen hundred and eighteen, together with the items of appropriation made by said act, are hereby made available, in addition to the purposes therein prescribed, for such other expenses as in the discretion of the board is deemed necessary and proper for the payment of necessary travel, lodging, subsistence, and other expenses of disabled men while under investigation by the board to determine their eligibility for training under the act, and the purchase of supplies, equipment, and clothing for disabled men when ready to enter employment, and the traveling expenses of such men to place of employment and for supplementing any or all of the other items of appropriation made by said act.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I find on page 39 of H. R. 6176 (Union Calendar No. 15) that the sundry civil bill makes very serious limitations in connection with the appropriation to be used by the Federal Board for Vocational Education, for the rehabilitation of soldiers and sailors. These limitations would result in our losing probably half our staff at this most critical time, when our work is at its most urgent point.

May we have the privilege of appearing before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, or before yourself personally, to explain the situation and to urge a revision of the terms of the appropriation? Kindly make this appointment at your earliest convenience, and greatly oblige.

Yours, very sincerely,

JAMES P. MUNROE, Vice Chairman.

JUNE 23, 1919.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As requested over the telephone, I am addressing, for your earnest consideration and that of your committee, the following memorandum relative to the appropriation for vocational rehabilitation of disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines found on page 39 of Union Calendar No. 15, H. R. 6176, Report No. 48. While, as far as we can foresee, the appropriation of $4,000,000 therein made will not be sufficient, we accept this amount in the belief that it will carry the work well into the next calendar year, when, if necessary, we can again approach Congress with full confidence that they will not hesitate to provide all that is necessary for the rehabilitation of men who have been injured in the service of their country.

We desire to call to the attention of your committee, however, the fact that the limitations placed by the proviso in the last seven lines of this appropriation will result in a complete disorganization of the work of this board at a moment when it is approaching its highest load; when the Congress is about to place upon us, through the proposed amendment to section 2 of the vocational rehabilitation act, greatly enlarged responsibilities; and at a time when every minute's delay will greatly aggravate the unrest, and even bitterness, of disabled boys all over the country whose rehabilitation has already, through circumstances over which the Federal Board for Vocational Education has no control, been exasperatingly delayed.

Up to the 1st day of June, the district offices of the board had registered a total of 112,281 disabled men, had established personal contact with 88,300 of them; medical surveys had been made of 25,308 of these men; vocational surveys of 73,368. The number of additional undischarged men reported in Army and Navy hospitals in this country on the 1st day of June was approximately 59,000. This does not count the number in France nor the number not yet reached in the field in this country. Thirteen thousand and fifty-one men had been recommended for training by the district case boards and 7,500 men had been assisted in one way or another in the securing of employment. At the present time approximately 4,200 men are in training; about 6,000 cases are ready to be placed in training as soon as legislation before Congress, which passed the Senate unanimously last week, has become law.

So far as we can now foresee, the above figures represent less than half of the task of getting at every disabled soldier, sailor, and marine wounded or diseased in the service of the Government and providing either for his direct placement or for his training and placement. But the essential element in the remaining task is speed, and speed can be assured only by utilizing to the fullest limit, the services of men already familiar with the work, and trained to carry it forward effectively. Such a force we have succeeded in building up by taking men from permanent positions in which they were earning good salaries, and inducing them to take up this temporary service. This involved, in most cases, the leaving of their homes and the added costs and difficulties which that involves. Nevertheless, many of these men have been secured at salaries no greater than they were receiving in their permanent positions and of the others the increased salary, averaging not more than $300 a year, does not begin to cover the increased expenses under which these men find themselves. The work involved in dealing wisely and efficiently with disabled soldiers requires men of experience, of standing in the community, of ability to handle difficult situations, and of power to meet out in the field in our 14 district offices and our 7 subdistrict offices every sort of administrative problem. Cheap men can not do this work and were they to undertake it, disastrous results reflecting seriously upon the efficiency and good faith of the Federal Government in carrying out this important piece of work would follow.

Were this limiation in regard to the appropriation to stand, the board would lose nearly 200 members of its staff—men of ability and tried experience, and worse than that, would lose its 14 district officers who, even were their salaries not cut down would refuse to attempt to carry on the work in the States with the inefficient and untried men who would have to be brought in to take the place of those resigning as the result of this congressional action. Ninety-two members of the staff would be affected by the provision limiting the number to be employed in excess of $3,000 to 20, and 193 would be affected by the provision limiting the number to be employed between $2,500 and $3,000 to 30, and these men so affected are the framework of our organization, the very bone and sinew of the vocational rehabilitation Service. With these gone, the work would be in chaos for six months, disabled boys to the number of tens of thousands would be left uncared for, and the results would be in every way disastrous.

Under this proposed limitation it would be impossible to retain these essential men, because all of them have permanent positions at higher salaries than those permitted under this limitation would provide, and it would be out of reason to expect such men to keep a temporary position at a lower compensation than they could elsewhere get. Moreover, their places can not be filled because, in the first place, no untried man can fill the place of one who has had months of experience in a difficult work of this kind, and in the second place, because competent men can not be induced to take up this temporary, high-grade work at the salaries imposed by the suggested limitation.

In view of the above, it is respectfully suggested that in the section referring to vocational rehabilitation the words in the last seven lines following the word "Provided" be stricken out, and that the following words be substituted: "That not more than one person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation in excess of $5,000 per annum, and that not more than three persons shall be employed at rates of compensation in excess of $4,000 each per annum."

It seems to us that this simple change would safeguard, as they should be protected, the Federal funds, without throwing into hopeless chaos the work for diasbled soldiers, sailors, and marines which it is clear that the Congress and the people of the United States desire to be promptly and efficiently performed.

Very respectfully, yours,

JAMES P. MUNROE, Vice Chairman.

EXHIBIT T.

POSSIBLE AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATION.

SEPTEMBER 20, 1918.

As arranged at staff conference held on Monday evening, September 16, Messrs Munroe and Kidner saw Mr. Love, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, on September 17, and discussed very generally some of the difficulties being experienced because of the delay in discovering a man's compensation status. Mr. Love expressed himself as willing to join in asking for an amendment to the act, but suggested the possibility of solving the present difficulties by adjustments of procedure. He asked for a further conference in which some officials of the War Risk Insurance Bureau would participate.

On September 19 Mr. Love notified Mr. Munroe that he was called out of town, but wished us to discuss possible schemes with Mr. Houlihan. Messrs. Munroe, Kidner, and Maddrill conferred with Mr. Houlihan and Col. Banks on the following points:

1. Acceptance by War Risk Insurance Bureau of the findings of the last medical board, as recorded in the surgeon's certificate of discharge as a basis for award of compensation.

Mr. Houlihan stated that the bureau was quite willing to use this certificate and would require no further medical examination, but the bureau had not been able to obtain this certificate, or a copy of it. On being informed that the vocational advisors of the board were given access to this certificate and allowed to make a copy of it for our confidential use, Mr. Houlihan suggested that our advisors make an additional copy and forward to the War Risk Insurance Bureau, together with the man's application for compensation.

It was agreed that this would expedite matters considerably, but that it was a duty which should be carried out by the hospital authorities, rather than by the Federal board. Also, it would not be of any avail in the case of naval hospitals, from which men are discharged immediately after a medical survey board has decided that no further treatment is indicated. Also, in the case of men in hospitals in the far West, some considerable time must elapse before the decision of the bureau could be received, even if there were no complications in the case.

2. The following alternative plans involving changes in legislation was discussed at length, and it was agreed that it would prevent any hiatus between the discharge of a man and the commencement of his training course, except that in some cases a man may desire a short leave to visit his friends immediately after his discharge:

(a) The Federal board to decide upon the evidence of the surgeon's certificate of discharge, and by other examinations if it deemed necessary, whether or not a man needed reeducation; that is, was unable to follow his former occupation efficiently. If the Federal board decided that a man was entitled to reeducation on this ground, the man's discharge would be carried out as soon as the Federal board notified the hospital authorities.

(b) The Federal board would establish a scale of pay and allowances for the man and his dependents, if any, and he would be discharged to the Federal board which would place him on its pay list from the date of his discharge, or at the date of commencing his course.

NOTE.—The allotments to a man's dependents payable by the Army paymaster and his own pay cease on a man's discharge.

(c) The War Risk Insurance Bureau would cease its payments to the man and to his dependents at the date of his discharge. It would consider the case upon the evidence of the surgeon's certificate of discharge and make its award of compensation in due course. The bureau would either (1) notify the Federal board of its award and the

Digitized by Google

Federal board would reduce its payments to the amount of monthly compensation awarded the man, or (2) the board would continue the payments in full and be reimbursed by the War Risk Insurance Bureau to the amount payable under its award.

It is possible that under this plan a few men may be adjudged as requiring vocational reeducation who would be found not to be entitled to compensation; but not in large numbers. The surgeon's certificate of discharge gives not only the cause and extent (in fractions) of the disability, but also states whether or not it was incurred "in line of duty," which are the basic facts on which both the Federal board and the bureau would make their decisions.

EXTRACTS FROM SOLDIERS' LETTERS RECEIVED PRIOR TO CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATION STATING THEIR SATISFACTION WITH THE TRAINING THEY ARE RECEIVING.

From Lonnie J. Highsmith, 174 Hickory Street, Athens, Ga., February 25, 1920: "We are thankful that our Government has not left us as it did the veterans of bygone-days (not that we are better than they, for we are not so good), but that our Government has grown and developed and waxed rich and is better able to do this work now than it was after other wars. All that I ask from the Government that I volunteered to fight for, is to let me finish the course of studies that I am working on and I think I will be in a position to make the necessaries to get the wherewith to maintain life."

From Alford St. Germaine, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 23, 1919: "I think by going under hard studies and using common sense, soldiers like myself will find better living in the future, and this is my aim. Here's hoping that our fellow fighters will do likewise, and I am sure they will be contented with their studies and work as well as opportunities offered to them by our Government."

From Thomas M. Hildreth, Sacramento, Calif., May 14, 1919: "For the benefit of the boys who are not taking advantage of the training the Federal Board for Vocational Education offers, I wish to say that they are missing one of the best opportunities of their lives."

Thomas C. Brannan, Berwyn, Md., September 30, 1919: "The efforts and results of the Federal board certainly are deeply appreciated, and since Uncle Sam has been so kind and considerate of us in giving us the opportunities which we are now so fortunate to have, we mean to do our best and make a success or die in the attempt to succeed, and we know what we will have to do in order to pull through on top."

From Cecil Meyer, University Station, Gainesville, Fla., December 10, 1919: "I have been in training under the Federal board since May 28, this year, and I like it fine, and in fact this is the opportunity that I have looked for throughout life."

From E. F. Powers, San Francisco, Calif., May 26, 1919: "I take pleasure in telling you that I have completed my course in training for a marine engineer and was most certainly surprised that I could do so in so short a period. I found that by living as temperate a life as possible and utilizing every opportunity I was able to learn as much from the United States Shipping Board School as the average university graduate and able to pass an examination for third assistant engineer unlimited. I have been able to do what I thought would be impossible. The least pay for a licensed third assistant engineer is $120 a month and found. For a man that has to work technical knowledge is no good without the practical knowledge, therefore I can do better by going to work now."

From A. D. Strader, West Virginia University, November 12, 1919: "I highly value the training that has been granted me by the Government. I thank you all very much. Now the Government is paying us back and wishes us to make good. It is up to us to make good, not only for ourselves, but to help so that the Government will lead all other nations in the future as it has in the past."

From Mrs. Grace E. Terry, 2606 West Main Street, Richmond, Va., December 8, 1919: "I am thankful to say that I am being trained for millinery work, at which I think I can make a living at home and not be a dependent. Mrs. Reed, my counselor, seems to be very much interested in me, which I appreciate."

From John Henry Atherson, Salome, Ky., October 30, 1919: "Your letter received notifying me of approval of training in a course of agriculture. This is a splendid opportunity and generous offer, and I would be very foolish and ungrateful if I failed to meet it with my best efforts."

From Robert W. Cooper, Tulane Receiving School, New Orleans, La., August 7, 1919: "Inclosed I wish to say my training has been very satisfactory, my environment very agreeable, and, lastly, I will prove the good will of those connected with district No. 6, while making good in district No. 8. The academic help I have received has been and will be invaluable to my future progress, and especially with the help given me in English and arithmetic. It has shaken my head from the neck up, tending to make me realize that more than one recess of my brain has remained dormant for years."

From Raymond Lasance, 129 West Fourteenth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 23, 1919: "I desire to express my appreciation to the Federal board for the training I am receiving. By its workings I will be able to complete my education and obtain for myself in the commercial world a position to which I might never have attained before my disability."

From Ralph Schefer, 3858 Millsbrae Avenue, Hyde Park, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 23, 1919: "I took up training under the direction of the Federal Board for Vocational Education at Miller's School of Business. I am well satisfied and sure that I will be able to earn a great deal more money than I previously did before I enlisted."

From R. M. Prather, M. D., New Orleans, La.: "I want to say that, without exaggeration, I think the Federal Board for Vocational Education is doing more for the discharged soldier than is generally known to the public. I have benefited greatly, both in health and knowledge, since I started under your supervision, and I expect to return from New York about the 1st of January as a specialist in diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat."

From Lawrence Packwood, Chicago Business College, December 22, 1919: "I am preparing myself not to be a burden on the taxpayer, but to be a credit to my country and uphold its Constitution, and recognize that this country keeps its promises to its service men."

From Carl F. Minion, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 22, 1919: "I have now been in this school, Ohio Mechanics Institute, three months, and find that it is helping me greatly, and feel that after I am through school I will be in better shape, as far as earning power is concerned, than before I entered the service. It is surprising to me to see the interest every man is taking in his work."

From Thomas M. Hildreth, Sacramento, Calif., May 14, 1919: "I am attending Heald's Business College in this city. For the benefit of the boys who are not taking advantage of the training the Federal board offers, I wish to say that they are missing the best opportunity of their lives."

From John B. Gardner, Young Men's Christian Association, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 23, 1919: "I am very interested in my course, and there is no doubt that I will be able to go out in the business world and double my earning capacity after completing my course under the direction of the Federal board."

From Herbert W. Will, 1132 Park Avenue, Newport, Ky., April 23, 1919: "I want to express to you my appreciation of all that your board has done for me. I am more than satisfied with the treatment accorded me by you and the members of the district No. 7 office."

From Carl F. Minion, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 22, 1919: "It is surprising to me to see the interest every man is taking in his work. They realize it is expected of them and want to make good, and I know they will have proper support."

From Thomas F. Hendrick, captain, Baltimore, Md., October 9, 1919: " It is my belief that criticism directed toward the Federal board was largely due to the fact that the men were more anxious to get home than to enter training. I am well satisfied with my avocation, and place my stamp of approval on all actions of the Federal board that have come under my observations."

From Douglas D. Stone, 1730 La Loma Avenue, Berkeley, Calif., January 8, 1920: "I certainly appreciate the wonderful opportunity offered me through the Federal board, and the best way I can show my appreciation is by the report here made on my studies. Prof. Langille congratulated me on my work. I hope this report will be perfectly satisfactory to the board."

From W. B. Whidden, University Station, Gainesville, Fla.: "The Federal Board for Vocational Education is sending me to school at the University of Florida. I have been here one month and five days. I am learning fast. I am taking a course in agriculture. I want to do all I can to learn as much as possible so that when school is out and I get through with my studies, I can get a job. I like the school fine, and I think it is a good thing for me and am going to do my best to accomplish something."

From Roan J. Turner, University Station, Gainesville, Fla.: "The Federal Board gave me an opportunity to take a special training with them that I might educate myself so that I might be able to earn a living. I decided to specialize in dairying. After I have completed my training I want to manage dairying or a dairying farm; in fact, I hope to be able to manage anything in the line of agriculture."

From Levi Marshall Nagle, University Station, Gainesville, Fla., November 26, 1919: "The Government sent me to the University of Florida to attend the Agricultural College here to take a course in agriculture. They are paying my tuition and provide any textbooks for me, as well as give me $80 a month, or $40 every two weeks, while I am here. I think the course is a wonderful opportunity. I know that, with the knowledge I had when I came here, I could not in my condition make a livelihood in farming, but it is a wonderfully instructive course which I have taken up here and I am firmly convinced that, when the course is completed, that the knowledge gained will be of more worth to me than anything else which I know of."

From J. C. Rathburn, 106 West Sixty-third Street, New York City, February 9, 1920: "I do not care for placement. Might mention the course is completed. Did me a numerous amount of benefit and wish to thank the New York board for its appreciated service to me."

From L. E. Cox, 521 Lumkin Street, Athens, Ga., March 7, 1920: "I am truly grateful for what the Federal board is doing for me, and I am trying to get all I can out of this course. This training will help us to overcome our handicaps by making of us efficient managers. I think the Government's plan for training the disabled soldier is proving a success and is going to enable us to carry on."

From J. Perlmutt, 370 South Lumkin Street, Athens, Ga.: "Not only am I getting a thorough training in the elementary principles of education but also training in mechanical pursuits and agricultural training. My course is keeping me in the open air a great deal and thus benefiting me in a healthful way. This training is priceless to me and its value can not be estimated in money."

From Aylett D. Clark, 513 West Cumberland Street, Knoxville, Tenn., February 26, 1920: "I entered the offices of the Federal board feeling hostile to the world at large and the Federal board in particular. On leaving your offices I found that I had undergone some great change. I can not explain it other than renewed faith in my fellowmen."

From Edward Yake, to Senator John Walter Smith, December 10, 1919: "September 1, 1919, the Federal Board for Vocational Education took hold of me. They got me a job, paid me $115 per month every month, and now I am making $150 per month. The best friend the enlisted man has in the world is the Red Cross and the Federal board. Speak up, men, tell our dear beloved friend, John Walter Smith, what the dear old Federal board has meant to you."

From Wallace F. Mustin, 934 North Calvert Street, Baltimore, Md., February 25, 1920: "I wish to let you know how nicely I am getting along at the Baltimore College of Dental Surgery, while in the meantime it is my desire to show the Federal board my appreciation for what it is doing for me. My wife and myself have planned our living expenses to correspond with the monthly salary which we receive from the Federal board. We have planned to live on it by economizing, but nothing to waste, which, of course, is expected. In the meantime we are working hard and planning forward to a bright future. I wish the Federal Board for Vocational Education the best of luck and hope to be with it to the end of my college career."

From Winand Pyle, M. D., 3538 York Road, Baltimore, Md.: "My course at Johns Hopkins is nearing completion and I shall soon apply for transportation home. The course has been very profitable and extremely interesting. I am sure its value to me far exceeds the money expended for it. I wish to thank you and your staff for your kindness to me. I wish you all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year."

From Ignace Miletz, Chicago Business College, Chicago, Ill., February 9, 1920: "I am now attending the Chicago Business College, taking a business course which will enable me to earn my living in the future. Salesmanship especially appeals to me, and I hope to become a good salesman. I wish to thank the people through the Federal board for the opportunity given us boys."

From S. A. Sandberg, Chicago Business College, Chicago, Ill., February 9, 1920: "I intend to take a position as salesman and I am sure my training will help me accomplish my purpose. I want to assure you of my appreciation of the Federal board's activities in behalf of myself and other injured buddies."

From Angelus Chure, Chicago Business College, Chicago, Ill., February 9, 1920: "Speaking several languages, I have taken this commercial course, and especially salesmanship, and prepare myself for the foreign commerce, where are found the biggest possibilities of to-day."

From Louis Golden, Chicago Business College, Chicago, Ill., February 10, 1920: "I am satisfied that I have made considerable progress, and hope to do even better hereafter. My object is to become a successful salesman or advertising man. I have unlimited confidence in my abilities and I do not mean to be a burden to the Government. It is my aim to overcome my handicap and win success."

From John G. Moore, Chicago Business College, Chicago, Ill., February 9, 1920: "I wish to say my future welfare looks very good, as this school is giving me the necessary training for an occupation that will always give me an opportunity to make a living. The training I am receiving will help me in securing a chance to command a salary that will satisfy my needs. I hope to be a credit to the vocational board and to prove myself worthy of trust."

The following communications, among many others, were received after the congressional investigation of the board's activities commenced from Carl Schuman, L. B. Lambert, Henry Todd, Elmer E. Paine, and V. R. Bartlett, Washington, D. C., March 9, 1920: "To whom it may concern: We have found the vocational officers of district No. 4 always courteous and considerate. We have been fairly treated as regards to the training and the remuneration which was at the hands of the Government. Therefore, in the face of the criticism to which the board is at present subjected, we wish to express our hearty appreciation and thanks to the Federal board for its just and kind treatment of us."

From Arthur F. Johnson and 81 other students at Heffley Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y., March 25, 1920: "We, students under the Federal Board for Vocational Education, believe that the Federal Board for Vocational Education is very efficient in its required duties, under the present conditions, and regret that it should at this time be a target of public criticism and contempt."

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Friday, April 30, 1920.

The committee met at 10 o'clock a. m., Hon. Horace M. Towner (acting chairman) presiding.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Munroe, you may take the stand.

TESTIMONY OF MR. JAMES P. MUNROE, VICE CHAIRMAN FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION—Resumed.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Munroe, what is your judgment as to the present organization of the Vocational Board? Does it meet with your unreserved approval?

Mr. MUNROE. You mean the general make-up of the board?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; I think it is an admirable arrangement.

Mr. TOWNER. You then approve entirely of the membership on the board of the Cabinet officers?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; it has been a very useful part of the board organization.

Mr. TOWNER. In what way are they useful?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course the daily work of the board is carried on by the standing committee made up of the three appointed members and the Commissioner of Education, and then at least once a month, and sometimes oftener, the full board meets with the Cabinet officers present, and then all questions of general policy are put up to the whole board and receive the sanction or the dissent, as the case may be, of the Cabinet members.

Mr. TOWNER. They act, very largely, in an advisory capacity?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Do you say that as often as once a month you have a full meeting of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Do the members of the Cabinet seem to take any particular interest in the activities of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. A very great interest. Of course, especially in the war period, they had very many other important duties to attend to, but, personally, I have been surprised that they have been able and have been willing to keep such close touch upon the work of the Federal board as they have.

Mr. TOWNER. Your idea then is that so far as the personnel of the board is concerned, it is an advangtage distinctly to have Cabinet officers members of the board?

4661—20—VOL 2——8

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. A very great advantage; yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. What do you say to the proposition that is suggested of increasing the active membership of the board, perhaps by one or possibly by two new members, one at least of whom should be a service man.

Mr. MUNROE. Of course if such a man were put on, it would be only for the comparatively temporary purpose of this rehabilitation work, because such a man would have no special interest in or qualifitions for the general work of the board, which deals with education pure and simple.

Mr. TOWNER. Your idea then would be that it would be unnecessary and of no particular advantage.

Mr. MUNROE. I can not see any special advantage in it, because, as I pointed out yesterday, a large proportion of our staff are ex-service men. They certainly ought to be able to take care of the interests of the soldiers.

Mr. TOWNER. How are the activities carried on with regard to the various duties of the board, the vocational work, and the rehabilitation work, and the other activities of the board? How is the work divided?

Mr. MUNROE. As far as the board itself is concerned, it usually at its monthly meetings gives one day to the activities of vocational education and another day to those of vocational rehabilitation. Of course, the members who are on the job all the time, like myself, give attention to these things as occasion requires. As to the staff, we have, as you doubtless know, a chief of the vocational education division and a chief of vocational rehabilitation division, and their staffs are kept absolutely separate, the only interchange of duties being, such as I pointed out yesterday, the disbursing, auditing, and so on, which are common to both branches.

Mr. TOWNER. Then so far as the board taking part in the administrative functions of the board, it is only of a supervisory character; in other words, there is no member of the board who is at the head of the rehabilitation service.

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Your director is at the head?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. We have no director.

Mr. TOWNER. You have a director who is at the head of the vocational service under the other acts and activities of the board.

Mr. MUNROE. We have the two chiefs, each directly responsible to the board.

Mr. TOWNER. For instance, your rehabilitation chief —what is the name of the director?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin.

Mr. TOWNER. And what is his name?

Mr. MUNROE. Uel W. Lamkin.

Mr. TOWNER. How long has Mr. Lamkin been in the service?

Mr. MUNROE. I can not remember the date. Mr. Lambkin can perhaps tell us.

Mr. LAMKIN. January, 1919.

Mr. MUNROE. In January, 1919, Mr. Lamkin was put in charge of the regional office, with its headquarters at St. Louis, and then on September 15 he was made chief of the whole division.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. To what extent and in what manner has Mr. Lamkin charge of this rehabilitation work?

Mr. MUNROE. To the extent that any responsible chief in a Government department has his responsibilities.

Mr. TOWNER. Is he the final arbiter on questions that arise from the various regions?

Mr. MUNROE. On questions of administration. Of course, questions of policy have to be put up to the standing committee of the board.

Mr. TOWNER. Questions of policy are so often mingled with a proposition of administration that it is very hard to separate them, is it not?

Mr. MUNROE. Well, I think that both Mr. Lamkin, the chief of the rehabilitation division, and Mr. Hawkins, the Chief of the vocational education division, lean on the side—if there is any question as to whether it is administrative or a question of general policy—lean on the side of putting it up to the standing committee.

Mr. TOWNER. And that means the active membership of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. In other words, they refer all important questions that arise to the membership of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; and then after we have laid down a general policy covering that point, of course, they are free to act under that general vote.

Mr. TOWNER. Again, I would like to have you state whether there can be any distinction between a question of general policy and a question arising under an administrative act that really involves a question of policy. Are such questions not continually arising?

Mr. MUNROE. The conditions are rather peculiar, I think, with our board from the fact that the work has been so tremendous and the necessity of haste has been so great, that the standing committee has had to be on the job practically all the time and doubtless it has taken part in the administration, when, under normal conditions, it would not have done so.

Mr. TOWNER. Does the board interfere with the activities of the directors in carrying on the work, of its own motion?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not quite get your point there?

Mr. TOWNER. The point is this: The committee would like to know just how far the authority of the director extends and how far he can be held personally responsible for the activities of the board. You say he is the administrative head. We grant that, but if the administrative head is being continually interfered with in the performance of his duty then he is only nominally the head. The committee would like to know whether he is actually the head of the department or not.

Mr. MUNROE. I think Mr. Lamkin could answer that question better than I could. So far as we are aware, after laying down general policies, we try to give him a free hand in the administration of those policies.

Mr. TOWNER. The impression has been created by the testimony here that the board themselves are continually interfering with the administration of the work and continually changing their policies; what have you to say about that?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. There have been changes in policy made necessary by the very rapid changing of conditions under which the work has been carried on. As I pointed out in my testimony last night, we have had to overcome one obstacle after another, and as each of those obstacles was overcome, it of course necessitated a somewhat greater or less change in general policies; and, of course, the revised legislation of last July necessitated very drastic changes in policy.

Mr. TOWNER. If a person is the head of an administrative department or bureau, he ought to be responsible for those who are his subordinates, ought he not, Mr. Munroe?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Then he ought to have the appointive power, ought he not? Has Mr. Lamkin that power?

Mr. MUNROE. So far as it is possible under Government regulations. As I understand it, all staff appointments have to come before the board for confirmation. They are made on his recommendation, of course.

Mr. TOWNER. Well, are they made on his recommendation?

Mr. MUNROE. Oh, yes.

Mr. TOWNER. To what extent does the board interfere in the appointment of the personnel of these various divisions or regional offices?

Mr. MUNROE. Not at all, so far as I am aware.

Mr. TOWNER. When a vacancy occurs, does Mr. Lamkin go about making the appointment without receiving the authority of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. He makes the recommendation. He finds the person and makes the recommendation, and the formal appointment, of course, is made by the board.

Mr. TOWNER. Then he is not the head and chief of the bureau if he has not the power of appointment. He is not the head of the rehabilitation department if he has not that power, is he?

Mr. MUNROE. That is a new point of view to me, Mr. Chairman. I should suppose that all appointments, all staff appointments, had to be conferred, made actual, by a vote of the whole board on the recommendation of the chief. Of course, all clerical appointments are made by the district officers themselves.

Mr. TOWNER. Then you have a line of distinction between what you call staff appointments and clerical appointments?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Will you please state what that is?

Mr. MUNROE. The clerical appointments includes stenographers, clerks, charwomen, and people of that sort, anything below the line of stenographer and including the stenographer.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, all of the regional chiefs and all their principal subordinates, men engaged in placement work and in the determination of the degree of disability and the determination of where the training shall be taken, and all those matters, are they directly put up to the board to pass upon?

Mr. MUNROE. Every month we pass on the full list of appointments.

Mr. TOWNER. Why do you not leave that with the head of the department?

Mr. MUNROE. Well, as I say, Mr. Chairman, I had supposed up to this time that it was a requirement of Government procedure that they should be acted on by the full board. I may be mistaken in that.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. What is the ground for that idea? This is not a criticism——

Mr. MUNROE. No.

Mr. TOWNER. We are just trying to find out the facts regarding it, Mr. Munroe.

Mr. MUNROE. As I say, the question has never been brought to me before. I took it as a matter of course that we had to pass on all staff appointments. We, of course, in the very beginning laid out a chart showing the organization, and we act under that original chart with such modifications as the changes in conditions necessitate.

Mr. TOWNER. Then, so far as the head of the rehabilitation work is concerned, the director, he can not make directly any appointments at all. He has to submit them all to the board and they have to be acted upon by the board??

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. As a matter of fact, however, I can not remember of any change being made by the board. They accept his recommendations.

Mr. TOWNER. The policy was adopted in the first instance, as I understand it, of having the board pass upon the determination of whether or not the service man should be entitled to training at all.

Mr. MUNROE. You mean the full board?

Mr. TOWNER. Well, I do not know about the full board. I mean at least the department here in Washington.

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, in the beginning, until the districts had had experience and until it was felt proper for them to stand alone, Washington had to keep a supervisory attitude; but after the legislation of last July, as soon thereafter as the personnel was reorganized as required by the salary limitations, a general order was sent out giving each district full authority to put all amputation cases, without any question at all, and to put all other cases into training except those requiring or likely to require more than two years or involving a tuition fee of more than $500 a year.

Mr. TOWNER. Has that policy been adopted ever since July?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. All the time we are giving more power and authority to the district officers.

Mr. TOWNER. Some of the testimony before us would lead us to believe that the board was still, down to a very late date, reserving to itself the determination of that question, and that it had resulted in great delays.

Mr. MUNROE. That was either mistaken testimony or else was testimony relating to the period before July 11, 1919, when of course all matters had to be referred to Washington because no action in the matter of putting a man into training could be taken until previous action had been had by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. We could not give freedom to the districts in those days.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, until the passage of the law in July, by which the board was given power to determine upon the right to training of any service man, your position and the position of the board is that all the delay occurred by reason of the fact that you could not get action from the War Risk Insurance Bureau?

Mr. MUNROE. That was the main cause of delay; yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. You stated on your examination yesterday that 39,000 men were now in training, and, in a general way, can you give the committee any idea of what form this training is taking and where the training is being given.

Mr. MUNROE. I have a memorandum here. On February 28—at that time the total figure was 28,000—there were in prevocational training; that is, training for illiterates or non-English-speaking foreigners, 4,294. The total in trade and industrial training was 8,950, and that includes the electrical trade, 1,100. (I will just read round figures.) Mechanical trades, 3,600; retail trades, 380; printing trades, 220; garment and leather trades, 495; railway, 25; manufacturing, including glass blowing, dye making, paper manufacturing, silver plating, and so on, 68; crafts, including horology, jewelry making, etc., 412; advertising trades, 460; woodworking and woodfinishing trades, 353; food preparation, 76; textiles, 157; repair work, including typewriter repairing, sewing-machine repairing, and so on, 73; miscellaneous trades, including barbering, motion-picture operating, drafting, upholstering, and so on, 1,224; business and commercial training, 7,253. That is divided up into various forms. General farming, 3,053; and in the professions, 3,978, including practically all the professions. As to places in which they are being trained, as I remember it, between 5,000 and 6,000 of the men are in placement training; that is, they are in actual industries being trained on the job under supervision, and the remainder of the men are in schools, colleges, or in what we call receiving stations which are mainly for illiterates and non-English-speaking men where they give half a day in this special school under direct supervision to training in the English branches, and the other half day to trying them out on various trades and crafts which are carried on in the school, so as to get an idea as to their best line of industrial activity

Mr. TOWNER. That would mean, then, that about one-third are being trained in actual work.

Mr. MUNROE. Approximately that number; yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Do you think that proportion would hold good for the 39,000?

Mr. MUNROE. Would you think that proportion of about one-third in actual placement training would hold, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. LAMKIN. No.

Mr. MUNROE. Not so large a figure as that?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir.

Mr. MUNROE. About 20 per cent. My colleague (Mr. Holder) reminds me that in a great many cases where these boys are being trained in a school or a college, they will then be given a subsequent period of placement training on the job so as to make certain that they will make good in it.

Mr. TOWNER. I understood that. I wanted to get at how many men were being trained or received the training actually in factories where the work was being carried on.

Mr. MUNROE. Between 20 and 25 per cent, I should say.

Mr. TOWNER. Can you give us an idea of how many of those men are receiving part wages?

Mr. MUNROE. Very few.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. Very few of them? Do you have complaints from the factories where these men are at work regarding the men or is there general satisfaction with regard to the men?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, as there would be in any such large number of men, there are individual cases of complaint and dissatisfaction, but, as a rule, the attitude of the employers, where men are in placement training and the attitude of the teachers in the schools and colleges is one of unusual satisfaction with the work that these boys are doing.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, what is the attitude of the men themselves who are engaged in this work?

Mr. MUNROE. With a few exceptions which, of course, one would find in a large body of that kind, they are eminently satisfied with the work they are doing.

Mr. TOWNER. What can you say regarding the prospects of these men after they have completed this practical season of training? Are they likely to find places where they can receive adequate remuneration from the end of this training period?

Mr. MUNROE. Most of these cases, I believe, are going to receive larger wages than they did before they were disabled.

Mr. TOWNER. Will there be any difficulty in their finding places?

Mr. MUNROE. Not if the present industrial conditions continue. Of course, a serious panic would alter the situation very materially.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, regarding these men who are attending the schools—most of the men are attending technical schools, are they?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; I presume the majority of the schools would be called technical schools.

Mr. TOWNER. Just explain what you mean by that?

Mr. MUNROE. Well, it is a rather difficult thing to explain because almost every college now has a large technical department, so that there are a good many boys in colleges who are really taking the technical side of that work; but, of course, as this training is for the purpose of making these men industrially efficient, to put them on their feet industrially, naturally the majority of the work is along industrial lines.

Mr. TOWNER. Then, most of them are attending technical schools, if they are in a general university or college that has a technic department and they are in that technical department, of course they are in a technical school.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. That is correct, is it? Most of them who are attending the colleges or schools of any kind are engaged in technical work?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. What proportion of these men are taking a business training or training for clerical positions, something that might not be considered as directly a trade industry?

Mr. MUNROE. Well, of course, I included those in using the word technical. I presume you mean the business and commercial courses.

Mr. TOWNER. You now understand my question and I would like to know what proportion there are of those men, for instance, who are preparing to be typewriters and stenographers and to go into the banks and take clerical positions of all kinds. What proportion of the men are engaged in preparation for that class of work?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. This statement is as of February 28, when the total number of men in training was practically 27,000. The number at that time in business and commercial training was 7,253, and of that the number training for administrative positions was 3,716. That includes positions for general advertising, business administration, banking and finance, real estate, insurance, foreign trade, factory management, auctioneering, salesmanship, and so on. The number training for subordinate positions in commercial lines at that time was 3,234, including bookkeeping, shorthand and typewriting, secretarial work, clerical work, postal clerk, civil service preparatory, and a general commercial course without specification, 2,500 of them.

Mr. TOWNER. How are that class of men getting along with their work?

Mr. MUNROE. Very well. They are being trained very largely in the special schools of business, and I have talked with a number of the heads of such schools and they express great satisfaction with the progress the men are making.

Mr. TOWNER. As I understood you yesterday, only about 10 per cent of those who actually enter training desert or stop it.

Mr. MUNROE. Less than that. The percentage is between 8 and 9 per cent.

Mr. TOWNER. Less than 10 per cent.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. In a general way, what would you say were the principal causes of these men giving up their training?

Mr. MUNROE. More than 50 per cent of them give up because of the return of their disability and they hope, of course, to go back into the work when they are well again. As I recollect it, perhaps, 20 per cent of the 8 or 9 per cent give up because they think it is not worth while, and the balance give up because they secure some immediate position and think it is not worth while to finish their training.

Mr. TOWNER. You stated, I believe, yesterday that 20,000 of these men who were entitled to training were not in training.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; about that number.

Mr. TOWNER. Did you mean by that the cases of those men had been passed upon and that they had been decided to be entitled to training?

Mr. MUNROE. And the men have been notified of the course that is open for them, and in many cases they have been sent Government transportation to carry them where the school or place of training was at some distance from their home.

Mr. TOWNER. After you have notified them, do you receive word from them as to the reason why they do not go on with their training?

Mr. MUNROE. If we do not from the first letter, we send a second letter, and if we get no reply to that, we send a third, and in most cases if the man is within any reasonable distance, we send somebody to look him up, and of course in all this work we have the active cooperation of the American Legion Posts, of the Home Service Sections of the American Red Cross, and of various other national and local agencies.

Mr. TOWNER. I was not particularly asking the board to exonerate itself for neglect but what I wanted to know was the reason or cause of these men not being in training where they were entitled to it.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. I might have read yesterday, if I had not tired the committee by reading so many letters, extracts from a number of letters giving the reasons why the men did not take the training. As I remember it, in a good many cases their conditions at home were such that they did not feel it proper for them to leave. I remember one case where a man had an aged father and he felt he ought to stay with him. In another case the man owned quite a little farm, and while he would have liked to take the training, he felt his duty was to carry on that farm; of course, in some instances they simply write that they are not interested in training; and under the present industrial conditions, it is so easy to get a good paying job, that men do not think it is worth while to go through the trouble of training.

Mr. TOWNER. What is your idea of the proportion of these 20,000 men taking the training at some future time?

Mr. MUNROE. It would depend very much on the industrial situation. If there should be a very serious panic and scarcity of opportunity for paying positions, I think these men would come in in very great numbers, but should the present scarcity of labor and the demand and high wages continue—this is merely a guess—I should doubt if we get more than 50 per cent of that number, despite all our efforts to get hold of them, and as I said yesterday——

Mr. TOWNER (interposing). Fifty per cent would be a pretty large expectation, would it not?

Mr. MUNROE. Well, I hope we shall be able to induce that number to take the training.

Mr. TOWNER. Then you are still making efforts, even after sending the third letter?

Mr. MUNROE. As I explained yesterday, we are starting out in the New York district and in some of the others, and we propose to carry it through all the districts except where the distances are so great as to make it practically impossible. We are sending word to all these men not yet in training to present themselves at the nearest large center to their homes, and we get at them, also, besides writing them a letter, through the local Red Cross and the American Legion and so on; and to that district we send a flying squad from the nearest district office to take up the cases not only of those men who have been assigned to training and have not yet gone into it, but also the other cases that have been brought to our attention in which the training has not yet been determined, so as to clean up both those groups as far as possible in each of those localities.

Mr. TOWNER. In case you have a man who is taking training for some particular vocation, and he finds out that his physical condition is such by reason of his disability that he can not carry on that training, and again returns to you for training in some vocation that he could carry on owing to his condition, I understood you to say yesterday that you could not give him the training.

Mr. MUNROE. You misunderstood me, sir, because we are doing that in hundreds, if not thousands, of cases.

Mr. TOWNER. I was wondering about that.

Mr. MUNROE. You must have misunderstood me, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. I should think that would not be an infrequent case.

Mr. MUNROE. It is a very frequent case, and a good share of the time of the local case boards is taken up in the consideration of such cases.

Mr. TOWNER. I would like to have you explain to the committee the relation between the hospital cases and your work. For instance, take the case where a man has entered into training with you and his wound breaks out afresh, or tubercular indications are shown, or something of that kind interrupts his work; what is done in his case?

Mr. MUNROE. His case is immediately taken hold of by the Bureau of Public Health, which is working in the closest cooperation with us—in fact, all our medical staff now is assigned to us by the Bureau of Public Health—and he is sent back to the hospital, or his case is taken care of in a proper medical way until he is in a condition to resume his training, and while under that hospital care he receives the same compensation that he does while pursuing his training.

Mr. TOWNER. In other words, you treat him just as if he were still in training, on the supposition that he will resume his training?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; only, of course, the Bureau of Public Health assumes the responsibility for his care, not we.

Mr. TOWNER. Of course, I understand that; but there are, as I understood you to say, 30,000 or 40,000 of these men who would be entitled to training who are tubercular cases and ought to be in the hospital, and, in fact, a great many of them are. What is going to be done with those cases?

Mr. MUNROE. We have already established arrangements with the Bureau of Public Health by which we assume, under medical direction, the training of these men in the hospital itself, or in the close vicinity of the hospital, of all those cases where it is not felt by the doctors that it would be detrimental to the man to work for one or two or more hours a day. In that way we hope to hasten his training, so that when he does recover he will be just that much further along in his preparation for industrial earning.

Mr. TOWNER. The statement was made in the press not long ago that there were 15,000 or more of these tubercular patients that could not have any hospital training, although they were virtually dying for want of care and for hospital service. Have you any information regarding that matter?

Mr. MUNROE. I think I testified yesterday that before the law was passed there were something like 10,000 cases sent out from the camps, and of course a good many of those have been since picked up by the Bureau of Public Health, but I presume a great many of them are still at large, and until the amendment of July we had no responsibility whatever for the men discharged from the camps between April and October of 1917.

Mr. TOWNER. The committee realizes that you are not responsible for those conditions, but we want to know what you know with regard to the facts, if we can.

Mr. MUNROE. As I understand it—this is only on secondhand information—this bill now before the Congress asking appropriations for the building of a number of new hospitals for the use of the Bureau of Public Health is largely for the purpose of taking care of those cases.

Mr. TOWNER. It has been shown time and time again that there are plenty of hospital facilities in the United States. The only question is as to the utilization of them and securing them for the Government. It seems that the Bureau of Public Health or some other departments of the Government are insisting on immense appropriations for the building of hospitals that it would take two or three years to build, when there are an abundance of hospitals that could be used and are being offered to the Government, and there are a great many cantonments that could be utilized with a very small appropriation and would be very quickly available.

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, I can not speak with any firsthand knowledge about that.

Mr. TOWNER. I believe you recommended yesterday that the Government should—what was your first recommendation, Mr. Munroe?

Mr. MUNROE. I am pretty sure it was the removal of the salary limitation from the bill. I do not seem to have my documents here.

Mr. TOWNER. The removal of the salary limitation?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. That is, the granting of an appropriation in bulk, so that the salaries could be apportioned by the board.

Mr. MUNROE. May I say in connection that this morning I sent a communication to Mr. Good, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in answer to a number of questions he asked in regard to the numbers in training and so on, in which, at the suggestion of the board, I very strongly emphasized the importance of the removal of those salary limitations.

Mr. TOWNER. What was your next recommendation?

Mr. MUNROE. That every effort be made to put through promptly the so-called Kahn Bill giving the Department of War authority to turn over to us, so that we may lend them to the schools, a great amount of material that is not needed by the War Department and which is very sadly needed by those schools and colleges.

Mr. TOWNER. You mean these technical schools?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. The Department of War, of course, has a tremendous accumulation of all sorts of large and small tools and small motors and things of that sort that are of the highest value in the training of these disabled men. as I pointed out yesterday, we acquired about a quarter of a million dollars' worth of them under authorization of the Secretary of War until that was stopped, and since then we have been acquiring them by purchase.

Mr. TOWNER. Are not these technical schools to which these men are sent equipped with this kind of material?

Mr. MUNROE. Not for the large accessions of men we are sending to them. In many of these schools we are training from 100 to 300 disabled men in addition to their regular quota, and they have not the facilities for that sort of thing. Of course, many of the colleges, especially the older colleges, are not equipped as they should be for this form of technical training. They have competent staffs to teach, but in many cases they have not the equipment, and, of course, under present conditions it is absolutely impossible to purchase anything of that sort in the open market. It would be months and months before they could get deliveries.

Mr. TOWNER. What was your next recommendation?

Mr. MUNROE. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, that the other stenographer has taken my document from which I was speaking last night, and I can not remember the order of the recommendations. I remember that one recommendation, whether it was the next one or not, that Congress give us authority to train men who entered the armies of the Allies before we went into the war, and then another recommendation was——

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER (interposing). That is, make reciprocal arrangements with the Allies for the training of men who happen to be in this country who belonged to their armies, and, especially, I suppose, that would apply to the Canadians?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Do we not now have, while not an express reciprocal arrangement, perhaps an implied one by which those Americans who served in the Canadian Army are receiving training here in the United States without compensation?

Mr. MUNROE. It is done under the Elks' fund, Mr. Lamkin tells me.

Mr. TOWNER. You also recommended the foundation by the Government of a revolving fund to take the place of the Elks' revolving fund?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. What amount do you think would be required at this time or from this time on?

Mr. MUNROE. The Elks' fund is $200,000, and a few weeks ago the Elks were seriously considering asking the payment of that fund back to them. We put up very strong recommendations to them, and they were very nice about it and agreed to continue it for another year. Whether they will be disposed to do it beyond that time I can not say.

Mr. TOWNER. My question was as to the amount of money; would $200,000 be sufficient?

Mr. MUNROE. I think a quarter million dollars would be sufficient.

Mr. TOWNER. Even if that were provided, it would have to be paid to the Elks in large proportion.

Mr. MUNROE. Oh, no, sir——

Mr. TOWNER. In order to take up the $200,000 outstanding?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; the boys are paying back so well. I think I testified that between 80 and 90 per cent of the loans are promptly paid, so there would be only probably somewhere between 5 and 10 per cent for the Government to make good to the Elks.

Mr. TOWNER. Can you think of any other recommendations that you have in mind?

Mr. MUNROE. Only this matter of the hospitals. Of course, I had not your point of view when I made that recommendation, but the Bureau of Public Health has very strongly put it up to us that if we are to carry out this excellent cooperative arrangement, by which we are to train men in these public health hospitals, they must have an appropriation for the erection of these hospitals; but, as I say, I can not speak from direct information on that.

Mr. TOWNER. You spoke in your testimony yesterday of the fact that you had had a great deal of difficulty in securing legislation in order to make your work effective, particularly referring to the funds necessary. When you first came to Congress asking for an appropriation, you asked for $2,000,000, I believe.

Mr. MUNROE. There, let me say, if I may express myself more clearly than perhaps I did yesterday, it was not the total amount, it was the fact that we were required to budget that $2,000,000 which led to the difficulties that followed in the succeeding winter. If that

$2,000,000 had not been budgeted, we would have had practically no difficulty in that first year.

Mr. TOWNER. When you found out that this difficulty existed, what steps did you take?

Mr. MUNROE. We brought it to the attention of Congress in the early part of December.

Mr. TOWNER. When you say, "brought it to the attention of Congress," what do you mean by that?

Mr. MUNROE. Put in a bill permitting the coalescing of these funds, through the proper channels.

Mr. TOWNER. What proper channels? Did you ever call it to the attention of the Education Committee that had introduced this legislation?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Holder tells me that Dr. Prosser, who was at that time the director, handled it directly with the Education Committee of both houses.

Mr. TOWNER. Did you not, in fact, make nearly all of your demands through the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. MUNROE. Not in that particular case, I think, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Well, in all cases.

Mr. MUNROE. Where it was a question of appropriations, we went, naturally, to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TOWNER. Did you appear before the Committee on Education with regard to these necessary changes in the law?

Mr. MUNROE. I, personally?

Mr. TOWNER. No; I mean the board.

Mr. MUNROE. I think that Dr. Prosser did or else brought it to individuals on the committee.

Mr. TOWNER. As a matter of fact, let me say this, that it was, in several instances, upon the suggestion or upon the application, really, of the members of the Committee on Education to the board, before we could receive any information regarding the matter, and the board seemed to be very loathe indeed to take the matter up with the committee that had originated the legislation and seemed to take the matter up, if they took it up at all, directly with the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MUNROE. I am very sorry——

Mr. TOWNER (continuing). When the changes that were to be made were changes in the law that ought to have originated with the Committee on Education, and the matter ought to have been brought before the Committee on Education. From the very start the Committee on Education has been very anxious, indeed, to make this legislation effective, and would have done and has done everything for the board that could be done in order to make it effective.

Mr. MUNROE. I have here a report, which has been put in my hands, of a hearing before the Committee on Education. It is dated January 34—I do not know whether that is January 3 or January 24, 1919, and at that hearing Dr. Prosser appeared and urged the coalescing of the funds and stated the situation.

Mr. ROBSION. What is that date?

Mr. MUNROE. It is January 34. I do not know whether it means January 3 or January 24. It is 1919. I see it is dated on the outside January 24.

Mr. PLATT. Doctor, you spoke of efforts being made to clean up by sending out letters to the men and by having squads of men go out and see those who had not yet applied for training. When a man writes you and says he does not want training, what do you do? Do you keep him on the list and keep after him?

Mr. MUNROE. We put him on what you might call the reserve list, in case he should change his mind at any time, but take him out of the active list.

Mr. PLATT. I should think that his name ought to be crossed off, and not necessarily prohibited absolutely from having training, but that he ought not to be pestered all the time. I have had some complaints about the board keeping after people who do not want training, who are either employed or not in condition to take training.

Mr. MUNROE. I have no doubt we have been overzealous in the matter, but we felt it was better to err on that side than on the other.

Mr. PLATT. You pay no attention, apparently, to the letters written you; no one ever reads them or opens them, or pays any attention to the case. When men are taken sick and sent to the Public Health hospitals, their pay keeps on just the same as if they were in training?

Mr. MUNROE. After 30 days they are transferred to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, but under the Sweet amendment they get the same amount that they would with us.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I was unavoidably absent yesterday and I do not know just what Mr. Munroe has testified to. I would like to ask if some one else is going to meet the specific charges that have been made against the board in regard to particular cases?

Mr. MUNROE. I dealt with that in my testimony yesterday. I think I answered each specific charge.

Mr. BURROUGHS. In the early part of your testimony, Mr. Munroe, you gave some figures. If they are convenient and readily accessible, I wish you would just verify these figures, because I am not sure I correctly got all of them. The figure you gave of total registrations, as of March 27, I take it, was 206,666.

Mr. MUNROE. I am sorry my document is not here, but that is my recollection.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Then, there is a figure which you gave for the total number with whom contact had been established on March 27, of 174,196?

Mr. MONROE. I think that was correct.

Mr. BURROUGHS. And 84.2 per cent of the total registration?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Then, there was another figure of 141,955 which was 81 per cent of the total registration—I did not get what that represented?

Mr. MUNROE. Those had been personally interviewed by the vocational advisors.

Mr. ROBSION. Indicated as being surveyed?

Mr. MUNROE. Personally interviewed, technically called surveyed.

Mr. BURROUGHS. There was a figure of 58,099, which, I understood you to say, was the number eligible for training?

Mr. MUNROE. The number for whom training had been arranged.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BURROUGHS. And there was a figure of 4,466 that was the total number that had begun training in the month of March, was that right?

Mr. MUNROE. New cases, you mean; I think that must have been. That is about the average, between 4,000 and 5,000 a month going into training.

Mr. BURROUGHS. There is still a large number of these men who are said to be eligible for training who have not yet been examined at all, I suppose?

Mr. MUNROE. The 200,000 includes all the names that have come to us from all sources, the Red Cross and various other sources. Probably a large proportion of those not included in the other figures have not any desire for training and probably most of them have not any disability.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You have examined between 125,000 and 150,000 men, I believe, you said, actually examined between 125,000 and 150,000?

Mr. MUNROE. I think the figure you quoted was somewhat larger than that.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes; where the contact had been established, 174,196. That is the exact figure?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I do not quite understand yet why there has been all of this delay and why there is still so much delay in getting a decision in a man's case?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, the delay for the first 13 months was due to the fact that it required two decisions. We could not put a man in training until the Bureau of War Risk Insurance had decided that he was eligible to compensation.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. In fact, I should question very seriously if there is any important delay, delay that amounts to anything.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Did you hear the testimony of certain gentlemen who came here from the New York office, one at least, and I think two of them testified, one certainly testified to me that the average length of time was at least a month in getting a decision.

Mr. MUNROE. I would prefer that Mr. Lamkin, who is directly responsible, answer that question rather than myself. Mr. Lamkin will testify later on that point.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You personally do not know about that?

Mr. MUNROE. I have my opinion, but I should prefer to have the question answered by Mr. Lamkin, who is directly responsible for the personnel of the New York office.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You remember hearing this gentleman also say that the chief reason for the delay, in his opinion—he gave several reasons—but the chief reason was due to the fact that so many decisions had to be made in Washington?

Mr. MUNROE. He was entirely mistaken in that. No decisions have to be put up to Washington or have had to be put up to Washington since last fall, except in the cases of men whose courses are likely to occupy more than two years, or where the tuition is more than $500 a year. All other cases the district has entire authority to settle itself.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That has been the rule since last fall?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Do you recall the time, was it soon after this amendment in July?

Mr. MUNROE. It was impossible to give any such authority to the district until after the amendment.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Do I understand you to say to the committee that such authority was given to the district office immediately following the passage of the amendment?

Mr. MUNROE. As soon as the reorganization which was necessitated by the salary limitation had taken place. Of course, that meant a considerable readjustment of all the districts and all the work.

Mr. BURROUGHS. As you understand it now, the district office has final authority?

Mr. MUNROE. Absolutely.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Except in the cases which you mention?

Mr. MUNROE. Except in the two cases I have mentioned.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What proportion of all cases would be governed by those exceptions, would you say?

Mr. MUNROE. As to the tuition it would be infinitesimal, probably not half a dozen cases in the whole country, and as to the other, this is merely a guess on my part, I should say that it would not be over 5 per cent.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Who determines the question of eligibility, where is that determined?

Mr. MUNROE. Eligibility for training?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. As I say, except in those cases, it is determined in the district office under general regulations originally laid down in what we call "Miscellaneous, 150."

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is the eligibility question determined by a district officer or by a central board officer located in the district office?

Mr. MUNROE. There is a local board that considers the case with a member from the central office with authority to give the cachet from Washington that it can go through; it does not have to be sent to Washington at all.

Mr. BURROUGHS. The final O. K. on the thing is made by a central board agent in the district office?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What have you to say to the charge made by Mr. Littledale that some 65,000 or 70,000 cases were thrown out by what he calls the eligibility squad?

Mr. MUNROE. I testified to that yesterday and gave the figures showing that large numbers of those were duplicates and, of course, naturally were thrown out. Another large number—I think I have that here—53,000 of these cases had been transferred to another district.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What do you mean by that?

Mr. MUNROE. They were duplicates. The boy had appeared in one district and his case had been transferred to another district and they had neglected to take his name off the first district list.

One thousand five hundred and seventy-five cases had been opened in the district office in error. A large proportion of these were duplicate cases, again, duplicates in the office themselves, they had the same man's name twice. The eligibility squad closed 35,431 cases and 12,923 cases had previously been closed by the central office, making a total of 48,534 cases which had been closed for the following reasons:

The man had died.

The man had reenlisted in the service.

The man had not been discharged from the Army, but had been placed on the retired list at once, therefore not eligible for training under the law.

The man stated that he did not desire training.

The man requested that his case be closed and that no more letters be written him.

The man was apparently not interested in training as evidenced by his failure to reply to several letters.

The man could not be located. Inquiry at the office of The Adjutant General in Washington, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the local Red Cross, the American Legion, and other agencies had failed to discover his present address.

The man was carrying on successfully in employment and was not in need of training.

The man had no disability and claimed no disability. There were thousands, I might say, brought to us by the local Red Cross where the man never had any disability.

The man's disability was a negligible handicap, and therefore he did not come under the law.

The man's disability was a minor disability and he had stated that he was not interested in section 3 training.

The disability existed prior to enlistment and was not aggravated by service and he was, therefore, not eligible for training under the act.

The man was in the Army only a few days, having been discharged from draft.

The information in the man's folder was so meager that contact with the man could not be made on the basis of this information; we could not locate the man at all. Of course, there were cases where they had the same name and it was a very difficult thing with those common names to actually locate the man.

The man had left the country.

The man had not been discharged under honorable conditions. A great many of those were thrown out.

Mr. BURROUGHS. How many men made up the eligibility squad?

Mr. MUNROE. They varied in the larger districts. What was the number, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. LAMKIN. Twenty.

Mr. MUNROE. That was subdivided for the smaller districts.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Was there not a medical member on the staff?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. On every staff in every district?

Mr. MUNROE. That is not true in every district. Where the medical reports had already been made and where there was not a medical man on the eligibility squad they were to accept the medical report.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Did they accept the medical report?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BURROUGHS. In a good many cases they absolutely overruled the medical report?

Mr. MUNROE. So far as I am aware they did not overrule the medical report.

Mr. BURROUGHS. In a number of instances where the medical report showed a major disability this eligibility squad found that there was simply a minor disability?

Mr. MUNROE. I am not aware of any such cases.

The cases that Mr. Littledale cites I will just run over.

Case 670. The man has fallen arches. The medical decision is that the disability was aggravated in the service. Three doctors classified him as a major case.

I am quoting from Mr. Littledale.

The eligibility squad overrules that classification. The squad gives him a negligible handicap and refuses him training pay.

The facts show that at the time this case was reviewed by the eligibility squad the folder contained two medical examinations, one by Dr. Tracy, of the New York office, and one by the Army medical officer who examined the man at the time of his discharge. Dr. Tracy's examination stated that the disability was a major disability and constituted a major permanent handicap which was aggravated by service. The Army medical examiner stated that the disability was third-degree flat feet which was not aggravated by service.

On account of the conflicting medical reports the central office case board representative had to choose between two suppositions. The man's enlistment record showed that he was discharged from draft after being in camp only six weeks during the fall of 1917 and that he was never accepted for enlistment in the Army. Both medical opinions show that the disability uudoubtedly existed prior to enlistment and that he carried on successfully before entering the Army in spite of this handicap, which consisted of flat feet, and the record showed that for two years since being rejected from the draft he had been employed as a car painter and stenciler. In view of the undeniable evidence that the disability existed prior to enlistment, and in view of the fact that the man had successfully carried on for two years following his brief stay at a military camp, the central office case board representative ruled that the man was not eligible for training under the conditions of section 2 of the vocational rehabilitation act.

The handicap rating was not changed from major to negligible and the man denied training on the ground that his disability was aggravated by service.

Mr. Littledale also cites the case 13192. Mr. Littledale said:

The man's occupation is a clerk. He was wounded and is suffering from epilepsy. Medical opinion classifies him as a major case. The eligibility squad overrules that. The squad calls him a minor case and refused him training with pay.

The facts in this case show that at the time this case was rated by a member of the eligibility squad there was no evidence in the man's folder that he was suffering from epilepsy and the file contained no rating by any member of the district medical staff. The folder contained an old medical examination stating that the man's disability was a slight limitation on the movement of his right arm. Inasmuch as the man prior to enlistment was employed as a clerk it was not considered that he was suffering from a major occupational handicap and it was ruled that he was not eligible for section 2 training.

Mr. Littledale cites the following case:

Case 27675. The man is suffering from dementia præcox,; medical opinion classifies him as a major case. The eligibility squad overrules that; calls him a minor case and refuses him training with pay.

The facts in this case show that no ruling was made by the eligibility squad, the decision having been previously made by the central office. The official report from the Navy Department shows that the man was not discharged, but was placed on the inactive list on account of flat feet. The man was placed on the inactive list in December, 1918. An examination made 11 months later at the office of the Federal board showed that the man was suffering from hepephrenic dementia præcox. There was some doubt as to the feasibility of training even if the disability were aggravated by service and there is no evidence to show that this mental disability was related in any way to military service. Inasmuch as this case presented many difficulties it was forwarded to the central office in Washington for a ruling and section 2 training was disapproved by central office because it was considered that the man's disability was not due to service and that the man was, therefore, ineligible under the conditions of the law. This ruling was made by the central office in Washington, and not by a member of the eligibility squad as stated in the Evening Post.

Then the figures which Mr. Littledale gave in regard to the alleged throwing out of cases—I will just give a few, it is not necessary to give them all—the Boston office was reduced from 10,568 to 7,255. The reason for this was that 1,671 cases had been transferred to another office and 38 cases were duplicates or canceled cases; 1,604 were ineligible under the evidence presented. New York was reduced from 31,191 to 16,041. The reason for this was that 9,714 men had been transferred to other offices, 395 cases were duplicates, and 5,041 were thrown out because the evidence showed that the men were not eligible for training under the law, and the same applies to all the other offices.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Have you personally any acquaintance with the business of the New York office?

Mr. MUNROE. Do you mean the actual financial running of the office?

Mr. BURROUGHS. No; I mean the actual running of the office.

Mr. MUNROE. I have visited the office many times.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Have you ever looked into its management or control?

Mr. MUNROE. Each time I go there I talk with the heads of the different divisions and get as good a view as one can in half a day's visit.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is it your opinion that the New York office is run as it should be run?

Mr. MUNROE. I think it is now. It was not for quite a long time after it was started.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Are you satisfied that the New York office is now on such a basis as it ought to be on?

Mr. MUNROE. I think that it is rapidly getting to that basis; yes, sir.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BURROUGHS. You think that the morale in the New York office is up to the standard?

Mr. MUNROE. It depends upon what one calls the standard.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is it up to what you would consider a proper standard?

Mr. MUNROE. I think there are still changes that should be made there in order to bring it to the highest standard.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What changes would you recommend there?

Mr. MUNROE. I think certain subordinates there should be transferred.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You would confine it to subordinates?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Why?

Mr. MUNROE. Because I think the difficulty, if there is any lack of pulling together there, is due to the disaffection of some of these subordinates.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You think that Mr. Clark is fully competent to handle the office?

Mr. MUNROE. I should say yes.

Mr. BURROUGHS. In every way?

Mr. MUNROE. I think it should be stated here that for the salaries which we are able to offer the district vocational officers you can not get the ideal executive, because I think such a man would command anywhere from $15,000 to $25,000 or $30,000, but with what we are able to offer I think we have good men.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Now, you have brought that up, I should like to go into that a little.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is it in your opinion true that it is impossible to get the type of man that you need, the type of man who can render the best and most efficient service in this work, that it is impossible to obtain that man without paying him a salary like what he perhaps might receive out in the industries?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not think that it would be necessary to offer a man $20,000 or $25,000, but I think to get the type of man to handle a complicated situation such as is presented by the New York office, a situation involving large financial responsibilities and very difficult and complicated human problems, that you ought to be able to offer a man at least $7,500 and, better, $10,000. Then, I think that you could get a man of large experience who should be willing to come at considerable financial sacrifice for the sake of doing the work, but with what we are able here to offer under the salary limitation, I do not believe that we can get that type of man; it represents too great a sacrifice on his part.

Mr. BURROUGHS. How about these advisors, are you able to get the right type of man for advisor in the district offices at the salary limit in the law?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; except, of course, we have got a number of very extraordinary men who are doing a fine piece of work, but simply because they are willing to throw themselves into the work with that small salary for the sake of doing it, but where we need large numbers, as we do, it is impossible to expect that motive to hold in many cases.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BURROUGHS. Such men do have large responsibilities, do they?

Mr. MUNROE. In one way they are the most responsible men of all. They come into close personal contact with the soldiers. To the soldiers he is the Government of the United States. They, as a rule, do not come in contact with any other man representing the Government, except this one man. You gentlemen saw from your own experience with these witnesses how complicated these problems are. There are all sorts of social questions that come up, all sorts of questions growing out, particularly, of his physical and mental condition, which involves his point of view, and so on, and you have got to have a type of man who will get at the real kernel of that man's need, and who knows enough of the whole field of industry to be able to give him successful advice as to his future, and who has a sufficient knowledge of human nature to know what is real and what is just passing and ephemeral in the man's state of mind. Then, when you get that man into a school or into an industry, you have got to have a man who knows enough about education and about the industry to be able to go into that department and to speak with authority as to whether or not the people in charge of the department are giving that boy a square deal. A man who is not competent of course, simply makes a fool of himself when he tries to criticize the education or the training of one of these men. He has got to speak with some authority and that means a man of experience and a man of pretty large caliber. For $2,400 we have, as a rule, to take young men of very little experience with either the human problems or the industrial problems, and it is amazing to me that under these limiations our men are doing such fine work as they are. A majority of them are throwing themselves into the work, heart and soul, and making up in zeal for what many of them lack in experience.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What effort has been made to obtain men of the type you mentioned for this work?

Mr. MUNROE. We are on the lookout all the time through State officers and various other people who are likely to know men of that stamp and recommend them to us. Then, of course, with the American Red Cross and the American Legion we are now endeavoring, as far as possible, to get ex-service men in those positions.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is a like effort being made to obtain men for the follow-up work? There seems to be a need for them very much, especially in the New York district?

Mr. MUNROE. The plan is, as the work of advising slackens off, to take these men who have had experience with the problem and gradually transfer them to the problem of follow-up.

Mr. BURROUGHS. In the meantime what, if anything, is being done?

Mr. MUNROE. We are getting men as fast as we can obtain them. It is almost impossible to get men who can go into a school or an industry and talk with authority in regard to the training of the men, and it is foolish to send anybody else into such a place.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You say that it is impossible to get men to do that work?

Mr. MUNROE. At the salaries that we are able to offer; yes, sir; because in these days a man can get very much more than $2,400 in a position that involves very little responsibility on his part.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BURROUGHS. That is true, no doubt; but I have had in mind that it would not be a tremendously difficult thing to appeal to the right type of man. This work makes an appeal, I think, to the type of man that you speak of?

Mr. MUNROE. But those men have been giving themselves, a great many of them have been giving themselves at great sacrifice, practically ever since the war started. A large number of them who would have been available while the war was on for service of that sort have got to go back to earn money for themselves and their families. They feel that they have done their share of service to the country and that they have got to take care of themselves. We find that attitude very common throughout the country, and it is a very natural attitude.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You spoke about the Elks' fund. I do not know that it has been brought out here at all in the course of this investigation, just how that Elks' fund is being administered, on what terms it was placed in your hands?

Mr. MUNROE. It was, of course, impossible to put it into our regular funds, because under the law it could not have been used except for the purposes of the law.

Mr. BURROUGHS. It is a separate fund?

Mr. MUNROE. Absolutely, and was handled by Dr. Prosser, so long as he was with the board.

Mr. BURROUGHS. It was placed with Dr. Prosser by the Elks' organization?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. The board has absolutely no official knowledge of it.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What were the conditions that were imposed?

Mr. MUNROE. There were practically two funds. One was a gift fund that the Elks did not expect to get back. That covers such cases as the boys who fought with the Allies and that we could not take care of under the law. A larger fund is the loan fund, a loan for the boys to tide them over in the weeks before they can receive their regular pay checks from the board. As I have already stated, between 80 and 90 per cent of that is paid back very promptly.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Does the Elks organization have any oversight whatever or check upon its administration?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. Reports are made at short intervals to the organization just how the money is being used.

Mr. BURROUGHS. As far as you know, is the Elks organization satisfied with the administration of this fund up to this time?

Mr. MUNROE. The only way that I can judge is by the fact that at some meeting of the officers of the Elks, a few weeks ago, out, I think, at Indianapolis, the question of continuing the fund for another year was brought up, and Gov. Tanner and a Mr. Fanning, who are in direct charge of the fund, were so far satisfied with the work that they recommended, and it was adopted by the Elks organization, a continuation of the plan for another year.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You spoke generally about the hard-boiled order, so-called. Do you know, as a matter of fact, that any such order had been sent out by the board?

Mr. MUNROE. By any official of the board, as I understood you?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes, sir. There was a statement in printed form, however, was there not?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Typewritten.

Mr. BURROUGHS. In typewritten form. Did you ever see that statement?

Mr. MUNROE. Not until I saw it published in the New York Post.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Do you have any knowledge of its origin?

Mr. MUNROE. Only the report that was made to me by the chief of the Vocational Rehabilitation Division.

Mr. BURROUGHS. To your knowledge, was it ever a basis of action by the board or by any official or subordinate of the board either here or anywhere else?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; absolutely no.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Did you ever hear in the office from the chief or from anybody else any such sentiment expressed as seems to have been expressed in that so-called hard-boiled order?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; it was absolutely contrary to the whole attitude, spirit, and temper of the organization from top to bottom.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I believe you spoke in your testimony about there being some 8,000 men who had been waiting varying periods from two months to six months, and perhaps more, at the time of the passage of the amendment, in July a year ago?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. July, 1919?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Was that right?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You spoke about the effort that had been made by the board for some form of cooperative action between the board and the War Risk Insurance Bureau prior to your seeking that amendment?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. And that all such efforts had proved futile?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That was during the incumbency of Mr. Lindsley?

Mr. MUNROE. Col. Lindsley; yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. For how long a time were those efforts continued?

Mr. MUNROE. From the very beginning. In fact, just before the law was passed we sent a formal communication to the War Risk Insurance Bureau, pointing out the necessity of close cooperation in working out the law, urging them to interpret it, as we proposed to interpret it, in the liberal spirit in which we knew and believed that Congress intended it to be interpreted, and pointing out to them that the interpretation involved their paying the man not merely the $30 a month actual cash pay, but a sufficient sum that would maintain him while taking the training; and also pointing out to them, in view of the fact that they must determine the compensation from the point of view of many factors other than that of the need of training, whereas we had only to consider one question, the necessity of these disabled men having training in order to go back into industry, that they should therefore interpret the law, as we thought it should be interpreted, on the basis of the man's eligibility for compensation rather than on that of his being in actual receipt of compensation.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You ascertained to your own satisfaction pretty soon after the law was passed, possibly even before the law was passed, that the bureau was going to take a different attitude than the Federal Board was taking with reference to the interpretation of the statute?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, there were comparatively few men to be dealt with in the beginning. As I pointed out, I think, for a long time we carried on a cooperative plan that was not officially recognized by the bureau.

Mr. BURROUGHS. How long was that?

Mr. MUNROE. That was up to January or February.

Mr. BURROUGHS. From the time the law was passed in October?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. It was about that time—I do not remember just when Col. Lindsley came in—but apparently he placed a stricter interpretation on the law than we did.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Was that cooperative plan satisfactory?

Mr. MUNROE. It did the business; yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That is to say, there was no delay occassioned during those months?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Up until about January?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Everything was going along smoothly because of your cooperative plan which you had devised, which was, perhaps, extra-legal, but which was getting the results?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. Then, of course, another thing, if I may continue, in January, was the fact not only that the bureau put a stricter interpretation on the law but also the fact that under the order of December 31, 1918, the boys were coming out in perfect shoals from the Army, so the bureau was absolutely swamped; they could not take care of them at all.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I understood you in your testimony—I may be wrong, and if I am I want you to correct me—I understood you to say that about May, if my memory is right, you first asked for the amendment to the law?

Mr. MUNROE. We held conferences from this time in January when the situation began to be critical, almost every week. We would go to the bureau or the officers of the bureau would come to us, and we would talk over the situation and we would urge, formally and informally, their more liberal interpretation of the law. It would then be put up to their legal advisors and they would decide that it could not be interpreted in the way that we wished it. Then we began to send every few days some inquiry as to why they interpreted the law as they did and why they varied their interpretation from one week to another week, and urging some kind of a cooperative arrangement, and each time explaining to them that unless something of that sort was done we would have to ask for a divorcing from them. At each of these conferences Col. Lindsley would urge us to try to keep along as we were, that he was sure the thing would come out all right. Finally, about the middle of April, under authority of the board, I wrote the letter to Assistant Secretary Shouse, which I read yesterday, covering these points of disagreement and the difficulty between us. Nothing happened within a week or 10 days and Secretary Houston, the chairman of our board, wrote a letter to Secretary Glass, who was at that time the Secretary of the Treasury, and the result of that letter was the putting in of a joint request for legislation divorcing us from the bureau.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That was about the 1st of May?

Mr. MUNROE. My letter was sent about the middle of April.

Mr. BURROUGHS. When you actually prepared the amendment and started proceedings for the amendment?

Mr. MUNROE. It was useless to ask for an amendment to the legislation until the War Risk Insurance Bureau was willing to cooperate with us in asking; otherwise it would have been impossible.

Mr. BURROUGHS. It was around the middle of April when you actually started proceedings for the amendment?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. When you gave up all further cooperative action with the bureau and started to get a change in the law?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Why had you not done that earlier?

Mr. MUNROE. Because of the constant hope held out to us by Col. Lindsley that we would be able to straighten the thing out without legislation.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What reason did you have for thinking that you could come to any understanding when his interpretation was one way and yours another?

Mr. MUNROE. Because he always held out the hope to us that the bureau might see the thing differently. It was one of those cases where you have to do a thing gradually, because we had to bring them around to the state of mind where they would act with us and ask for legislation; it was not a thing that we could force on them.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Were you not convinced long before May that something would have to be done in the way of legislation?

Mr. MUNROE. I think I so expressed myself to Col. Lindsley one of the first times that I met him.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What reason did he give you for thinking that it was not necessary?

Mr. MUNROE. He maintained that he had found the bureau in a great state of confusion when he took hold of it, and I think he made the public statement that in four or five weeks he would get it all straightened out. It was in the hope that he would get it all straightened out and the thing would go through all right that we held off.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Here were these boys' cases piling up by the thousands. As I understand you, the matter had gone along all right from about January, the beginning of January, until the middle of April or the 1st of May and that then there were some 8,000 cases that had accumulated?

Mr. MUNROE. They did not begin to pile up very seriously until about April.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You say the only reason you did not act earlier because Col. Lindsley held you off by saying that he thought the matter could be arranged otherwise?

Mr. MUNROE. The bureau was in great confusion, because of this great outpouring of men and he thought that he would get it straightened out in a few weeks and that we could come to some cooperative arrangement without the necessity of asking for legislation.

Mr. BURROUGHS. As I understand it, the board has two functions, that is to say, there is the function of vocational education proper and then there is the rehabilitation section?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. The board was created originally simply to carry out the vocational feature.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That means that there are men on two pay rolls there?

Mr. MUNROE. No; there is no man on two pay rolls. There are ix or seven men who would have to perform functions of both divisions in the auditing department, bookkeeping, and that sort of thing, and the clerk to the board, and so instead of putting new officers on those duties we asked the existing officers to do double duty and we split their salaries, after having secured a ruling from the comptroller that that was a proper thing to do.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You have the so-called split pay roll?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. And they get a salary from each?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Would you say that it is not a full salary from each?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; it is the old salary split in two, payable from two different appropriations.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is it or is it not a fact that men in the service of the board who are doing purely vocational educational work are on the payroll of the rehabilitation division?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. It is not true?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Would it be possible to have a statement submitted to the committee showing the names of the staff members and clerks who are doing purely educational work? You say there are none on the payroll of the vocational board?

Mr. MUNROE. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Or the rehabilitation board?

Mr. MUNROE. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. BURROUGHS. How long have you been connected with the board?

Mr. MUNROE. From its establishment in July, 1917.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Will you kindly name the chiefs of the rehabilitation section since you came on it?

Mr. MUNROE. The first chief was Dr. J. A. C. Chandler, who resigned in order to take the presidency of the College of William and Mary; the next chief was D. H. L. Smith, who had been loaned to us by the University of Indiana; he was in charge of the educational department there and was obliged to return, under the original agreement, at the opening of the fall term in 1919; and the present chief, Mr. Lamkin, who has been the chief since that time.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You have no women employed on the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Women?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MUNROE. A large number in the clerical staff; yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I did not know that.

Mr. ROBSION. You have women employed where?

Mr. MUNROE. The clerical and stenographic force is almost wholly women.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Have you any women employed in responsible positions in the board?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Only in the division of vocational education.
Mr. BURROUGHS. How about the rehabilitation division?
Mr. MUNROE. None.
Mr. BURROUGHS. Is there any reason for that?
Mr. MUNROE. Simply because in dealing with young men it seemed important to have men.
Mr. BURROUGHS. You stated, I think, yesterday, that half of the actual employees are ex-service men?
Mr. MUNROE. Fully half.
Mr. BURROUGHS. That is true?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURROUGHS. How many of them saw actual service?
Mr. MUNROE. I can not say offhand; I could get the figures for you.
Mr. BURROUGHS. Do you know how many were Y. M. C. A., Red Cross, or K. of C. workers and how many were real soldiers?
Mr. MUNROE. Real soldiers, all of them.
Mr. BURROUGHS. All of the 50 per cent?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURROUGHS. I think you spoke of some 96 of the male employees being discharged soldiers?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURROUGHS. How many of them have been re-educated?
Mr. MUNROE. They did not need it.
Mr. BURROUGHS. They were disabled men?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; but they were carried on without being re-educated. I said 96. That was the number known to us. There may be others disabled. We never made any canvas of the situation. Some of the other ex-service men may have been disabled and we not know of it.
Mr. BURROUGHS. You spoke of Mr. Lamkin recommending appointments and the board acting upon the recommendation?
Mr. MUNROE. Staff appointments.
Mr. BURROUGHS. That was the procedure?
Mr. MUNROE. With staff appointments; yes, sir.
Mr. BURROUGHS. Did Mr. Lamkin recommend the appointment of Mr. Clark?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURROUGHS. That was upon his own initiative, without any suggestion from anyone, as far as you know?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURROUGHS. Mr. Holder, I think, yesterday testified, or somebody did, that Mr. Clark's salary had been increased to $4,000 but that he was not yet drawing it?
Mr MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin will have to answer that; I am not familiar with it.
Mr. BURROUGHS. I think that is all at present.
Mr. TOWNER. The hearings will be adjourned until 1 o'clock this afternoon.
(Thereupon, the committee took a recess until 1 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee reassembled, pursuant to recess, at 1 o'clock p. m., Hon. Horace M. Towner presiding.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. The committee will be in order. Before going on with the testimony I want to call attention to a letter which I just received on the mail that came in just before noon. This letter is written by a service man, who is a lawyer and who used to live in my district in Iowa, and now lives in Phœnix, Ariz. He writes me a letter protesting against the proposed bonus bill and then he makes this statement, which I will want to put in the record as an indication of how widespread the feeling is that the board or somebody is responsible for unusual delays with regard to the benefits provided for the disabled service men. This is what he says in his letter, after discussing the bonus proposition:

Whi'e it does not concern the Fordney bill, I would suggest that some pressure be brought to bear upon the heads of departments having to do with disabled service men. The hardships of these men and their families in many cases are receiving no attention whatever. The dilatory tactics of those having the relief of disabled men in charge is disgusting, and in many instances the men and their families grow discouraged and give up in their efforts to secure aid which is justly due them. If a real service is to be done, let it be done on behalf of these men.

You may resume, Mr. Munroe.

STATEMENT OF MR. JAMES P. MUNROE—Resumed.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Munroe, I have lost in my memory the exact date on which you became associated with the board. Would you state that again?

Mr. MUNROE. It was in July; I think it was the 21st of July, 1917.

Mr. ROBSION. And your service has been continuous up to this date?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Have you occupied the same position in the board all the time?

Mr. MUNROE. I was elected vice chairman at the first organization meeting which I think took place on that date.

Mr. ROBSION. Your suggestions of improvements relate to outside agencies, that is, to Congress?

Mr. MUNROE. To legislation to be passed by Congress.

Mr. ROBSION. You have no suggestion as to the improvement of the central office?

Mr. MUNROE. Except as improvement would come with the removal of the salary limitations. That would tend to an improvement.

Mr. ROBSION. So far as you can see it, there is nothing that the central office can do to improve the service or to become more efficient in administering the laws as they are now written?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, I am not so foolish as to maintain that our organization, any more than any other Government body, is absolutely perfect.

Mr. ROBSION. I say so far as you see you are unable to make any suggested improvement there?

Mr. MUNROE. Except we are always strengthening the office in every way we can.

Mr. ROBSION. Would that apply to the New York office?

Mr. MUNROE. In regard to possible improvement?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. I stated this morning that I thought the morale would be improved by some shake up there.

Mr. ROBSION. Who do you have in mind that ought to be shaken up?

Mr. MUNROE. Two or three of the staff there, I think, are making more or less trouble.

Mr. ROBSION. Who are they?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin could give the names better than I could, but it is my general impression that there is some lack of cooperation there.

Mr. ROBSION. They are a part of the staff there, and, of course, hold responsible positions. Can not you give the names?

Mr. MUNROE. I would prefer not to do so because it is a question of administration which Mr. Lamkin is responsible for rather than myself.

Mr. ROBSION. I would like to get it into the record at this time in view of some other matters I desire to ask you. I wish you would inquire of Mr. Lamkin now and let it go into the record.

Mr. MUNROE. Are you prepared to make any statement? (After a pause.) Mr Lamkin apparently is not.

Mr. ROBSION. If you can not give the names, how can you say there ought to be a shake-up there?

Mr. MUNROE. Because it is my general impression that there has been more or less friction there, which I believe would probably be disposed of by the removal of some of the men.

Mr. ROBSION. You were present here during all of the hearings, were you not?

Mr. MUNROE. Most of them; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. When Mr. Clark testified?

Mr. MUNROE. Most of the time; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. When Mr. Meyer and Mr. Ives and Mr. Noyes testified. There are those four men who related the situation in New York, did they not?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Didn't you gather from their testimony what the trouble was at New York so far as morale goes?

Mr. MUNROE. As far as I could gather from their testimony I should think that Mr. Meyer and Mr. Ives should be transferred.

Mr. ROBSION. What about Mr. Noyes?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not think Mr. Noyes—I think he is all right.

Mr. ROBSION. But he did give substantially the same evidence that Mr. Ives gave, did he not?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Noyes is a gentleman of quite a different disposition.

Mr. ROBSION. But so far as discussing conditions in the New York office, there is very little difference in the testimony Mr. Noyes and Mr. Ives gave?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; but Mr. Noyes is of a cooperative nature and the other two gentlemen are not. That is, judging from their attitude.

Mr. ROBSION. They, at least, are the men that have come before the committee at the request of the committee and have detailed the conditions in the New York office and you feel ought to be relieved and transferred?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; because I do not think that Mr. Noyes should be transferred.

Mr. ROBSION. I say Mr. Meyer and Mr. Ives.

Mr. MUNROE. I do.

Mr. ROBSION. Well, from the appearance of the men here and their testimony, their knowledge of the work there, were you not impressed with the fact that Meyer and Ives appeared to be better trained, and have the work in hand better than Mr. Noyes?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I did not gather that impression.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, Mr. Munroe, after hearing the testimony of Mr. Noyes who you say is all right, are you not convinced that there is something radically wrong in the New York office?

Mr. MUNROE. I am convinced that there was something wrong there for the early part of the history of the office and that it is being very rapidly cleared up.

Mr. ROBSION. Did not Mr. Noyes bring the condition right down to April, 1920?

Mr. MUNROE. I still say that I think Mr. Noyes is of a proper state of mind and would not make trouble in the office whereas I think the other men would.

Mr. ROBSION. But if Mr. Noyes is a good man and unbiased, unprejudiced, and is that type of man that you describe him, when he makes the charges that he makes, that are substantially the same as Mr. Meyer and Mr. Ives make, can we escape the conclusion that there is something radically wrong in the New York office as late as April 1, 1920?

Mr. MUNROE. I think Mr. Noyes is mistaken in his conclusions. That is the way I size him up.

Mr. ROBSION. But, Mr. Munroe, he did not testify as to conclusions; he stated the conditions, the facts.

Mr. MUNROE. I shall have to read his testimony, really. I only heard part of it.

Mr. ROBSION. Would you, before Mr. Meyer and Mr. Noyes stated the facts of the situation and conditions there—do you know anything that would cause either Mr. Noyes or Mr. Ives, and Mr. Meyer to come before this committee and willfully commit perjury?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I do not think they would commit perjury. I think they simply saw things in the rather warped way that people do if they think they are not being given proper consideration.

Mr. ROBSION. But Mr. Griffin and a great many other witnesses that appeared here all seem to have found the same condition existing there in the New York office.

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, Mr. Griffin testified to a time practically anterior to the July 11 legislation.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, Mr. Noyes and these other witnesses put the blame for the failure of the office there on Mr. Clark. Might that not have some weight in influencing you to feel that perhaps Mr. Clark is responsible for conditions there?

Mr. MUNROE. I should have to read their testimony carefully before I gave my opinion in the matter.

Mr. ROBSION. If I have understood you, you never spent more than half a day at any one time in the New York office, did you?

Mr. MUNROE. At times I have spent the whole of one day, or even two successive days.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Did you do in your visits to the New York office as Mr. Noyes and Mr. Meyer stated that they did, that they went right into the files there and looked into the many individual cases to learn the true conditions there?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I did not examine the files, but I questioned the persons in charge of the files as to the situation.

Mr. ROBSION. The persons in charge of the files would be rather supposed to give themselves a clean bill of health, would they not?

Mr. MUNROE. I did not consider it the duty of a member of the board to go into details of that sort. Our duties are more of a general character rather than of a detailed administrative character.

Mr. ROBSION. But you must admit, must you not, Mr. Munroe, that Noyes and Ives and Meyer and a great many of the other witnesses that testified had a better opportunity to know conditions in the New York office than you had yourself?

Mr. MUNROE. If their opinion was unbiased.

Mr. ROBSION. I am not speaking as to their opinion, but where they undertook to detail the facts. You, as the head here in the central office, in your visits to New York, your information, whatever you had, was merely information from the heads, was it not, to a large extent?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And it had to be largely confined to that, did it not?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, say that a young man should go into the New York office and register and contact should be made, what would you say, on an average, would be a reasonable time upon which to pass on that fellow's case?

Mr. MUNROE. It would depend entirely on the complications of the case.

Mr. ROBSION. As a general rule.

Mr. MUNROE. What do you mean by pass; get him into training?

Mr. ROBSION. Have it determined whether or not he is to take training; whether or not he is entitled to the training there under sections 2 or 3?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not make any general statement on that, sir, because every case is individual, and some are complicated and others quite simple. The simple case ought to be a matter of 24 or 48 hours, as many cases are passed on in that time.

Mr. ROBSION. If I have understood your testimony, you have looked into the facts, and you say that it is your opinion that all these thousands of cases will be disposed of by about the 1st of July?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, I should think in making a statement like that you must have in your mind some period of time that it would usually take?

Mr. MUNROE. It is very difficult.

Mr. ROBSION. Some period of time that it would usually take to pass upon these cases?

Mr. MUNROE. It is very difficult to give an average because, as I say, the cases vary from the perfectly simple one that can be settled in a few moments to the one that would require a great deal of investigation before they could come to a decision.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Can you in a measure classify them in some way to give the percentage of time that it would require?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not do so without making a study of a thousand or more typical cases, and then I could give you figures.

Mr. ROBSION. Say it was a case that did not require that it be referred to the central office here. How long would you say it ought to take that New York office to pass upon the case?

Mr. MUNROE. It would depend, of course, upon how rapidly the cases were flooding in. I should say three or four days.

Mr. ROBSION. When was it that you had the New York office organized, as you say, under the laws amended July 11, 1919?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Farwell came there at that time, the 10th of August, and the office began to improve from that time.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Farwell was the representative of the central office, was he?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; he was the D. V. O. at New York.

Mr. ROBSION. That is so. He was D. V. O. Did you have a representative of the central office there on August 10, 1919?

Mr. MUNROE. Do you mean somebody permanently there?

Mr. ROBSION. Somebody there to help take care of the business?

Mr. MUNROE. There is practically somebody there all the time from the central office.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, could you give me the number of registrations that had been made in the New York office, say, up to the 10th of August, 1919?

Mr. MUNROE. To the present date, or up to that time?

Mr. ROBSION. Up to that time.

Mr. MUNROE. Not without looking up the figures. I can get them for you.

Mr. ROBSION. Have you that, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. MUNROE. I can get the figures.

Mr. ROBSION. I would like you to put in the record those figures. I just want to get at that condition in New York. There is somebody badly mistaken in their testimony. It is either right or wrong up there.

Mr. MUNROE. We will make a note of that, please, Mr. Lamkin.

Mr. ROBSION. I want a statement of all of the men who had registered and whose cases would be passed upon by the New York office or through the New York office on the 10th day of August, 1919.

Mr. MUNROE. Up to that time?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes, sir.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; I can get that.

Mr. TOWNER. The number of men.

Mr. ROBSION. The number of men.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Then I should like to have how many men had registered or whose cases had passed through the New York office on the 1st day of January, 1920. Now, what is the date you give that the auditor furnished in his statement that you read there? What is your last statement as to the number of men that are in training, etc.?

Mr. MUNROE. On April 15, was the date I gave. The number of men in section 2 was 58,000.

Mr. ROBSION I do not ask you to give the figures at all in here now.

Mr. MUNROE. What is it you wish me to give?

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. You can give the figures, or let Mr. Lamkin put in his figures.

Mr. MUNROE. You mean January 1 to April 15?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. Very well.

Mr. ROBSION. Then I should like to have you put in either how many cases had been passed on for section 2 training and section 3 training on August 10, 1919?

Mr. MUNROE. You mean now just the New York office or the whole?

Mr. ROBSION. The New York office.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. How many cases had been passed on for section 2 training and section 3 training on January 1, 1920? How many cases had been passed on for section 2 training and section 3 training on April 15, 1920, and I wish either Mr. Lamkin or yourself would put in that in the statement because I am going to ask him to produce the records when he appears to show the average length of time that those cases were in the New York office from the time they were filed up until they were passed upon. How many cases have been passed upon in March and up to April 15?

Mr. MUNROE. You mean the total number up to April 15?

Mr. ROBSION. For the month of March and for April, up to the 15th of April. You had that somewhere.

Mr. MUNROE. I haven't that figure by itself. I do not find it here, but I can get it for you.

Mr. ROBSION. I would like to have Mr. Lamkin put that in here with the other figures of the number of cases that were passed on approved for the month of March and for April, up to the 15th of April, 1920. I believe, however, you did give the number of cases that had been approved in the month of March?

Mr. MUNROE. That was for the whole country, not for the New York district. As I understand it, your questions are all for the New York district.

Mr. ROBSION. Yes. How many cases for the whole country were approved in the month of March?

Mr. MUNROE. I can not seem to find that figure. I remember that I gave it.

Mr. ROBSION. Four thousand and something.

Mr. MUNROE. It was something over 4,000.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you have the figures for the month of February, 1920?

Mr. MUNROE. I haven't it here; no, sir; I can get that for you. Are you referring now to the whole country or just to New York?

Mr. ROBSION. The whole country.

Mr. MUNROE. I will get those figures for you, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Who selected Mr. Farwell?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not know, sir. Do you mean originally? He came from the Boston office.

Mr. ROBSION. Your board approved him.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes. I presume he was recommended by the gentleman who was chief at that time. I do not remember when his appointment was made.

Mr. HOLDER. Dr. Prosser.

Mr. ROBSION. I noticed that Mr. Noyes who testified here, and you say that he is all right, in speaking of Mr. Farwell said, in recent testimony before this committee:

A sort of paralysis seemed to hit the office at this time.

That is when Mr. Farwell came. How would you explain that statement?

Mr. MUNROE. I explain it that in my opinion Mr. Noyes is mistaken.

Mr. ROBSION. If I have understood your figures, there are 32,470 ex-service men who have registered for vocational training with whom your board has not yet come in contact; is that true?

Mr. MUNROE. I should have to make the subtraction. [After a pause.] Yes, sir; it is about that figure.

Mr. ROBSION. You have stated that there have been 174,196 contacts with ex-service men of those who have registered and of those 141,953 have been surveyed, and, of course, that leaves 32,243 that have not been surveyed. What do you do when you survey them, what is it?

Mr. MUNROE. There are all kinds of ways of surveying a man.

Mr. ROBSION. What do you mean when you say that a man has been surveyed?

Mr. MUNROE. I mean one of our agents has seen him and talked with him and looked into his case.

Mr. ROBSION. Why should not those other 32,000 have been surveyed. Your boards have been in contact with them?

Mr. MUNROE. I would rather that Mr. Lamkin would answer that question. It is an administrative question.

Mr. ROBSION. That is a large number, is it not, to have contact with and no survey made?

Mr. MUNROE. I think you were not present this morning when I stated these were made up very largely of the names brought into us from all sources, the Red Cross, local agencies of one sort and another, and in my opinion, and I am very confident in expressing this opinion, the great majority of those men are negligible cases that would not come under the law at all.

Mr. ROBSION. If your board, if a representative of your board had not made a survey of them, you can not tell what their condition is.

Mr. MUNROE. From every standpoint they have been communicated with.

Mr. ROBSION. But you have had contact. When you have contact and no survey made, that is the trouble with the board, is it not, and representatives of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Contact simply means that we have had the name given to us from some source, usually from the local Red Cross or something of that sort.

Mr. ROBSION. But my question is that, so far as you are concerned, Mr. Munroe, you do not know why the 32,000 have not been surveyed?

Mr. MUNROE. Simply because they have not responded to communications sent to them to get at that.

Mr. ROBSION. You do not know that they have had communications, do you?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; everybody on our list has had a communication.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Of course, you do not speak of your own personal knowledge, do you?

Mr. MUNROE. I know that is the practice of the office.

Mr. ROBSION. You have given directions to do that, but how far it has been done you do not know?

Mr. MUNROE. I have every confidence it has been done as directed.

Mr. ROBSION. You feel that the central office here and the New York office and all of the representatives are doing their duty substantially, do you not?

Mr. MUNROE. I do.

Mr. ROBSION. You feel that way?

Mr. MUNROE. I do.

Mr. ROBSION. You are just testifying to and going upon that general assumption?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And must do that, of course. I was very much interested in your statement that our own country is doing more for our disabled soldiers than any other government. Did I understand you to say that England, the Parliament of England, had made no appropriation of money for the training of soldiers as directed through the government.

Mr. MUNROE. You misunderstood me. I said it was being largely carried on through private enterprise as most things are in England along that way.

Mr. ROBSION. Can you give us approximately the amount of money that the English Government has appropriated?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not offhand. I could get it for you.

Mr. ROBSION. I wish that would be furnished.

Mr. MUNROE. Will you make a note of that, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. ROBSION. Can you give us the amount that the French Government has appropriated?

Mr. MUNROE. If the figures are available; I am not sure that they are.

Mr. ROBSION. And the Italian Government?

Mr. MUNROE. I make this promise on the supposition that they are available. I am not certain that they are.

Mr. ROBSION. I notice a recent dispatch from the Canadian Government that claims to be official, in which it appears that they have outstripped our country in the matter of vocational training. I will read it.

OTTAWA, April 10, 1920.

Canada has graduated 13,030 disabled soldiers from its industrial retraining school, it was officially announced to-day. More than 43,000 ex-service men are now taking training courses.

If that is official, and if it is true, Canada has greatly outstripped us, has she not?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course I do not know about those particular figures, but I am pretty certain that this 43,000 includes the nondisabled boys who enlisted at 18 and younger, who are being educated under this commission, although they may not be disabled. As to the number of disabled men, the figures are a little over 30,000 that are in training.

Mr. ROBSION. But they are doing more for ex-service men than we are, if that is official.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. The problem of training nondisabled boys in the ordinary schools is quite a different problem from that of training the disabled men.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, can you give the committee what sum of money that Canada has appropriated for this purpose?

Mr. MUNROE. As I recollect it, the first appropriation was $50,000,000 and they have asked—I do not know whether it has yet been appropriated—for another $50,000,000.

Mr. ROBSION. So far as you know, they have only appropriated $50,000,000?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not know whether the second appropriation has been made or not.

Mr. ROBSION. When was that first appropriation made?

Mr. MUNROE. The Commission of Soldiers' Civil Reestablishment was appointed in July of 1915.

Mr. ROBSION. When was this additional $50,000,000 asked?

Mr. MUNROE. I saw reference to it some months ago, but I do not remember the exact date. I believe that the actual appropriation—although the commission was established in July, 1915—was not made until during the subsequent year.

Mr. ROBSION. What sum did the Canadian Government pay to the soldiers while taking the training?

Mr. MUNROE. That I should have to look up; I do not remember.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you remember whether it is more or less than we paid?

Mr. MUNROE. Less, I think.

Mr. ROBSION. When was this $2,000,000 appropriated that you spoke of, by our Congress?

Mr. MUNROE. In connection with the act of June, 1918.

Mr. ROBSION. 1918 or 1917?

Mr. MUNROE. Nineteen hundred and eighteen.

Mr. ROBSION. Was that the first appropriation for the retraining of our disabled soldiers?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Did your board ask for more than $2,000,000?

Mr. MUNROE. I think not. I think that that was the figure we asked.

Mr. ROBSION. Congress gave you just what you asked for?

Mr. MUNROE. I have no fault to find with that but only with the budgeting of it. We strenuously objected at that time to the budgeting because we had no data on which to go.

Mr. ROBSION. And that was the act that you complain of that tied your board up with the War Risk?

Mr. MUNROE. I am not complaining of the act, I am complaining of the attitude of the War Risk Insurance Bureau which refused to interpret it in a liberal way. The act itself was all right.

Mr. ROBSION. The Bureau of War Risk was undertaking to administer the law different from your board? When was it that you asked Congress to amend that act?

Mr. MUNROE. I think it was December 9, 1918.

Mr. ROBSION. Was it amended?

Mr. MUNROE. It was amended the latter part of February; that is, by permitting the coalescing of the funds.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Yes. Was there any additional fund appropriated in 1919, or before July, 1919?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; there was $77,000 given, as was permitted under the act, by the American Red Cross and the National Catholic War Council. I think those were the two bodies.

Mr. ROBSION. When did you ask Congress to divorce you from the War Risk?

Mr. MUNROE. In the latter part of April, I think, 1919.

Mr. ROBSION. There was no session of Congress then, was there?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; I think Congress was in session at that time. I think the new Congress had come in in April.

Mr. ROBSION. The new Congress was called into session May 19, 1919.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; I am mistaken. It was in May and not in April.

Mr. ROBSION. So it was the new Congress, the Sixty-sixth Congress, that you appealed to for relief, and got relief.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION. What appropriation did you ask for from the Sixty-sixth Congress at the first session?

Mr. MUNROE. $4,000,000.

Mr. ROBSION. $4,000,000?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. How much did the Sixty-sixth Congress give you at its first session?

Mr. TOWNER. Finally.

Mr. ROBSION. Yes; finally.

Mr. MUNROE. $14,000,000.

Mr. ROBSION. So that they gave your board $10,000,000 more than you asked for?

Mr. MUNROE. But meanwhile they passed the amendment to section 2, and that threw on us the whole responsibility for the maintenance of the men.

Mr. ROBSION. But they gave you $10,000,000 more than you asked?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; but, of course, when we asked for $4,000,000 we did not know that there would be the added responsibility under the amendment to section 2.

Mr. ROBSION. How much has your board expended for tuition?

Mr. MUNROE. I would have to get those figures. I do not carry them in my head.

Mr. ROBSION. You had it here.

Mr. MUNROE. I think not.

Mr. ROBSION. You were telling about it in comparing it with Mr. Littledale's charges.

Mr. MUNROE. Oh, yes; that is in the tables. I had forgotten [after a pause]. You mean the total expenditures or for one month?

Mr. ROBSION. No; the total expenditure.

Mr. MUNROE. Up to March 31, 1920, the total expenditure for tuition was what you asked me?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. For tuition the figure was $956,744.89.

Mr. ROBSION. What has been expended altogether?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. For the soldiers?

Mr. ROBSION. Up to March 31, 1920, for the training of soldiers, leaving out the tuition?

Mr. MUNROE. Including the tuition, the total for the soldiers was $15,689,677.77. Subtracting the tuition from that leaves it about $14,500,000 in round figures.

Mr. ROBSION. How much money has been appropriated altogether for this work?

Mr. MUNROE. Up to this time?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. What is that figure? $21,000,000. I have a poor head for figures.

Mr. ROBSION. How much do you still have to your credit? Of the appropriations, how much is still available?

Mr. MUNROE. That I should like to look up. I do not know what the figure is to-day.

Mr. ROBSION. Approximately?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin says on the 1st of April, approximately $10,000,000.

Mr. ROBSION. So that there can be no claim made of any shortage of funds, can there?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. After you had expended all along as you have, you now have something like, on the first of the month, something like $10,000,000 of appropriations still available.

Mr. MUNROE. But, of course, our expenditures are running now at the rate of between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000 a month.

Mr. ROBSION. What would you like for Congress to do is to give your board the authority to fix the salaries?

Mr. MUNROE. I did not get the first part of your question?

Mr. ROBSION. What you would like for Congress to give your board is authority to fix the salaries of all the men in the employ of the Federal Vocational Board?

Mr. MUNROE. To restore the act into its original shape in which it was without any salary limitations.

Mr. ROBSION. Then your idea there was to ask Congress to build more hospitals?

Mr. MUNROE. It is the Bureau of Public Health Service that is asking for the hospitals and we propose and are already carrying out a plan for cooperative work in those hospitals in which we give under medical advice so much training as it is proper for a man to have in his condition of health.

Mr. ROBSION. Don't you think that Judge Towner's suggestion is a fine one that we have a good many cantonments in the country not in use and whose buildings would be available for purposes like that?

Mr. MUNROE. As I said this morning, I have no first-hand knowledge of that subject and I would not venture to give an opinion.

Mr. ROBSION. What do you say about the Philadelphia office?

Mr. MUNROE. In what way?

Mr. ROBSION. Is it in a condition as described by Mr. Reid, who was a witness here?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir. I visited the Philadelphia office two or three weeks ago and it seemed to me in remarkably good condition.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Did you go into the files and records as Mr. Reid says he went into them and found the conditions there?

Mr. MUNROE. I did not pull out the files, but I talked with the responsible people in the office.

Mr. ROBSION. They all gave it a good name?

Mr. MUNROE. A man with business experience can judge from talking with people whether they are doing their work or not.

Mr. ROBSION. How can you tell from that whether or not the soldiers cases were being passed upon?

Mr. MUNROE. Because I asked questions about it and found that they were being dealt with.

Mr. ROBSION. If conditions were what they were described in New York and Philadelphia, the files were put in and handled so that the last would be first and the first would be last in handling cases in passing upon them.

Mr. MUNROE. I think that was a mistake in the testimony.

Mr. ROBSION. I notice you state that you had sent out squads of doctors and others. When did the first squad go out?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin can give you the date. I can not. Do you mean in New York?

Mr. ROBSION. Anywhere?

Mr. MUNROE. When did that New York squad, the first one go out?

Mr. LAMKIN. Some time in February, I think.

Mr. ROBSION. Were any squads going out before March, 1920?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin just said the first one went out in February.

Mr. ROBSION. Where?

Mr. MUNROE. These details can be answered much better by Mr. Lamkin. They are administrative details which I do not carry in my mind.

Mr. ROBSION. I only assumed it on the ground that you stated that the squads were sent out and I thought that you knew something about them.

Mr. MUNROE. I knew in a general way but could not possibly give the dates when they went out.

Mr. ROBSION. Was that under an order of the board or by Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. MUNROE. It was one of Mr. Lamkin's administrative acts.

Mr. ROBSION. That was not an order of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Things of that sort do not require an order from the board.

Mr. ROBSION. Can you tell us the percentage of the cases that have been passed upon by the Atlanta office?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not without looking up the figures.

Mr. ROBSION. There are 14 districts, are there not?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. I wish that you would have Mr. Lamkin furnish in his testimony the percentage or the number of cases that have been passed upon and those that have not been passed upon at each district office in the United States up to April 15, 1920?

Mr. MUNROE. Have you made a note of that, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Have you any figures there to show how many of this 58,099 have been approved for section 2 training?

Mr. MUNROE. Fifty-eight thousand in section 2. For section 3, there have been 36,000 approved.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, there are 25,000 of these 58,000 that have been approved for section 2 training that have not been put into training?

Mr. MUNROE. That have not yet accepted training. We can not force the men to take it, of course.

Mr. ROBSION. What is your impression as to whether or not they will take it?

Mr. MUNROE. As I think I stated this morning, at the outside, possibly 50 per cent of them would. That is a high figure but I hope that that number will take it.

Mr. ROBSION. How many do you claim will be subject to section 2 training?

Mr. MUNROE. Of what we have already?

Mr. ROBSION. Altogether.

Mr. MUNROE. No one can tell that because we do not know about the men who are still in hospitals and about these tuberculosis cases and about the mental cases. It is absolutely impossible.

Mr. ROBSION. How many do you think you still have to pass upon and approve?

Mr. MUNROE. Of the men on our rolls by this time we must have determined the eligibility and assigned training to close to 90 per cent. But, of course, men are continually coming out, being discharged from the hospitals.

Mr. ROBSION. You mean that there are just 10 per cent to pass on?

Mr. MUNROE. Of those on our list; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Then you can tell me, can you not, how many will be subject to section 2 training up to the present?

Mr. MUNROE. Of those now on the roll?

Mr. ROBSION. Of the 206,666 ex-service men who have registered and would be entitled to section 2 training, in your judgment?

Mr. MUNROE. It will be purely a guess. I should guess that the total of 70,000, and subtracting 58,000 from that, leaves it at the outside 12,000. That is an outside figure.

Mr. ROBSION. That are yet to be approved?

Mr. MUNROE. That will accept training.

Mr. ROBSION. That are yet to be approved, whose cases must yet be passed upon for section 2.

Mr. MUNROE. I think we are talking at cross purposes. I stated a little while ago that of the cases on our lists, practically 90 per cent have been passed on at this time. That leaves 10 per cent still to be acted on.

Mr. ROBSION. But if I have understood your evidence, it is that there will be approved for section 2 training, 58,099?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And if I further understood, you stated that in your judgment there would be 70,000 altogether of this 206,666 that would be entitled to section 2 training and that would leave 12,000 who in your opinion would be entitled to section 2 training, whose cases have not yet been approved. Are we both clear on that?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. I think we are still talking at cross purposes because we have approved section 2 training for 58,000 men.

Mr. ROBSION. Before you go any further, let me interrupt you. In your opinion, how many will there be who will be entitled to section 2 training of this 206,666?

Mr. MUNROE. I will have to do some addition here. There remain about 45,000 cases—that is, at the time of these figures—still to be passed on. The vast majority of those, I believe, are minor disabilities and consequently the proportion will be very small of men eligible for section 2 of that 45,000.

Mr. ROBSION. But you have not yet given the committee and myself your opinion as to how many there will be of section 2 training of that 206,666?

Mr. MUNROE. It all depends on the proportion of the 45,000.

Mr. ROBSION. I know you can not tell exactly.

Mr. MUNROE. If you take 10 per cent, that is 4,500, and added to 58,000, it gives you 62,500. If you take 20 per cent, that is 9,000, and added to 58,000, it makes 67,000. It is all guess, absolutely.

Mr. ROBSION. But you say that you will have all those cases practically passed on that are now in by the 1st of July cleaned up?

Mr. MUNROE. We will have them; yes.

Mr. ROBSION. Of course, you will ask Congress to appropriate money?

Mr. MUNROE. We have asked that for the next year.

Mr. ROBSION. If you have asked it, then, of course, you must have some figures from which you make your request?

Mr. MUNROE. I have not those figures. It is a public document in which we made the estimates.

Mr. ROBSION. How much do you estimate it will cost to train each soldier; I mean as an average?

Mr. MUNROE. It averages about $1,500.

Mr. HOLDER. On the $80 basis?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; but, of course, if the Darrow bill passes, raising it to $100, that will increase the cost for each soldier by $20 a month.

Mr. ROBSION. Did you go before the committee last year in May or June, when you asked to have a separation of these two departments—the Vocational Board and the War Risk—and ask for an appropriation?

Mr. MUNROE. At the time that we asked for the separation?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. I should have to refresh my memory on the details of that.

Mr. ROBSION. Did you testify last year before the Appropriations Committee, of which Mr. Good is chairman?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Who all appeared there before that committee of your board that you know?

Mr. MUNROE. Who of our organization appeared?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. I should have to look up the record to find out. I do not remember. I know I testified. I have forgotten who else did.

Mr. ROBSION. Did Mr. Good, the chairman, appear to be sympathetic with your desires and purposes?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Which hearing do you mean?

Mr. ROBSION. Before the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. MUNROE. I have appeared before the Appropriations Committee several times. I do not know which one you mean.

Mr. ROBSION. Last year in May or June before you had the change in the law and before you got the $14,000,000?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Good has always been very courteous.

Mr. ROBSION. In what way did your board fail in presenting your case to cause the chairman of the Appropriations Committee on the floor of the House to use this language in the Congressional Record of the date of July, 1919, page 2787:

There never was a body of men anywhere entrusted with a great work who seem to know as little about the subject and had as small a vision of the great work with which they were entrusted as the body to whom we had entrusted the rehabilitation of those boys who have been so unfortunate as to be wounded in this great war.

Mr. MUNROE. You would have to ask Mr. Good the basis of those remarks. I could not stand sponsor for them.

Mr. ROBSION. Was there any ground for the chairman of the Appropriations Committee after hearing you and other members of your board, in making a charge like that on the floor of the House?

Mr. MUNROE. You would have to ask Mr. Good.

Mr. VESTAL. I object to that question. That is certainly not a pertinent question to this investigation as to what Mr. Good might have said in the Record. I want to see a full investigation, but taking what somebody else has said about these people certainly is not a proper question to ask this witness.

Mr. TOWNER. I think perhaps the question is a little out of order.

Mr. ROBSION. There was some complaint about the official organ of the American Legion throwing obstacles in your way in this training in carrying on the work. How did it do that?

Mr. MUNROE. I simply pointed out the anomalous situation of the American Legion officers asking us to cooperate with them and offering to cooperate with us and establishing with us the most cordial relations so that there was placed on my desk the other day a manual to be used by the officers of the American Legion in helping us along with our work and persuading the men assigned training to take the training which, of course, is one of their chief ways in which they can help us. I pointed out the anomalous situation of the officers working with us in that way and yet the paper which bears the name of the Legion, to use a slang phrase, knocking us in every way.

Mr. ROBSION. The Legion itself, the head of the Legion, has been criticising the delay of your board? Is that not so?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. D'Olier has always been very friendly.

Mr. ROBSION. Did not the head of the Legion, as representative of the Legion, appear before our committee and point out these delays as inexcusable delays?

Mr. MUNROE. I was not present; I do not know, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. You spoke about receiving some contributions from certain sources. How much was that?

Mr. MUNROE. It was $77,000. I can not tell you just how it was divided but the two givers, as I remember it, were the American Red Cross and the National Catholic War Council. The two gifts totaled $77,000 and there was $25 from some organization whose name I do not remember.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. What disposition was made of that?

Mr. MUNROE. It was added to the fund and utilized during the winter of 1918–19 to some extent in the payment of employees.

Mr. ROBSION. I notice a statement that was issued by your board where you state that $66,000 of it was used for salaries. Was it necessary to do that, to use that fund for the purpose?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; at that time, because of the budgeting. We had used up all of the funds that we could untilize for salaries under that budgeting.

Mr. ROBSION. Was the money given with the idea that it was to be used for salaries?

Mr. MUNROE. Used for any purpose that we needed it. There was no restriction on it at all. Of course, we could not have received it with any restrictions because the law does not permit it.

Mr. ROBSION. Haven't you a copy in your office of the so-called hard-boiled order?

Mr. MUNROE. I have never seen any except what was published in the New York Evening Post.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you not understand that there is such an order, whether it was ever sent out or not, in the files of the department?

Mr. MUNROE. There was no such order ever sent out or ever prepared.

Mr. ROBSION. There was no such order in the files?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Haven't you heard it discussed in your department and in the board?

Mr. MUNROE. We asked for a report from the chief and I think he will be glad to testify in that matter.

Mr. ROBSION. You got information that there was such an order, did you not?

Mr. MUNROE. There was no such order there and I have never seen such an order.

Mr. ROBSION. It was prepared, if not signed?

Mr. MUNROE. There was no order prepared.

Mr. ROBSION. What is that gentleman's name in New York?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Brigham.

Mr. ROBSION. One of the witnesses here testified that Mr. Brigham in New York, who was in the New York office as representative of the board was talking and Mr. Brigham claimed that he was responsible for it.

Mr. MUNROE. A little group of them drew up a memorandum which did not relate to the soldiers in any way. It was a memorendum to be used, according to the testimony given to us by Mr. Brigham, for their relations with the other officials at the district offices. It had no bearing on the soldiers whatever.

Mr. ROBSION. Where was that prepared?

Mr. MUNROE. If you wish me to read the report from Mr. Lamkin, I will do so.

This is addressed to me by Mr. Lamkin. It reads as follows:

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION,
DIVISION OF REHABILITATION FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS, SAILORS, AND MARINES,
Washington, D. C., March 6, 1920.

Mr. JAMES P. MUNROE,
Vice Chairman, Federal Board for Vocational Education,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MUNROE: I am submitting herewith a statement from Mr. Carl C. Brigham concerning the Helpful Hints to Central Office Case Board Representatives, about which you inquire. As I remember the incident the facts are as stated by him. The material was prepared, as I recollect, at a time when I was temporarily absent from the office, and lay on my desk for several days before I saw it.

It was in no sense an order or instruction. There are five ways used for communication in the central office, and to central office representatives in the field.

1. Through the general regulations of the board, referred to as miscellaneous 150 revised.
2. Through a series of instruction letters numbered serially.
3. Through a series of information letters, also numbered serially.
4. Through memorandums usually used only in central office.
5. Through notes always used only in central office, and which are not of as lasting interest as the memorandums.

The first three of the above have the force of orders, and are signed by the chief of the Division of Rehabilitation. The last two are used as recommendations on which orders or instructions are later issued. The material above referred to was in none of these classes.

I did not know until Mr. Brigham's statement, attached hereto, was handed to me that the material prepared by him in October was intended to be sent out of the office, or was sent out by anyone. It certainly did not go out to my knowledge in any official letters of the board. Mr. Carl Becker, one of our field representatives wrote me from Oklahoma City on November 14, inclosing what purported to be an original copy of the statement.

When I got his letter, I asked Mr. Hamilton, the supervisor of training, under whose general direction Mr. Becker was working, if he sent a copy of the material to Mr. Becker. He told me that either Mr. Becker got an original copy before it had been shown to me, or that such copy had been sent him by mistake. I told Mr. Hamilton that no such material should be sent out by anyone connected with this office, and promptly wrote Mr. Becker under date of November 19. The following paragraphs of that letter to Mr. Becker are quoted:

"I am glad to have the Helpful Hints to Central Office Case Board Representatives, which you sent me. As written, this has not been sent out by central office. This draft was submitted to the chief and was not approved. I have taken the matter up with Mr. Hamilton and find that the original draft went to you without authority. There is no reason for central office to be 'hard boiled' nor for any man representing central office to be 'hard boiled.' Men who are sent out from central office are expected to give the soldiers the benefit of the doubt, as the central office case board is expected to give them the benefit of the doubt. The recommendations of the district medical officer must be taken regarding the nature of a man's disability. It will not be overruled by central office except in rare cases or where the soldier receives the benefit. Central office case board representatives are expected to see that all the information necessary from a legal standpoint is in the case.

"With that exception, they are not expected to 'split hairs' in approving or disapproving a man's case."

The language of the statement shows it was never intended for an order, or instruction, or to be sent out. The fact that it was not signed by anyone also shows it was not so intended.

In order to determine as rapidly as possible whether or not men whose names were in our files, were entitled to vocational training, and to notify them, and to prevent the delay which resulted from sending all files and papers to Washington, we have sent out to various district offices: First, individual representatives or so-called central office case board representatives, and later, groups of men called eligibility squads.

These men were to pass on the legal evidence in the files, and so the interviewing of the disabled men, and the securing of legal evidence naturally had to be left to the men in the district offices. The representatives sent out from this office can not interview disabled men, and at the same time pass on a large number of cases. Every instruction and order has been to give the disabled soldier the benefit of the doubt, and every effort has been made to keep the men sent out from central office at the work which I believed would expedite action, and which could only be expedited by their time not being taken up by conversation or "visiting" with members of the district staffs. In other words, I believed the efficiency of the organization could be promoted by insisting that these central office representatives who were to maintain uniform standards throughout the country, fair to the disabled man, and fair to the Government, giving the disabled man the benefit of the doubt, confine themselves to the work which they were sent out to do. An attempt to increase the efficiency of a Government employee should not be the subject of severe criticism.

Digitized by Google

The figures for September 15, and for March 1, in this connection may be of interest:

	Sept. 15	Mar. 1.
Number approved for training under section 2	17,000	55,000
Number approved for section 3 training	500	22,000
Number deemed ineligible in training on the evidence in the files	15,000	48,000
Total definite decisions rendered	32,500	125,000

It should be remembered that a large per cent of the men serving on central office case board were ex-service men. Mr. Brigham himself is an ex-service man, having in addition, a very high civil-service rating. The present central office case board which acts on appeals from the decisions adverse to claims, is composed of eight men, one of whom, a veteran of the Spanish-American War, was physically incapacitated for service in the late war, one was in the Engineer Corps, and the other six saw overseas service as line officers.

As to my attitude toward the disabled men, and as to instructions and orders written, or which I have sent out, it has always been to be fair to the men and to the Government, giving the disabled man the benefit of the doubt. I should be glad to see the provisions of the present rehabilitation law liberalized to such an extent that every man who suffered any disability could have the training he needed, if he wanted it, but such is not the provision of the present law.

It may be of some value in determining my attitude toward the disabled man to know that so far as I can remember, while I was in charge of the office at St. Louis, or temporarily in charge at Philadelphia, or New York, or since I have been here as chief of this division, I have never declined to personally see any disabled man who asked to see me personally, nor have I declined to see anyone else who asked to see me, either an employee or not an employee, whatever his business. Nor have I kept any individual waiting any length of time, but frequently I have had to refer them to others for action where their matters would consume any length of time.

As my resignation was placed in your hands shortly after I became chief of the division, to become effective at your pleasure, so that you would not feel bound to retain me in my present position because I am under the civil service, and was not subject to removal except after charges are filed, and also, as you have, so far, not accepted it, and as you have approved the regulations which have gone out in Miscellaneous 150, and in the instruction and information series, all of which are subject to review, I am sure that the statement which I have expressed regarding my attitude toward the disabled soldier is approved by all the members of the board.

Very truly, yours,

UEL W. LAMKIN,
Chief, Division of Rehabilitation.

Mr. ROBSION. How long is it? On that one point, I just wanted to know who wrote that order if it was written?

Mr. MUNROE. You will notice that he says that he transmits the report made by Mr. Brigham.

Mr. ROBSION. You need not read that all. But did he write it according to the report. Who prepared that so-called hard boiled order in the New York office or wherever it was?

Mr. MUNROE. There was no order prepared. There never was an order of any kind.

Mr. ROBSION. Would you want to put that report in the record?

at the hospital instead of field contact with each man would save the Government almost $6,000,000.

To make this saving the board must, for a short period of about six months, increase the number of its field workers under Civil Service regulations employed as vocational advisers in hospitals, and to do this the unexpended balances in the appropriations for rent, equipment, and tuition should be made available.

3. The amendment to the bill providing that unexpended balances in the appropriation for rent, equipment, and tuition be used for expenditures incurred in the investigation necessary to determine the eligibility of men for training and for expenditures necessary to the proper placement of men in employment is urged in order that there may be no question as to the duty and authority of the board to make expenditures for these purposes. Unless they are made some men will lack intelligent treatment, proper care, and the prompt action necessary to save the handicapped man from humiliation, hardship, or failure in the effort of the Government to rehabilitate him vocationally.

[S. 5038.]

AN ACT Extending the use of the special fund for vocational education provided by section seven of the vocational rehabilitation act, approved June twenty-seventh, nineteen hundred and eighteen, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the special fund for vocational education, authorized by section seven of the vocational rehabilitation act, approved June twenty-seventh, nineteen hundred and eighteen, together with the items of appropriation made by said act, are hereby made available, in addition to the purposes therein prescribed, for such other expenses as in the discretion of the board is deemed necessary and proper for the payment of necessary travel, lodging, subsistence, and other expenses of disabled men while under investigation by the board to determine their eligibility for training under the act, and the purchase of supplies, equipment, and clothing for disabled men when ready to enter employment, and the traveling expenses of such men to place of employment and for supplementing any or all of the other items of appropriation made by said act.

Approved February 16, 1919.

JUNE 23, 1919.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I find on page 39 of H. R. 6176 (Union Calendar No. 15) that the sundry civil bill makes very serious limitations in connection with the appropriation to be used by the Federal Board for Vocational Education, for the rehabilitation of soldiers and sailors. These limitations would result in our losing probably half our staff at this most critical time, when our work is at its most urgent point.

May we have the privilege of appearing before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, or before yourself personally, to explain the situation and to urge a revision of the terms of the appropriation? Kindly make this appointment at your earliest convenience, and greatly oblige.

Yours, very sincerely,

JAMES P. MUNROE, Vice Chairman.

JUNE 23, 1919.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As requested over the telephone, I am addressing, for your earnest consideration and that of your committee, the following memorandum relative to the appropriation for vocational rehabilitation of disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines found on page 39 of Union Calendar No. 15, H. R. 6176, Report No. 48. While, as far as we can foresee, the appropriation of $4,000,000 therein made will not be sufficient, we accept this amount in the belief that it will carry the work well into the next calendar year, when, if necessary, we can again approach Congress with full confidence that they will not hesitate to provide all that is necessary for the rehabilitation of men who have been injured in the service of their country.

We desire to call to the attention of your committee, however, the fact that the limitations placed by the proviso in the last seven lines of this appropriation will result in a complete disorganization of the work of this board at a moment when it is approaching its highest load; when the Congress is about to place upon us, through the proposed amendment to section 2 of the vocational rehabilitation act, greatly enlarged responsibilities; and at a time when every minute's delay will greatly aggravate the unrest, and even bitterness, of disabled boys all over the country whose rehabilitation has already, through circumstances over which the Federal Board for Vocational Education has no control, been exasperatingly delayed.

Up to the 1st day of June, the district offices of the board had registered a total of 112,281 disabled men, had established personal contact with 88,300 of them; medical surveys had been made of 25,308 of these men; vocational surveys of 73,368. The number of additional undischerged men reported in Army and Navy hospitals in this country on the 1st day of June was approximately 59,000. This does not count the number in France nor the number not yet reached in the field in this country. Thirteen thousand and fifty-one men had been recommended for training by the district case boards and 7,500 men had been assisted in one way or another in the securing of employment. At the present time approximately 4,200 men are in training; about 6,000 cases are ready to be placed in training as soon as legislation before Congress, which passed the Senate unanimously last week, has become law.

So far as we can now foresee, the above figures represent less than half of the task of getting at every disabled soldier, sailor, and marine wounded or diseased in the service of the Government and providing either for his direct placement or for his training and placement. But the essential element in the remaining task is speed, and speed can be assured only by utilizing to the fullest limit, the services of men already familiar with the work, and trained to carry it forward effectively. Such a force we have succeeded in building up by taking men from permanent positions in which they were earning good salaries, and inducing them to take up this temporary service. This involved, in most cases, the leaving of their homes and the added costs and difficulties which that involves. Nevertheless, many of these men have been secured at salaries no greater than they were receiving in their permanent positions and of the others the increased salary, averaging not more than $300 a year, does not begin to cover the increased expenses under which these men find themselves. The work involved in dealing wisely and efficiently with disabled soldiers requires men of experience, of standing in the community, of ability to handle difficult situations, and of power to meet out in the field in our 14 district offices and our 7 subdistrict offices every sort of administrative problem. Cheap men can not do this work and were they to undertake it, disastrous results reflecting seriously upon the efficiency and good faith of the Federal Government in carrying out this important piece of work would follow.

Were this limiation in regard to the appropriation to stand, the board would lose nearly 200 members of its staff—men of ability and tried experience, and worse than that, would lose its 14 district officers who, even were their salaries not cut down would refuse to attempt to carry on the work in the States with the inefficient and untried men who would have to be brought in to take the place of those resigning as the result of this congressional action. Ninety-two members of the staff would be affected by the provision limiting the number to be employed in excess of $3,000 to 20, and 193 would be affected by the provision limiting the number to be employed between $2,500 and $3,000 to 30, and these men so affected are the framework of our organization, the very bone and sinew of the vocational rehabilitation Service. With these gone, the work would be in chaos for six months, disabled boys to the number of tens of thousands would be left uncared for, and the results would be in every way disastrous.

Under this proposed limitation it would be impossible to retain these essential men, because all of them have permanent positions at higher salaries than those permitted under this limitation would provide, and it would be out of reason to expect such men to keep a temporary position at a lower compensation than they could elsewhere get. Moreover, their places can not be filled because, in the first place, no untried man can fill the place of one who has had months of experience in a difficult work of this kind, and in the second place, because competent men can not be induced to take up this temporary, high-grade work at the salaries imposed by the suggested limitation.

In view of the above, it is respectfully suggested that in the section referring to vocational rehabilitation the words in the last seven lines following the word "Provided" be stricken out, and that the following words be substituted: "That not more than one person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation in excess of $5,000 per annum, and that not more than three persons shall be employed at rates of compensation in excess of $4,000 each per annum."

It seems to us that this simple change would safeguard, as they should be protected, the Federal funds, without throwing into hopeless chaos the work for disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines which it is clear that the Congress and the people of the United States desire to be promptly and efficiently performed.

Very respectfully, yours,

JAMES P. MUNROE, Vice Chairman.

EXHIBIT T.

POSSIBLE AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATION.

SEPTEMBER 20, 1918.

As arranged at staff conference held on Monday evening, September 16, Messrs Munroe and Kidner saw Mr. Love, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, on September 17, and discussed very generally some of the difficulties being experienced because of the delay in discovering a man's compensation status. Mr. Love expressed himself as willing to join in asking for an amendment to the act, but suggested the possibility of solving the present difficulties by adjustments of procedure. He asked for a further conference in which some officials of the War Risk Insurance Bureau would participate.

On September 19 Mr. Love notified Mr. Munroe that he was called out of town, but wished us to discuss possible schemes with Mr. Houlihan. Messrs. Munroe, Kidner, and Maddrill conferred with Mr. Houlihan and Col. Banks on the following points:

1. Acceptance by War Risk Insurance Bureau of the findings of the last medical board, as recorded in the surgeon's certificate of discharge as a basis for award of compensation.

Mr. Houlihan stated that the bureau was quite willing to use this certificate and would require no further medical examination, but the bureau had not been able to obtain this certificate, or a copy of it. On being informed that the vocational advisors of the board were given access to this certificate and allowed to make a copy of it for our confidential use, Mr. Houlihan suggested that our advisors make an additional copy and forward to the War Risk Insurance Bureau, together with the man's application for compensation.

It was agreed that this would expedite matters considerably, but that it was a duty which should be carried out by the hospital authorities, rather than by the Federal board. Also, it would not be of any avail in the case of naval hospitals, from which men are discharged immediately after a medical survey board has decided that no further treatment is indicated. Also, in the case of men in hospitals in the far West, some considerable time must elapse before the decision of the bureau could be received, even if there were no complications in the case.

2. The following alternative plans involving changes in legislation was discussed at length, and it was agreed that it would prevent any hiatus between the discharge of a man and the commencement of his training course, except that in some cases a man may desire a short leave to visit his friends immediately after his discharge:

(a) The Federal board to decide upon the evidence of the surgeon's certificate of discharge, and by other examinations if it deemed necessary, whether or not a man needed reeducation; that is, was unable to follow his former occupation efficiently. If the Federal board decided that a man was entitled to reeducation on this ground, the man's discharge would be carried out as soon as the Federal board notified the hospital authorities.

(b) The Federal board would establish a scale of pay and allowances for the man and his dependents, if any, and he would be discharged to the Federal board which would place him on its pay list from the date of his discharge, or at the date of commencing his course.

NOTE.—The allotments to a man's dependents payable by the Army paymaster and his own pay cease on a man's discharge.

(c) The War Risk Insurance Bureau would cease its payments to the man and to his dependents at the date of his discharge. It would consider the case upon the evidence of the surgeon's certificate of discharge and make its award of compensation in due course. The bureau would either (1) notify the Federal board of its award and the

Digitized by Google

Federal board would reduce its payments to the amount of monthly compensation awarded the man, or (2) the board would continue the payments in full and be reimbursed by the War Risk Insurance Bureau to the amount payable under its award.

It is possible that under this plan a few men may be adjudged as requiring vocational reeducation who would be found not to be entitled to compensation; but not in large numbers. The surgeon's certificate of discharge gives not only the cause and extent (in fractions) of the disability, but also states whether or not it was incurred "in line of duty," which are the basic facts on which both the Federal board and the bureau would make their decisions.

EXTRACTS FROM SOLDIERS' LETTERS RECEIVED PRIOR TO CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATION STATING THEIR SATISFACTION WITH THE TRAINING THEY ARE RECEIVING.

From Lonnie J. Highsmith, 174 Hickory Street, Athens, Ga., February 25, 1920: "We are thankful that our Government has not left us as it did the veterans of bygone-days (not that we are better than they, for we are not so good), but that our Government has grown and developed and waxed rich and is better able to do this work now than it was after other wars. All that I ask from the Government that I volunteered to fight for, is to let me finish the course of studies that I am working on and I think I will be in a position to make the necessaries to get the wherewith to maintain life."

From Alford St. Germaine, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 23, 1919: "I think by going under hard studies and using common sense, soldiers like myself will find better living in the future, and this is my aim. Here's hoping that our fellow fighters will do likewise, and I am sure they will be contented with their studies and work as well as opportunities offered to them by our Government."

From Thomas M. Hildreth, Sacramento, Calif., May 14, 1919: "For the benefit of the boys who are not taking advantage of the training the Federal Board for Vocational Education offers, I wish to say that they are missing one of the best opportunities of their lives."

Thomas C. Brannan, Berwyn, Md., September 30, 1919: "The efforts and results of the Federal board certainly are deeply appreciated, and since Uncle Sam has been so kind and considerate of us in giving us the opportunities which we are now so fortunate to have, we mean to do our best and make a success or die in the attempt to succeed, and we know what we will have to do in order to pull through on top."

From Cecil Meyer, University Station, Gainesville, Fla., December 10, 1919: "I have been in training under the Federal board since May 28, this year, and I like it fine, and in fact this is the opportunity that I have looked for throughout life."

From E. F. Powers, San Francisco, Calif., May 26, 1919: "I take pleasure in telling you that I have completed my course in training for a marine engineer and was most certainly surprised that I could do so in so short a period. I found that by living as temperate a life as possible and utilizing every opportunity I was able to learn as much from the United States Shipping Board School as the average university graduate and able to pass an examination for third assistant engineer unlimited. I have been able to do what I thought would be impossible. The least pay for a licensed third assistant engineer is $120 a month and found. For a man that has to work technical knowledge is no good without the practical knowledge, therefore I can do better by going to work now."

From A. D. Strader, West Virginia University, November 12, 1919: "I highly value the training that has been granted me by the Government. I thank you all very much. Now the Government is paying us back and wishes us to make good. It is up to us to make good, not only for ourselves, but to help so that the Government will lead all other nations in the future as it has in the past."

From Mrs. Grace E. Terry, 2606 West Main Street, Richmond, Va., December 8, 1919: "I am thankful to say that I am being trained for millinery work, at which I think I can make a living at home and not be a dependent. Mrs. Reed, my counselor, seems to be very much interested in me, which I appreciate."

From John Henry Atherson, Salome, Ky., October 30, 1919: "Your letter received notifying me of approval of training in a course of agriculture. This is a splendid opportunity and generous offer, and I would be very foolish and ungrateful if I failed to meet it with my best efforts."

From Robert W. Cooper, Tulane Receiving School, New Orleans, La., August 7, 1919: "Inclosed I wish to say my training has been very satisfactory, my environment very agreeable, and, lastly, I will prove the good will of those connected with district No. 6, while making good in district No. 8. The academic help I have received has been and will be invaluable to my future progress, and especially with the help given me in English and arithmetic. It has shaken my head from the neck up, tending to make me realize that more than one recess of my brain has remained dormant for years."

From Raymond Lasance, 129 West Fourteenth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 23, 1919: "I desire to express my appreciation to the Federal board for the training I am receiving. By its workings I will be able to complete my education and obtain for myself in the commercial world a position to which I might never have attained before my disability."

From Ralph Schefer, 3858 Millsbrae Avenue, Hyde Park, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 23, 1919: "I took up training under the direction of the Federal Board for Vocational Education at Miller's School of Business. I am well satisfied and sure that I will be able to earn a great deal more money than I previously did before I enlisted."

From R. M. Prather, M. D., New Orleans, La.: "I want to say that, without exaggeration, I think the Federal Board for Vocational Education is doing more for the discharged soldier than is generally known to the public. I have benefited greatly, both in health and knowledge, since I started under your supervision, and I expect to return from New York about the 1st of January as a specialist in diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat."

From Lawrence Packwood, Chicago Business College, December 22, 1919: "I am preparing myself not to be a burden on the taxpayer, but to be a credit to my country and uphold its Constitution, and recognize that this country keeps its promises to its service men."

From Carl F. Minion, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 22, 1919: "I have now been in this school, Ohio Mechanics Institute, three months, and find that it is helping me greatly, and feel that after I am through school I will be in better shape, as far as earning power is concerned, than before I entered the service. It is surprising to me to see the interest every man is taking in his work."

From Thomas M. Hildreth, Sacramento, Calif., May 14, 1919: "I am attending Heald's Business College in this city. For the benefit of the boys who are not taking advantage of the training the Federal board offers, I wish to say that they are missing the best opportunity of their lives."

From John B. Gardner, Young Men's Christian Association, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 23, 1919: "I am very interested in my course, and there is no doubt that I will be able to go out in the business world and double my earning capacity after completing my course under the direction of the Federal board."

From Herbert W. Will, 1132 Park Avenue, Newport, Ky., April 23, 1919: "I want to express to you my appreciation of all that your board has done for me. I am more than satisfied with the treatment accorded me by you and the members of the district No. 7 office."

From Carl F. Minion, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 22, 1919: "It is surprising to me to see the interest every man is taking in his work. They realize it is expected of them and want to make good, and I know they will have proper support."

From Thomas F. Hendrick, captain, Baltimore, Md., October 9, 1919: " It is my belief that criticism directed toward the Federal board was largely due to the fact that the men were more anxious to get home than to enter training. I am well satisfied with my avocation, and place my stamp of approval on all actions of the Federal board that have come under my observations."

From Douglas D. Stone, 1730 La Loma Avenue, Berkeley, Calif., January 8, 1920: "I certainly appreciate the wonderful opportunity offered me through the Federal board, and the best way I can show my appreciation is by the report here made on my studies. Prof. Langille congratulated me on my work. I hope this report will be perfectly satisfactory to the board."

From W. B. Whidden, University Station, Gainesville, Fla.: "The Federal Board for Vocational Education is sending me to school at the University of Florida. I have been here one month and five days. I am learning fast. I am taking a course in agriculture. I want to do all I can to learn as much as possible so that when school is out and I get through with my studies, I can get a job. I like the school fine, and I think it is a good thing for me and am going to do my best to accomplish something."

From Roan J. Turner, University Station, Gainesville, Fla.: "The Federal Board gave me an opportunity to take a special training with them that I might educate myself so that I might be able to earn a living. I decided to specialize in dairying. After I have completed my training I want to manage dairying or a dairying farm; in fact, I hope to be able to manage anything in the line of agriculture."

From Levi Marshall Nagle, University Station, Gainesville, Fla., November 26, 1919: "The Government sent me to the University of Florida to attend the Agricultural College here to take a course in agriculture. They are paying my tuition and provide any textbooks for me, as well as give me $80 a month, or $40 every two weeks, while I am here. I think the course is a wonderful opportunity. I know that, with the knowledge I had when I came here, I could not in my condition make a livelihood in farming, but it is a wonderfully instructive course which I have taken up here and I am firmly convinced that, when the course is completed, that the knowledge gained will be of more worth to me than anything else which I know of."

From J. C. Rathburn, 106 West Sixty-third Street, New York City, February 9, 1920: "I do not care for placement. Might mention the course is completed. Did me a numerous amount of benefit and wish to thank the New York board for its appreciated service to me."

From L. E. Cox, 521 Lumkin Street, Athens, Ga., March 7, 1920: "I am truly grateful for what the Federal board is doing for me, and I am trying to get all I can out of this course. This training will help us to overcome our handicaps by making of us efficient managers. I think the Government's plan for training the disabled soldier is proving a success and is going to enable us to carry on."

From J. Perlmutt, 370 South Lumkin Street, Athens, Ga.: "Not only am I getting a thorough training in the elementary principles of education but also training in mechanical pursuits and agricultural training. My course is keeping me in the open air a great deal and thus benefiting me in a healthful way. This training is priceless to me and its value can not be estimated in money."

From Aylett D. Clark, 513 West Cumberland Street, Knoxville, Tenn., February 26, 1920: "I entered the offices of the Federal board feeling hostile to the world at large and the Federal board in particular. On leaving your offices I found that I had undergone some great change. I can not explain it other than renewed faith in my fellowmen."

From Edward Yake, to Senator John Walter Smith, December 10, 1919: "September 1, 1919, the Federal Board for Vocational Education took hold of me. They got me a job, paid me $115 per month every month, and now I am making $150 per month. The best friend the enlisted man has in the world is the Red Cross and the Federal board. Speak up, men, tell our dear beloved friend, John Walter Smith, what the dear old Federal board has meant to you."

From Wallace F. Mustin, 934 North Calvert Street, Baltimore, Md., February 25, 1920: "I wish to let you know how nicely I am getting along at the Baltimore College of Dental Surgery, while in the meantime it is my desire to show the Federal board my appreciation for what it is doing for me. My wife and myself have planned our living expenses to correspond with the monthly salary which we receive from the Federal board. We have planned to live on it by economizing, but nothing to waste, which, of course, is expected. In the meantime we are working hard and planning forward to a bright future. I wish the Federal Board for Vocational Education the best of luck and hope to be with it to the end of my college career."

From Winand Pyle, M. D., 3538 York Road, Baltimore, Md.: "My course at Johns Hopkins is nearing completion and I shall soon apply for transportation home. The course has been very profitable and extremely interesting. I am sure its value to me far exceeds the money expended for it. I wish to thank you and your staff for your kindness to me. I wish you all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year."

From Ignace Miletz, Chicago Business College, Chicago, Ill., February 9, 1920: "I am now attending the Chicago Business College, taking a business course which will enable me to earn my living in the future. Salesmanship especially appeals to me, and I hope to become a good salesman. I wish to thank the people through the Federal board for the opportunity given us boys."

From S. A. Sandberg, Chicago Business College, Chicago, Ill., February 9, 1920: "I intend to take a position as salesman and I am sure my training will help me accomplish my purpose. I want to assure you of my appreciation of the Federal board's activities in behalf of myself and other injured buddies."

From Angelus Chure, Chicago Business College, Chicago, Ill., February 9, 1920: "Speaking several languages, I have taken this commercial course, and especially salesmanship, and prepare myself for the foreign commerce, where are found the biggest possibilities of to-day."

From Louis Golden, Chicago Business College, Chicago, Ill., February 10, 1920: "I am satisfied that I have made considerable progress, and hope to do even better hereafter. My object is to become a successful salesman or advertising man. I have unlimited confidence in my abilities and I do not mean to be a burden to the Government. It is my aim to overcome my handicap and win success."

From John G. Moore, Chicago Business College, Chicago, Ill., February 9, 1920: "I wish to say my future welfare looks very good, as this school is giving me the necessary training for an occupation that will always give me an opportunity to make a living. The training I am receiving will help me in securing a chance to command a salary that will satisfy my needs. I hope to be a credit to the vocational board and to prove myself worthy of trust."

The following communications, among many others, were received after the congressional investigation of the board's activities commenced from Carl Schuman, L. B. Lambert, Henry Todd, Elmer E. Paine, and V. R. Bartlett, Washington, D. C., March 9, 1920: "To whom it may concern: We have found the vocational officers of district No. 4 always courteous and considerate. We have been fairly treated as regards to the training and the remuneration which was at the hands of the Government. Therefore, in the face of the criticism to which the board is at present subjected, we wish to express our hearty appreciation and thanks to the Federal board for its just and kind treatment of us."

From Arthur F. Johnson and 81 other students at Heffley Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y., March 25, 1920: "We, students under the Federal Board for Vocational Education, believe that the Federal Board for Vocational Education is very efficient in its required duties, under the present conditions, and regret that it should at this time be a target of public criticism and contempt."

Caplinger, Harold R., 8-11322; private, first-class, Company L, Fifty-sixth Infantry; 823 Addison Street, Chicago, Ill.

Your kind letter of a recent date at hand. Will say my present conditions as to health are such as would not conflict to my taking up a vocational course. As to the training that has been approved for me, I have decided not to take, as my plans, which I put in for such a course, did not materialize as expected. In the near future, if I should decide to take up any particular training, will write for information on same.

Thanking you for your interest taken in same, I remain,

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

DEAR SIR: Received your letters regarding vocational training; but sorry to say I am not in any condition for this work, as I need all the fresh air I can get, also to have my weight and strength back. As my health is poor since my discharge in the Army, I will notify you when my conditions are better.

Thanking you very much for your kindness, through the disabled soldiers, I remain,

Yours, truly,

HARRY VERWAY.

Re: Meaume, Alfred Perry, coxswain, United States Naval Reserve Force, 2022 Eastwood Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: This man was notified that approval had been granted for a course of training in cutting and designing men's clothing. His father called upon us in answer to this, stating that his son was working as a cutter for $32 a week, and for this reason he does not want to take advantage of this training unless he finds that he can not carry on at his present job. In that case he will ask for training in some other line of work.

Yours, very truly,

CHAS. W. SYLVESTER,
Division Vocational Officer, District No. 8.

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION,
Chicago, Ill.

MY DEAR SIRS: I do not see as I am ready to take your course in animal husbandry for I am married now and have a wife to support and I do not care for that now; how about some automobile school, but I do not see how I could get away. I am going to try and farm next year for myself, so I have to look after things.

Very truly, yours,

FRANCIS W. MILLER.

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

DEAR SIR: I will write you a few lines in answer to your letter that I received December 27, 1919. I have not yet decided whether I want to take the training or not, when I get ready to take it I will let you know. I have five years to decide on it, so if I get ready to take it during the five years I will let you know.

Yours, truly,

LUTHER DEXTER.

Punkiewiez, Marion, 8–16658, private, Company B, One hundred and twenty-eighth Infantry, Thirty-second Division, 1209 Sixth Avenue, Moline, Ill.:

Offered section 2, training in English and trade try out, October 28, 1919.

After repeated attempts to gain contact with the man, his case was sent to Red Cross, copy of whose report is submitted:

FEBRUARY 27, 1920.

The following report was received from the Moline Home Service Section regarding Mr. Punkiewiez, who is a man who was approved for training, but did not report:

We have talked with the above-mentioned man in regard to vocational training, but he seems quite satisfied with his work and does not care to take up any training.

Mr. Punkiewiez is employed at the John Deere Plow Works in this city, and has work that is not very heavy and makes good wages.

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Friday, April 30, 1920.

The committee met at 10 o'clock a. m., Hon. Horace M. Towner (acting chairman) presiding.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Munroe, you may take the stand.

TESTIMONY OF MR. JAMES P. MUNROE, VICE CHAIRMAN FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION—Resumed.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Munroe, what is your judgment as to the present organization of the Vocational Board? Does it meet with your unreserved approval?

Mr. MUNROE. You mean the general make-up of the board?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; I think it is an admirable arrangement.

Mr. TOWNER. You then approve entirely of the membership on the board of the Cabinet officers?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; it has been a very useful part of the board organization.

Mr. TOWNER. In what way are they useful?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course the daily work of the board is carried on by the standing committee made up of the three appointed members and the Commissioner of Education, and then at least once a month, and sometimes oftener, the full board meets with the Cabinet officers present, and then all questions of general policy are put up to the whole board and receive the sanction or the dissent, as the case may be, of the Cabinet members.

Mr. TOWNER. They act, very largely, in an advisory capacity?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Do you say that as often as once a month you have a full meeting of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Do the members of the Cabinet seem to take any particular interest in the activities of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. A very great interest. Of course, especially in the war period, they had very many other important duties to attend to, but, personally, I have been surprised that they have been able and have been willing to keep such close touch upon the work of the Federal board as they have.

Mr. TOWNER. Your idea then is that so far as the personnel of the board is concerned, it is an advangtage distinctly to have Cabinet officers members of the board?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. A very great advantage; yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. What do you say to the proposition that is suggested of increasing the active membership of the board, perhaps by one or possibly by two new members, one at least of whom should be a service man.

Mr. MUNROE. Of course if such a man were put on, it would be only for the comparatively temporary purpose of this rehabilitation work, because such a man would have no special interest in or qualifitions for the general work of the board, which deals with education pure and simple.

Mr. TOWNER. Your idea then would be that it would be unnecessary and of no particular advantage.

Mr. MUNROE. I can not see any special advantage in it, because, as I pointed out yesterday, a large proportion of our staff are ex-service men. They certainly ought to be able to take care of the interests of the soldiers.

Mr. TOWNER. How are the activities carried on with regard to the various duties of the board, the vocational work, and the rehabilitation work, and the other activities of the board? How is the work divided?

Mr. MUNROE. As far as the board itself is concerned, it usually at its monthly meetings gives one day to the activities of vocational education and another day to those of vocational rehabilitation. Of course, the members who are on the job all the time, like myself, give attention to these things as occasion requires. As to the staff, we have, as you doubtless know, a chief of the vocational education division and a chief of vocational rehabilitation division, and their staffs are kept absolutely separate, the only interchange of duties being, such as I pointed out yesterday, the disbursing, auditing, and so on, which are common to both branches.

Mr. TOWNER. Then so far as the board taking part in the administrative functions of the board, it is only of a supervisory character; in other words, there is no member of the board who is at the head of the rehabilitation service.

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Your director is at the head?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. We have no director.

Mr. TOWNER. You have a director who is at the head of the vocational service under the other acts and activities of the board.

Mr. MUNROE. We have the two chiefs, each directly responsible to the board.

Mr. TOWNER. For instance, your rehabilitation chief —what is the name of the director?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin.

Mr. TOWNER. And what is his name?

Mr. MUNROE. Uel W. Lamkin.

Mr. TOWNER. How long has Mr. Lamkin been in the service?

Mr. MUNROE. I can not remember the date. Mr. Lambkin can perhaps tell us.

Mr. LAMKIN. January, 1919.

Mr. MUNROE. In January, 1919, Mr. Lamkin was put in charge of the regional office, with its headquarters at St. Louis, and then on September 15 he was made chief of the whole division.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. To what extent and in what manner has Mr. Lamkin charge of this rehabilitation work?

Mr. MUNROE. To the extent that any responsible chief in a Government department has his responsibilities.

Mr. TOWNER. Is he the final arbiter on questions that arise from the various regions?

Mr. MUNROE. On questions of administration. Of course, questions of policy have to be put up to the standing committee of the board.

Mr. TOWNER. Questions of policy are so often mingled with a proposition of administration that it is very hard to separate them, is it not?

Mr. MUNROE. Well, I think that both Mr. Lamkin, the chief of the rehabilitation division, and Mr. Hawkins, the Chief of the vocational education division, lean on the side—if there is any question as to whether it is administrative or a question of general policy—lean on the side of putting it up to the standing committee.

Mr. TOWNER. And that means the active membership of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. In other words, they refer all important questions that arise to the membership of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; and then after we have laid down a general policy covering that point, of course, they are free to act under that general vote.

Mr. TOWNER. Again, I would like to have you state whether there can be any distinction between a question of general policy and a question arising under an administrative act that really involves a question of policy. Are such questions not continually arising?

Mr. MUNROE. The conditions are rather peculiar, I think, with our board from the fact that the work has been so tremendous and the necessity of haste has been so great, that the standing committee has had to be on the job practically all the time and doubtless it has taken part in the administration, when, under normal conditions, it would not have done so.

Mr. TOWNER. Does the board interfere with the activities of the directors in carrying on the work, of its own motion?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not quite get your point there?

Mr. TOWNER. The point is this: The committee would like to know just how far the authority of the director extends and how far he can be held personally responsible for the activities of the board. You say he is the administrative head. We grant that, but if the administrative head is being continually interfered with in the performance of his duty then he is only nominally the head. The committee would like to know whether he is actually the head of the department or not.

Mr. MUNROE. I think Mr. Lamkin could answer that question better than I could. So far as we are aware, after laying down general policies, we try to give him a free hand in the administration of those policies.

Mr. TOWNER. The impression has been created by the testimony here that the board themselves are continually interfering with the administration of the work and continually changing their policies; what have you to say about that?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. There have been changes in policy made necessary by the very rapid changing of conditions under which the work has been carried on. As I pointed out in my testimony last night, we have had to overcome one obstacle after another, and as each of those obstacles was overcome, it of course necessitated a somewhat greater or less change in general policies; and, of course, the revised legislation of last July necessitated very drastic changes in policy.

Mr. TOWNER. If a person is the head of an administrative department or bureau, he ought to be responsible for those who are his subordinates, ought he not, Mr. Munroe?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Then he ought to have the appointive power, ought he not? Has Mr. Lamkin that power?

Mr. MUNROE. So far as it is possible under Government regulations. As I understand it, all staff appointments have to come before the board for confirmation. They are made on his recommendation, of course.

Mr. TOWNER. Well, are they made on his recommendation?

Mr. MUNROE. Oh, yes.

Mr. TOWNER. To what extent does the board interfere in the appointment of the personnel of these various divisions or regional offices?

Mr. MUNROE. Not at all, so far as I am aware.

Mr. TOWNER. When a vacancy occurs, does Mr. Lamkin go about making the appointment without receiving the authority of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. He makes the recommendation. He finds the person and makes the recommendation, and the formal appointment, of course, is made by the board.

Mr. TOWNER. Then he is not the head and chief of the bureau if he has not the power of appointment. He is not the head of the rehabilitation department if he has not that power, is he?

Mr. MUNROE. That is a new point of view to me, Mr. Chairman. I should suppose that all appointments, all staff appointments, had to be conferred, made actual, by a vote of the whole board on the recommendation of the chief. Of course, all clerical appointments are made by the district officers themselves.

Mr. TOWNER. Then you have a line of distinction between what you call staff appointments and clerical appointments?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Will you please state what that is?

Mr. MUNROE. The clerical appointments includes stenographers, clerks, charwomen, and people of that sort, anything below the line of stenographer and including the stenographer.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, all of the regional chiefs and all their principal subordinates, men engaged in placement work and in the determination of the degree of disability and the determination of where the training shall be taken, and all those matters, are they directly put up to the board to pass upon?

Mr. MUNROE. Every month we pass on the full list of appointments.

Mr. TOWNER. Why do you not leave that with the head of the department?

Mr. MUNROE. Well, as I say, Mr. Chairman, I had supposed up to this time that it was a requirement of Government procedure that they should be acted on by the full board. I may be mistaken in that.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. What is the ground for that idea? This is not a criticism——

Mr. MUNROE. No.

Mr. TOWNER. We are just trying to find out the facts regarding it, Mr. Munroe.

Mr. MUNROE. As I say, the question has never been brought to me before. I took it as a matter of course that we had to pass on all staff appointments. We, of course, in the very beginning laid out a chart showing the organization, and we act under that original chart with such modifications as the changes in conditions necessitate.

Mr. TOWNER. Then, so far as the head of the rehabilitation work is concerned, the director, he can not make directly any appointments at all. He has to submit them all to the board and they have to be acted upon by the board??

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. As a matter of fact, however, I can not remember of any change being made by the board. They accept his recommendations.

Mr. TOWNER. The policy was adopted in the first instance, as I understand it, of having the board pass upon the determination of whether or not the service man should be entitled to training at all.

Mr. MUNROE. You mean the full board?

Mr. TOWNER. Well, I do not know about the full board. I mean at least the department here in Washington.

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, in the beginning, until the districts had had experience and until it was felt proper for them to stand alone, Washington had to keep a supervisory attitude; but after the legislation of last July, as soon thereafter as the personnel was reorganized as required by the salary limitations, a general order was sent out giving each district full authority to put all amputation cases, without any question at all, and to put all other cases into training except those requiring or likely to require more than two years or involving a tuition fee of more than $500 a year.

Mr. TOWNER. Has that policy been adopted ever since July?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. All the time we are giving more power and authority to the district officers.

Mr. TOWNER. Some of the testimony before us would lead us to believe that the board was still, down to a very late date, reserving to itself the determination of that question, and that it had resulted in great delays.

Mr. MUNROE. That was either mistaken testimony or else was testimony relating to the period before July 11, 1919, when of course all matters had to be referred to Washington because no action in the matter of putting a man into training could be taken until previous action had been had by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. We could not give freedom to the districts in those days.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, until the passage of the law in July, by which the board was given power to determine upon the right to training of any service man, your position and the position of the board is that all the delay occurred by reason of the fact that you could not get action from the War Risk Insurance Bureau?

Mr. MUNROE. That was the main cause of delay; yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. You stated on your examination yesterday that 39,000 men were now in training, and, in a general way, can you give the committee any idea of what form this training is taking and where the training is being given.

Mr. MUNROE. I have a memorandum here. On February 28—at that time the total figure was 28,000—there were in prevocational training; that is, training for illiterates or non-English-speaking foreigners, 4,294. The total in trade and industrial training was 8,950, and that includes the electrical trade, 1,100. (I will just read round figures.) Mechanical trades, 3,600; retail trades, 380; printing trades, 220; garment and leather trades, 495; railway, 25; manufacturing, including glass blowing, dye making, paper manufacturing, silver plating, and so on, 68; crafts, including horology, jewelry making, etc., 412; advertising trades, 460; woodworking and wood-finishing trades, 353; food preparation, 76; textiles, 157; repair work, including typewriter repairing, sewing-machine repairing, and so on, 73; miscellaneous trades, including barbering, motion-picture operating, drafting, upholstering, and so on, 1,224; business and commercial training, 7,253. That is divided up into various forms. General farming, 3,053; and in the professions, 3,978, including practically all the professions. As to places in which they are being trained, as I remember it, between 5,000 and 6,000 of the men are in placement training; that is, they are in actual industries being trained on the job under supervision, and the remainder of the men are in schools, colleges, or in what we call receiving stations which are mainly for illiterates and non-English-speaking men where they give half a day in this special school under direct supervision to training in the English branches, and the other half day to trying them out on various trades and crafts which are carried on in the school, so as to get an idea as to their best line of industrial activity

Mr. TOWNER. That would mean, then, that about one-third are being trained in actual work.

Mr. MUNROE. Approximately that number; yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Do you think that proportion would hold good for the 39,000?

Mr. MUNROE. Would you think that proportion of about one-third in actual placement training would hold, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. LAMKIN. No.

Mr. MUNROE. Not so large a figure as that?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir.

Mr. MUNROE. About 20 per cent. My colleague (Mr. Holder) reminds me that in a great many cases where these boys are being trained in a school or a college, they will then be given a subsequent period of placement training on the job so as to make certain that they will make good in it.

Mr. TOWNER. I understood that. I wanted to get at how many men were being trained or received the training actually in factories where the work was being carried on.

Mr. MUNROE. Between 20 and 25 per cent, I should say.

Mr. TOWNER. Can you give us an idea of how many of those men are receiving part wages?

Mr. MUNROE. Very few.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. Very few of them? Do you have complaints from the factories where these men are at work regarding the men or is there general satisfaction with regard to the men?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, as there would be in any such large number of men, there are individual cases of complaint and dissatisfaction, but, as a rule, the attitude of the employers, where men are in placement training and the attitude of the teachers in the schools and colleges is one of unusual satisfaction with the work that these boys are doing.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, what is the attitude of the men themselves who are engaged in this work?

Mr. MUNROE. With a few exceptions which, of course, one would find in a large body of that kind, they are eminently satisfied with the work they are doing.

Mr. TOWNER. What can you say regarding the prospects of these men after they have completed this practical season of training? Are they likely to find places where they can receive adequate remuneration from the end of this training period?

Mr. MUNROE. Most of these cases, I believe, are going to receive larger wages than they did before they were disabled.

Mr. TOWNER. Will there be any difficulty in their finding places?

Mr. MUNROE. Not if the present industrial conditions continue. Of course, a serious panic would alter the situation very materially.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, regarding these men who are attending the schools—most of the men are attending technical schools, are they?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; I presume the majority of the schools would be called technical schools.

Mr. TOWNER. Just explain what you mean by that?

Mr. MUNROE. Well, it is a rather difficult thing to explain because almost every college now has a large technical department, so that there are a good many boys in colleges who are really taking the technical side of that work; but, of course, as this training is for the purpose of making these men industrially efficient, to put them on their feet industrially, naturally the majority of the work is along industrial lines.

Mr. TOWNER. Then, most of them are attending technical schools, if they are in a general university or college that has a technic department and they are in that technical department, of course they are in a technical school.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. That is correct, is it? Most of them who are attending the colleges or schools of any kind are engaged in technical work?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. What proportion of these men are taking a business training or training for clerical positions, something that might not be considered as directly a trade industry?

Mr. MUNROE. Well, of course, I included those in using the word technical. I presume you mean the business and commercial courses.

Mr. TOWNER. You now understand my question and I would like to know what proportion there are of those men, for instance, who are preparing to be typewriters and stenographers and to go into the banks and take clerical positions of all kinds. What proportion of the men are engaged in preparation for that class of work?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. This statement is as of February 28, when the total number of men in training was practically 27,000. The number at that time in business and commercial training was 7,253, and of that the number training for administrative positions was 3,716. That includes positions for general advertising, business administration, banking and finance, real estate, insurance, foreign trade, factory management, auctioneering, salesmanship, and so on. The number training for subordinate positions in commercial lines at that time was 3,234, including bookkeeping, shorthand and typewriting, secretarial work, clerical work, postal clerk, civil service preparatory, and a general commercial course without specification, 2,500 of them.

Mr. TOWNER. How are that class of men getting along with their work?

Mr. MUNROE. Very well. They are being trained very largely in the special schools of business, and I have talked with a number of the heads of such schools and they express great satisfaction with the progress the men are making.

Mr. TOWNER. As I understood you yesterday, only about 10 per cent of those who actually enter training desert or stop it.

Mr. MUNROE. Less than that. The percentage is between 8 and 9 per cent.

Mr. TOWNER. Less than 10 per cent.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. In a general way, what would you say were the principal causes of these men giving up their training?

Mr. MUNROE. More than 50 per cent of them give up because of the return of their disability and they hope, of course, to go back into the work when they are well again. As I recollect it, perhaps, 20 per cent of the 8 or 9 per cent give up because they think it is not worth while, and the balance give up because they secure some immediate position and think it is not worth while to finish their training.

Mr. TOWNER. You stated, I believe, yesterday that 20,000 of these men who were entitled to training were not in training.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; about that number.

Mr. TOWNER. Did you mean by that the cases of those men had been passed upon and that they had been decided to be entitled to training?

Mr. MUNROE. And the men have been notified of the course that is open for them, and in many cases they have been sent Government transportation to carry them where the school or place of training was at some distance from their home.

Mr. TOWNER. After you have notified them, do you receive word from them as to the reason why they do not go on with their training?

Mr. MUNROE. If we do not from the first letter, we send a second letter, and if we get no reply to that, we send a third, and in most cases if the man is within any reasonable distance, we send somebody to look him up, and of course in all this work we have the active cooperation of the American Legion Posts, of the Home Service Sections of the American Red Cross, and of various other national and local agencies.

Mr. TOWNER. I was not particularly asking the board to exonerate itself for neglect but what I wanted to know was the reason or cause of these men not being in training where they were entitled to it.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. I might have read yesterday, if I had not tired the committee by reading so many letters, extracts from a number of letters giving the reasons why the men did not take the training. As I remember it, in a good many cases their conditions at home were such that they did not feel it proper for them to leave. I remember one case where a man had an aged father and he felt he ought to stay with him. In another case the man owned quite a little farm, and while he would have liked to take the training, he felt his duty was to carry on that farm; of course, in some instances they simply write that they are not interested in training; and under the present industrial conditions, it is so easy to get a good paying job, that men do not think it is worth while to go through the trouble of training.

Mr. TOWNER. What is your idea of the proportion of these 20,000 men taking the training at some future time?

Mr. MUNROE. It would depend very much on the industrial situation. If there should be a very serious panic and scarcity of opportunity for paying positions, I think these men would come in in very great numbers, but should the present scarcity of labor and the demand and high wages continue—this is merely a guess—I should doubt if we get more than 50 per cent of that number, despite all our efforts to get hold of them, and as I said yesterday——

Mr. TOWNER (interposing). Fifty per cent would be a pretty large expectation, would it not?

Mr. MUNROE. Well, I hope we shall be able to induce that number to take the training.

Mr. TOWNER. Then you are still making efforts, even after sending the third letter?

Mr. MUNROE. As I explained yesterday, we are starting out in the New York district and in some of the others, and we propose to carry it through all the districts except where the distances are so great as to make it practically impossible. We are sending word to all these men not yet in training to present themselves at the nearest large center to their homes, and we get at them, also, besides writing them a letter, through the local Red Cross and the American Legion and so on; and to that district we send a flying squad from the nearest district office to take up the cases not only of those men who have been assigned to training and have not yet gone into it, but also the other cases that have been brought to our attention in which the training has not yet been determined, so as to clean up both those groups as far as possible in each of those localities.

Mr. TOWNER. In case you have a man who is taking training for some particular vocation, and he finds out that his physical condition is such by reason of his disability that he can not carry on that training, and again returns to you for training in some vocation that he could carry on owing to his condition, I understood you to say yesterday that you could not give him the training.

Mr. MUNROE. You misunderstood me, sir, because we are doing that in hundreds, if not thousands, of cases.

Mr. TOWNER. I was wondering about that.

Mr. MUNROE. You must have misunderstood me, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. I should think that would not be an infrequent case.

Mr. MUNROE. It is a very frequent case, and a good share of the time of the local case boards is taken up in the consideration of such cases.

Mr. TOWNER. I would like to have you explain to the committee the relation between the hospital cases and your work. For instance, take the case where a man has entered into training with you and his wound breaks out afresh, or tubercular indications are shown, or something of that kind interrupts his work; what is done in his case?

Mr. MUNROE. His case is immediately taken hold of by the Bureau of Public Health, which is working in the closest cooperation with us—in fact, all our medical staff now is assigned to us by the Bureau of Public Health—and he is sent back to the hospital, or his case is taken care of in a proper medical way until he is in a condition to resume his training, and while under that hospital care he receives the same compensation that he does while pursuing his training.

Mr. TOWNER. In other words, you treat him just as if he were still in training, on the supposition that he will resume his training?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; only, of course, the Bureau of Public Health assumes the responsibility for his care, not we.

Mr. TOWNER. Of course, I understand that; but there are, as I understood you to say, 30,000 or 40,000 of these men who would be entitled to training who are tubercular cases and ought to be in the hospital, and, in fact, a great many of them are. What is going to be done with those cases?

Mr. MUNROE. We have already established arrangements with the Bureau of Public Health by which we assume, under medical direction, the training of these men in the hospital itself, or in the close vicinity of the hospital, of all those cases where it is not felt by the doctors that it would be detrimental to the man to work for one or two or more hours a day. In that way we hope to hasten his training, so that when he does recover he will be just that much further along in his preparation for industrial earning.

Mr. TOWNER. The statement was made in the press not long ago that there were 15,000 or more of these tubercular patients that could not have any hospital training, although they were virtually dying for want of care and for hospital service. Have you any information regarding that matter?

Mr. MUNROE. I think I testified yesterday that before the law was passed there were something like 10,000 cases sent out from the camps, and of course a good many of those have been since picked up by the Bureau of Public Health, but I presume a great many of them are still at large, and until the amendment of July we had no responsibility whatever for the men discharged from the camps between April and October of 1917.

Mr. TOWNER. The committee realizes that you are not responsible for those conditions, but we want to know what you know with regard to the facts, if we can.

Mr. MUNROE. As I understand it—this is only on secondhand information -this bill now before the Congress asking appropriations for the building of a number of new hospitals for the use of the Bureau of Public Health is largely for the purpose of taking care of those cases.

Mr. TOWNER. It has been shown time and time again that there are plenty of hospital facilities in the United States. The only question is as to the utilization of them and securing them for the Government. It seems that the Bureau of Public Health or some other departments of the Government are insisting on immense appropriations for the building of hospitals that it would take two or three years to build, when there are an abundance of hospitals that could be used and are being offered to the Government, and there are a great many cantonments that could be utilized with a very small appropriation and would be very quickly available.

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, I can not speak with any firsthand knowledge about that.

Mr. TOWNER. I believe you recommended yesterday that the Government should—what was your first recommendation, Mr. Munroe?

Mr. MUNROE. I am pretty sure it was the removal of the salary limitation from the bill. I do not seem to have my documents here.

Mr. TOWNER. The removal of the salary limitation?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. That is, the granting of an appropriation in bulk, so that the salaries could be apportioned by the board.

Mr. MUNROE. May I say in connection that this morning I sent a communication to Mr. Good, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in answer to a number of questions he asked in regard to the numbers in training and so on, in which, at the suggestion of the board, I very strongly emphasized the importance of the removal of those salary limitations.

Mr. TOWNER. What was your next recommendation?

Mr. MUNROE. That every effort be made to put through promptly the so-called Kahn Bill giving the Department of War authority to turn over to us, so that we may lend them to the schools, a great amount of material that is not needed by the War Department and which is very sadly needed by those schools and colleges.

Mr. TOWNER. You mean these technical schools?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. The Department of War, of course, has a tremendous accumulation of all sorts of large and small tools and small motors and things of that sort that are of the highest value in the training of these disabled men. as I pointed out yesterday, we acquired about a quarter of a million dollars' worth of them under authorization of the Secretary of War until that was stopped, and since then we have been acquiring them by purchase.

Mr. TOWNER. Are not these technical schools to which these men are sent equipped with this kind of material?

Mr. MUNROE. Not for the large accessions of men we are sending to them. In many of these schools we are training from 100 to 300 disabled men in addition to their regular quota, and they have not the facilities for that sort of thing. Of course, many of the colleges, especially the older colleges, are not equipped as they should be for this form of technical training. They have competent staffs to teach, but in many cases they have not the equipment, and, of course, under present conditions it is absolutely impossible to purchase anything of that sort in the open market. It would be months and months before they could get deliveries.

Mr. TOWNER. What was your next recommendation?

Mr. MUNROE. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, that the other stenographer has taken my document from which I was speaking last night, and I can not remember the order of the recommendations. I remember that one recommendation, whether it was the next one or not, that Congress give us authority to train men who entered the armies of the Allies before we went into the war, and then another recommendation was——

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER (interposing). That is, make reciprocal arrangements with the Allies for the training of men who happen to be in this country who belonged to their armies, and, especially, I suppose, that would apply to the Canadians?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Do we not now have, while not an express reciprocal arrangement, perhaps an implied one by which those Americans who served in the Canadian Army are receiving training here in the United States without compensation?

Mr. MUNROE. It is done under the Elks' fund, Mr. Lamkin tells me.

Mr. TOWNER. You also recommended the foundation by the Government of a revolving fund to take the place of the Elks' revolving fund?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. What amount do you think would be required at this time or from this time on?

Mr. MUNROE. The Elks' fund is $200,000, and a few weeks ago the Elks were seriously considering asking the payment of that fund back to them. We put up very strong recommendations to them, and they were very nice about it and agreed to continue it for another year. Whether they will be disposed to do it beyond that time I can not say.

Mr. TOWNER. My question was as to the amount of money; would $200,000 be sufficient?

Mr. MUNROE. I think a quarter million dollars would be sufficient.

Mr. TOWNER. Even if that were provided, it would have to be paid to the Elks in large proportion.

Mr. MUNROE. Oh, no, sir——

Mr. TOWNER. In order to take up the $200,000 outstanding?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; the boys are paying back so well. I think I testified that between 80 and 90 per cent of the loans are promptly paid, so there would be only probably somewhere between 5 and 10 per cent for the Government to make good to the Elks.

Mr. TOWNER. Can you think of any other recommendations that you have in mind?

Mr. MUNROE. Only this matter of the hospitals. Of course, I had not your point of view when I made that recommendation, but the Bureau of Public Health has very strongly put it up to us that if we are to carry out this excellent cooperative arrangement, by which we are to train men in these public health hospitals, they must have an appropriation for the erection of these hospitals; but, as I say, I can not speak from direct information on that.

Mr. TOWNER. You spoke in your testimony yesterday of the fact that you had had a great deal of difficulty in securing legislation in order to make your work effective, particularly referring to the funds necessary. When you first came to Congress asking for an appropriation, you asked for $2,000,000, I believe.

Mr. MUNROE. There, let me say, if I may express myself more clearly than perhaps I did yesterday, it was not the total amount, it was the fact that we were required to budget that $2,000,000 which led to the difficulties that followed in the succeeding winter. If that

$2,000,000 had not been budgeted, we would have had practically no difficulty in that first year.

Mr. TOWNER. When you found out that this difficulty existed, what steps did you take?

Mr. MUNROE. We brought it to the attention of Congress in the early part of December.

Mr. TOWNER. When you say, "brought it to the attention of Congress," what do you mean by that?

Mr. MUNROE. Put in a bill permitting the coalescing of these funds, through the proper channels.

Mr. TOWNER. What proper channels? Did you ever call it to the attention of the Education Committee that had introduced this legislation?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Holder tells me that Dr. Prosser, who was at that time the director, handled it directly with the Education Committee of both houses.

Mr. TOWNER. Did you not, in fact, make nearly all of your demands through the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. MUNROE. Not in that particular case, I think, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Well, in all cases.

Mr. MUNROE. Where it was a question of appropriations, we went, naturally, to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TOWNER. Did you appear before the Committee on Education with regard to these necessary changes in the law?

Mr. MUNROE. I, personally?

Mr. TOWNER. No; I mean the board.

Mr. MUNROE. I think that Dr. Prosser did or else brought it to individuals on the committee.

Mr. TOWNER. As a matter of fact, let me say this, that it was, in several instances, upon the suggestion or upon the application, really, of the members of the Committee on Education to the board, before we could receive any information regarding the matter, and the board seemed to be very loathe indeed to take the matter up with the committee that had originated the legislation and seemed to take the matter up, if they took it up at all, directly with the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MUNROE. I am very sorry——

Mr. TOWNER (continuing). When the changes that were to be made were changes in the law that ought to have originated with the Committee on Education, and the matter ought to have been brought before the Committee on Education. From the very start the Committee on Education has been very anxious, indeed, to make this legislation effective, and would have done and has done everything for the board that could be done in order to make it effective.

Mr. MUNROE. I have here a report, which has been put in my hands, of a hearing before the Committee on Education. It is dated January 34—I do not know whether that is January 3 or January 24, 1919, and at that hearing Dr. Prosser appeared and urged the coalescing of the funds and stated the situation.

Mr. ROBSION. What is that date?

Mr. MUNROE. It is January 34. I do not know whether it means January 3 or January 24. It is 1919. I see it is dated on the outside January 24.

Mr. PLATT. Doctor, you spoke of efforts being made to clean up by sending out letters to the men and by having squads of men go out and see those who had not yet applied for training. When a man writes you and says he does not want training, what do you do? Do you keep him on the list and keep after him?

Mr. MUNROE. We put him on what you might call the reserve list, in case he should change his mind at any time, but take him out of the active list.

Mr. PLATT. I should think that his name ought to be crossed off, and not necessarily prohibited absolutely from having training, but that he ought not to be pestered all the time. I have had some complaints about the board keeping after people who do not want training, who are either employed or not in condition to take training.

Mr. MUNROE. I have no doubt we have been overzealous in the matter, but we felt it was better to err on that side than on the other.

Mr. PLATT. You pay no attention, apparently, to the letters written you; no one ever reads them or opens them, or pays any attention to the case. When men are taken sick and sent to the Public Health hospitals, their pay keeps on just the same as if they were in training?

Mr. MUNROE. After 30 days they are transferred to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, but under the Sweet amendment they get the same amount that they would with us.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I was unavoidably absent yesterday and I do not know just what Mr. Munroe has testified to. I would like to ask if some one else is going to meet the specific charges that have been made against the board in regard to particular cases?

Mr. MUNROE. I dealt with that in my testimony yesterday. I think I answered each specific charge.

Mr. BURROUGHS. In the early part of your testimony, Mr. Munroe, you gave some figures. If they are convenient and readily accessible, I wish you would just verify these figures, because I am not sure I correctly got all of them. The figure you gave of total registrations, as of March 27, I take it, was 206,666.

Mr. MUNROE. I am sorry my document is not here, but that is my recollection.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Then, there is a figure which you gave for the total number with whom contact had been established on March 27, of 174,196?

Mr. MONROE. I think that was correct.

Mr. BURROUGHS. And 84.2 per cent of the total registration?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Then, there was another figure of 141,953 which was 81 per cent of the total registration—I did not get what that represented?

Mr. MUNROE. Those had been personally interviewed by the vocational advisors.

Mr. ROBSION. Indicated as being surveyed?

Mr. MUNROE. Personally interviewed, technically called surveyed.

Mr. BURROUGHS. There was a figure of 58,099, which, I understood you to say, was the number eligible for training?

Mr. MUNROE. The number for whom training had been arranged.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BURROUGHS. And there was a figure of 4,466 that was the total number that had begun training in the month of March, was that right?

Mr. MUNROE. New cases, you mean; I think that must have been. That is about the average, between 4,000 and 5,000 a month going into training.

Mr. BURROUGHS. There is still a large number of these men who are said to be eligible for training who have not yet been examined at all, I suppose?

Mr. MUNROE. The 200,000 includes all the names that have come to us from all sources, the Red Cross and various other sources. Probably a large proportion of those not included in the other figures have not any desire for training and probably most of them have not any disability.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You have examined between 125,000 and 150,000 men, I believe, you said, actually examined between 125,000 and 150,000?

Mr. MUNROE. I think the figure you quoted was somewhat larger than that.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes; where the contact had been established, 174,196. That is the exact figure?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I do not quite understand yet why there has been all of this delay and why there is still so much delay in getting a decision in a man's case?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, the delay for the first 13 months was due to the fact that it required two decisions. We could not put a man in training until the Bureau of War Risk Insurance had decided that he was eligible to compensation.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. In fact, I should question very seriously if there is any important delay, delay that amounts to anything.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Did you hear the testimony of certain gentlemen who came here from the New York office, one at least, and I think two of them testified, one certainly testified to me that the average length of time was at least a month in getting a decision.

Mr. MUNROE. I would prefer that Mr. Lamkin, who is directly responsible, answer that question rather than myself. Mr. Lamkin will testify later on that point.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You personally do not know about that?

Mr. MUNROE. I have my opinion, but I should prefer to have the question answered by Mr. Lamkin, who is directly responsible for the personnel of the New York office.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You remember hearing this gentleman also say that the chief reason for the delay, in his opinion—he gave several reasons—but the chief reason was due to the fact that so many decisions had to be made in Washington?

Mr. MUNROE. He was entirely mistaken in that. No decisions have to be put up to Washington or have had to be put up to Washington since last fall, except in the cases of men whose courses are likely to occupy more than two years, or where the tuition is more than $500 a year. All other cases the district has entire authority to settle itself.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That has been the rule since last fall?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Do you recall the time, was it soon after this amendment in July?

Mr. MUNROE. It was impossible to give any such authority to the district until after the amendment.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Do I understand you to say to the committee that such authority was given to the district office immediately following the passage of the amendment?

Mr. MUNROE. As soon as the reorganization which was necessitated by the salary limitation had taken place. Of course, that meant a considerable readjustment of all the districts and all the work.

Mr. BURROUGHS. As you understand it now, the district office has final authority?

Mr. MUNROE. Absolutely.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Except in the cases which you mention?

Mr. MUNROE. Except in the two cases I have mentioned.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What proportion of all cases would be governed by those exceptions, would you say?

Mr. MUNROE. As to the tuition it would be infinitesimal, probably not half a dozen cases in the whole country, and as to the other, this is merely a guess on my part, I should say that it would not be over 5 per cent.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Who determines the question of eligibility, where is that determined?

Mr. MUNROE. Eligibility for training?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. As I say, except in those cases, it is determined in the district office under general regulations originally laid down in what we call "Miscellaneous, 150."

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is the eligibility question determined by a district officer or by a central board officer located in the district office?

Mr. MUNROE. There is a local board that considers the case with a member from the central office with authority to give the cachet from Washington that it can go through; it does not have to be sent to Washington at all.

Mr. BURROUGHS. The final O. K. on the thing is made by a central board agent in the district office?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What have you to say to the charge made by Mr. Littledale that some 65,000 or 70,000 cases were thrown out by what he calls the eligibility squad?

Mr. MUNROE. I testified to that yesterday and gave the figures showing that large numbers of those were duplicates and, of course, naturally were thrown out. Another large number—I think I have that here—53,000 of these cases had been transferred to another district.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What do you mean by that?

Mr. MUNROE. They were duplicates. The boy had appeared in one district and his case had been transferred to another district and they had neglected to take his name off the first district list.

One thousand five hundred and seventy-five cases had been opened in the district office in error. A large proportion of these were duplicate cases, again, duplicates in the office themselves, they had the same man's name twice. The eligibility squad closed 35,431 cases and 12,923 cases had previously been closed by the central office, making a total of 48,534 cases which had been closed for the following reasons:

The man had died.

The man had reenlisted in the service.

The man had not been discharged from the Army, but had been placed on the retired list at once, therefore not eligible for training under the law.

The man stated that he did not desire training.

The man requested that his case be closed and that no more letters be written him.

The man was apparently not interested in training as evidenced by his failure to reply to several letters.

The man could not be located. Inquiry at the office of The Adjutant General in Washington, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the local Red Cross, the American Legion, and other agencies had failed to discover his present address.

The man was carrying on successfully in employment and was not in need of training.

The man had no disability and claimed no disability. There were thousands, I might say, brought to us by the local Red Cross where the man never had any disability.

The man's disability was a negligible handicap, and therefore he did not come under the law.

The man's disability was a minor disability and he had stated that he was not interested in section 3 training.

The disability existed prior to enlistment and was not aggravated by service and he was, therefore, not eligible for training under the act.

The man was in the Army only a few days, having been discharged from draft.

The information in the man's folder was so meager that contact with the man could not be made on the basis of this information; we could not locate the man at all. Of course, there were cases where they had the same name and it was a very difficult thing with those common names to actually locate the man.

The man had left the country.

The man had not been discharged under honorable conditions. A great many of those were thrown out.

Mr. BURROUGHS. How many men made up the eligibility squad?

Mr. MUNROE. They varied in the larger districts. What was the number, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. LAMKIN. Twenty.

Mr. MUNROE. That was subdivided for the smaller districts.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Was there not a medical member on the staff?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. On every staff in every district?

Mr. MUNROE. That is not true in every district. Where the medical reports had already been made and where there was not a medical man on the eligibility squad they were to accept the medical report.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Did they accept the medical report?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BURROUGHS. In a good many cases they absolutely overruled the medical report?

Mr. MUNROE. So far as I am aware they did not overrule the medical report.

Mr. BURROUGHS. In a number of instances where the medical report showed a major disability this eligibility squad found that there was simply a minor disability?

Mr. MUNROE. I am not aware of any such cases.

The cases that Mr. Littledale cites I will just run over.

Case 670. The man has fallen arches. The medical decision is that the disability was aggravated in the service. Three doctors classified him as a major case.

I am quoting from Mr. Littledale.

The eligibility squad overrules that classification. The squad gives him a negligible handicap and refuses him training pay.

The facts show that at the time this case was reviewed by the eligibility squad the folder contained two medical examinations, one by Dr. Tracy, of the New York office, and one by the Army medical officer who examined the man at the time of his discharge. Dr. Tracy's examination stated that the disability was a major disability and constituted a major permanent handicap which was aggravated by service. The Army medical examiner stated that the disability was third-degree flat feet which was not aggravated by service.

On account of the conflicting medical reports the central office case board representative had to choose between two suppositions. The man's enlistment record showed that he was discharged from draft after being in camp only six weeks during the fall of 1917 and that he was never accepted for enlistment in the Army. Both medical opinions show that the disability uudoubtedly existed prior to enlistment and that he carried on successfully before entering the Army in spite of this handicap, which consisted of flat feet, and the record showed that for two years since being rejected from the draft he had been employed as a car painter and stenciler. In view of the undeniable evidence that the disability existed prior to enlistment, and in view of the fact that the man had successfully carried on for two years following his brief stay at a military camp, the central office case board representative ruled that the man was not eligible for training under the conditions of section 2 of the vocational rehabilitation act.

The handicap rating was not changed from major to negligible and the man denied training on the ground that his disability was aggravated by service.

Mr. Littledale also cites the case 13192. Mr. Littledale said:

The man's occupation is a clerk. He was wounded and is suffering from epilepsy. Medical opinion classifies him as a major case. The eligibility squad overrules that. The squad calls him a minor case and refused him training with pay.

The facts in this case show that at the time this case was rated by a member of the eligibility squad there was no evidence in the man's folder that he was suffering from epilepsy and the file contained no rating by any member of the district medical staff. The folder contained an old medical examination stating that the man's disability was a slight limitation on the movement of his right arm. Inasmuch as the man prior to enlistment was employed as a clerk it was not considered that he was suffering from a major occupational handicap and it was ruled that he was not eligible for section 2 training.

Mr. Littledale cites the following case:

Case 27675. The man is suffering from dementia præcox,; medical opinion classifies him as a major case. The eligibility squad overrules that; calls him a minor case and refuses him training with pay.

The facts in this case show that no ruling was made by the eligibility squad, the decision having been previously made by the central office. The official report from the Navy Department shows that the man was not discharged, but was placed on the inactive list on account of flat feet. The man was placed on the inactive list in December, 1918. An examination made 11 months later at the office of the Federal board showed that the man was suffering from hepephrenic dementia præcox. There was some doubt as to the feasibility of training even if the disability were aggravated by service and there is no evidence to show that this mental disability was related in any way to military service. Inasmuch as this case presented many difficulties it was forwarded to the central office in Washington for a ruling and section 2 training was disapproved by central office because it was considered that the man's disability was not due to service and that the man was, therefore, ineligible under the conditions of the law. This ruling was made by the central office in Washington, and not by a member of the eligibility squad as stated in the Evening Post.

Then the figures which Mr. Littledale gave in regard to the alleged throwing out of cases—I will just give a few, it is not necessary to give them all—the Boston office was reduced from 10,568 to 7,255. The reason for this was that 1,671 cases had been transferred to another office and 38 cases were duplicates or canceled cases; 1,604 were ineligible under the evidence presented. New York was reduced from 31,191 to 16,041. The reason for this was that 9,714 men had been transferred to other offices, 395 cases were duplicates, and 5,041 were thrown out because the evidence showed that the men were not eligible for training under the law, and the same applies to all the other offices.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Have you personally any acquaintance with the business of the New York office?

Mr. MUNROE. Do you mean the actual financial running of the office?

Mr. BURROUGHS. No; I mean the actual running of the office.

Mr. MUNROE. I have visited the office many times.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Have you ever looked into its management or control?

Mr. MUNROE. Each time I go there I talk with the heads of the different divisions and get as good a view as one can in half a day's visit.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is it your opinion that the New York office is run as it should be run?

Mr. MUNROE. I think it is now. It was not for quite a long time after it was started.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Are you satisfied that the New York office is now on such a basis as it ought to be on?

Mr. MUNROE. I think that it is rapidly getting to that basis; yes, sir.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BURROUGHS. You think that the morale in the New York office is up to the standard?

Mr. MUNROE. It depends upon what one calls the standard.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is it up to what you would consider a proper standard?

Mr. MUNROE. I think there are still changes that should be made there in order to bring it to the highest standard.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What changes would you recommend there?

Mr. MUNROE. I think certain subordinates there should be transferred.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You would confine it to subordinates?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Why?

Mr. MUNROE. Because I think the difficulty, if there is any lack of pulling together there, is due to the disaffection of some of these subordinates.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You think that Mr. Clark is fully competent to handle the office?

Mr. MUNROE. I should say yes.

Mr. BURROUGHS. In every way?

Mr. MUNROE. I think it should be stated here that for the salaries which we are able to offer the district vocational officers you can not get the ideal executive, because I think such a man would command anywhere from $15,000 to $25,000 or $30,000, but with what we are able to offer I think we have good men.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Now, you have brought that up, I should like to go into that a little.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is it in your opinion true that it is impossible to get the type of man that you need, the type of man who can render the best and most efficient service in this work, that it is impossible to obtain that man without paying him a salary like what he perhaps might receive out in the industries?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not think that it would be necessary to offer a man $20,000 or $25,000, but I think to get the type of man to handle a complicated situation such as is presented by the New York office, a situation involving large financial responsibilities and very difficult and complicated human problems, that you ought to be able to offer a man at least $7,500 and, better, $10,000. Then, I think that you could get a man of large experience who should be willing to come at considerable financial sacrifice for the sake of doing the work, but with what we are able here to offer under the salary limitation, I do not believe that we can get that type of man; it represents too great a sacrifice on his part.

Mr. BURROUGHS. How about these advisors, are you able to get the right type of man for advisor in the district offices at the salary limit in the law?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; except, of course, we have got a number of very extraordinary men who are doing a fine piece of work, but simply because they are willing to throw themselves into the work with that small salary for the sake of doing it, but where we need large numbers, as we do, it is impossible to expect that motive to hold in many cases.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BURROUGHS. Such men do have large responsibilities, do they?

Mr. MUNROE. In one way they are the most responsible men of all. They come into close personal contact with the soldiers. To the soldiers he is the Government of the United States. They, as a rule, do not come in contact with any other man representing the Government, except this one man. You gentlemen saw from your own experience with these witnesses how complicated these problems are. There are all sorts of social questions that come up, all sorts of questions growing out, particularly, of his physical and mental condition, which involves his point of view, and so on, and you have got to have a type of man who will get at the real kernel of that man's need, and who knows enough of the whole field of industry to be able to give him successful advice as to his future, and who has a sufficient knowledge of human nature to know what is real and what is just passing and ephemeral in the man's state of mind. Then, when you get that man into a school or into an industry, you have got to have a man who knows enough about education and about the industry to be able to go into that department and to speak with authority as to whether or not the people in charge of the department are giving that boy a square deal. A man who is not competent of course, simply makes a fool of himself when he tries to criticize the education or the training of one of these men. He has got to speak with some authority and that means a man of experience and a man of pretty large caliber. For $2,400 we have, as a rule, to take young men of very little experience with either the human problems or the industrial problems, and it is amazing to me that under these limiations our men are doing such fine work as they are. A majority of them are throwing themselves into the work, heart and soul, and making up in zeal for what many of them lack in experience.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What effort has been made to obtain men of the type you mentioned for this work?

Mr. MUNROE. We are on the lookout all the time through State officers and various other people who are likely to know men of that stamp and recommend them to us. Then, of course, with the American Red Cross and the American Legion we are now endeavoring, as far as possible, to get ex-service men in those positions.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is a like effort being made to obtain men for the follow-up work? There seems to be a need for them very much, especially in the New York district?

Mr. MUNROE. The plan is, as the work of advising slackens off, to take these men who have had experience with the problem and gradually transfer them to the problem of follow-up.

Mr. BURROUGHS. In the meantime what, if anything, is being done?

Mr. MUNROE. We are getting men as fast as we can obtain them. It is almost impossible to get men who can go into a school or an industry and talk with authority in regard to the training of the men, and it is foolish to send anybody else into such a place.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You say that it is impossible to get men to do that work?

Mr. MUNROE. At the salaries that we are able to offer; yes, sir; because in these days a man can get very much more than $2,400 in a position that involves very little responsibility on his part.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BURROUGHS. That is true, no doubt; but I have had in mind that it would not be a tremendously difficult thing to appeal to the right type of man. This work makes an appeal, I think, to the type of man that you speak of?

Mr. MUNROE. But those men have been giving themselves, a great many of them have been giving themselves at great sacrifice, practically ever since the war started. A large number of them who would have been available while the war was on for service of that sort have got to go back to earn money for themselves and their families. They feel that they have done their share of service to the country and that they have got to take care of themselves. We find that attitude very common throughout the country, and it is a very natural attitude.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You spoke about the Elks' fund. I do not know that it has been brought out here at all in the course of this investigation, just how that Elks' fund is being administered, on what terms it was placed in your hands?

Mr. MUNROE. It was, of course, impossible to put it into our regular funds, because under the law it could not have been used except for the purposes of the law.

Mr. BURROUGHS. It is a separate fund?

Mr. MUNROE. Absolutely, and was handled by Dr. Prosser, so long as he was with the board.

Mr. BURROUGHS. It was placed with Dr. Prosser by the Elks' organization?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. The board has absolutely no official knowledge of it.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What were the conditions that were imposed?

Mr. MUNROE. There were practically two funds. One was a gift fund that the Elks did not expect to get back. That covers such cases as the boys who fought with the Allies and that we could not take care of under the law. A larger fund is the loan fund, a loan for the boys to tide them over in the weeks before they can receive their regular pay checks from the board. As I have already stated, between 80 and 90 per cent of that is paid back very promptly.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Does the Elks organization have any oversight whatever or check upon its administration?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. Reports are made at short intervals to the organization just how the money is being used.

Mr. BURROUGHS. As far as you know, is the Elks organization satisfied with the administration of this fund up to this time?

Mr. MUNROE. The only way that I can judge is by the fact that at some meeting of the officers of the Elks, a few weeks ago, out, I think, at Indianapolis, the question of continuing the fund for another year was brought up, and Gov. Tanner and a Mr. Fanning, who are in direct charge of the fund, were so far satisfied with the work that they recommended, and it was adopted by the Elks organization, a continuation of the plan for another year.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You spoke generally about the hard-boiled order, so-called. Do you know, as a matter of fact, that any such order had been sent out by the board?

Mr. MUNROE. By any official of the board, as I understood you?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes, sir. There was a statement in printed form, however, was there not?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Typewritten.

Mr. BURROUGHS. In typewritten form. Did you ever see that statement?

Mr. MUNROE. Not until I saw it published in the New York Post.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Do you have any knowledge of its origin?

Mr. MUNROE. Only the report that was made to me by the chief of the Vocational Rehabilitation Division.

Mr. BURROUGHS. To your knowledge, was it ever a basis of action by the board or by any official or subordinate of the board either here or anywhere else?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; absolutely no.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Did you ever hear in the office from the chief or from anybody else any such sentiment expressed as seems to have been expressed in that so-called hard-boiled order?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; it was absolutely contrary to the whole attitude, spirit, and temper of the organization from top to bottom.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I believe you spoke in your testimony about there being some 8,000 men who had been waiting varying periods from two months to six months, and perhaps more, at the time of the passage of the amendment, in July a year ago?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. July, 1919?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Was that right?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You spoke about the effort that had been made by the board for some form of cooperative action between the board and the War Risk Insurance Bureau prior to your seeking that amendment?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. And that all such efforts had proved futile?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That was during the incumbency of Mr. Lindsley?

Mr. MUNROE. Col. Lindsley; yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. For how long a time were those efforts continued?

Mr. MUNROE. From the very beginning. In fact, just before the law was passed we sent a formal communication to the War Risk Insurance Bureau, pointing out the necessity of close cooperation in working out the law, urging them to interpret it, as we proposed to interpret it, in the liberal spirit in which we knew and believed that Congress intended it to be interpreted, and pointing out to them that the interpretation involved their paying the man not merely the $30 a month actual cash pay, but a sufficient sum that would maintain him while taking the training; and also pointing out to them, in view of the fact that they must determine the compensation from the point of view of many factors other than that of the need of training, whereas we had only to consider one question, the necessity of these disabled men having training in order to go back into industry, that they should therefore interpret the law, as we thought it should be interpreted, on the basis of the man's eligibility for compensation rather than on that of his being in actual receipt of compensation.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You ascertained to your own satisfaction pretty soon after the law was passed, possibly even before the law was passed, that the bureau was going to take a different attitude than the Federal Board was taking with reference to the interpretation of the statute?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, there were comparatively few men to be dealt with in the beginning. As I pointed out, I think, for a long time we carried on a cooperative plan that was not officially recognized by the bureau.

Mr. BURROUGHS. How long was that?

Mr. MUNROE. That was up to January or February.

Mr. BURROUGHS. From the time the law was passed in October?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. It was about that time—I do not remember just when Col. Lindsley came in—but apparently he placed a stricter interpretation on the law than we did.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Was that cooperative plan satisfactory?

Mr. MUNROE. It did the business; yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That is to say, there was no delay occassioned during those months?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Up until about January?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Everything was going along smoothly because of your cooperative plan which you had devised, which was, perhaps, extra-legal, but which was getting the results?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. Then, of course, another thing, if I may continue, in January, was the fact not only that the bureau put a stricter interpretation on the law but also the fact that under the order of December 31, 1918, the boys were coming out in perfect shoals from the Army, so the bureau was absolutely swamped; they could not take care of them at all.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I understood you in your testimony—I may be wrong, and if I am I want you to correct me—I understood you to say that about May, if my memory is right, you first asked for the amendment to the law?

Mr. MUNROE. We held conferences from this time in January when the situation began to be critical, almost every week. We would go to the bureau or the officers of the bureau would come to us, and we would talk over the situation and we would urge, formally and informally, their more liberal interpretation of the law. It would then be put up to their legal advisors and they would decide that it could not be interpreted in the way that we wished it. Then we began to send every few days some inquiry as to why they interpreted the law as they did and why they varied their interpretation from one week to another week, and urging some kind of a cooperative arrangement, and each time explaining to them that unless something of that sort was done we would have to ask for a divorcing from them. At each of these conferences Col. Lindsley would urge us to try to keep along as we were, that he was sure the thing would come out all right. Finally, about the middle of April, under authority of the board, I wrote the letter to Assistant Secretary Shouse, which I read yesterday, covering these points of disagreement and the difficulty between us. Nothing happened within a week or 10 days and Secretary Houston, the chairman of our board, wrote a letter to Secretary Glass, who was at that time the Secretary of the Treasury, and the result of that letter was the putting in of a joint request for legislation divorcing us from the bureau.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That was about the 1st of May?

Mr. MUNROE. My letter was sent about the middle of April.

Mr. BURROUGHS. When you actually prepared the amendment and started proceedings for the amendment?

Mr. MUNROE. It was useless to ask for an amendment to the legislation until the War Risk Insurance Bureau was willing to cooperate with us in asking; otherwise it would have been impossible.

Mr. BURROUGHS. It was around the middle of April when you actually started proceedings for the amendment?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. When you gave up all further cooperative action with the bureau and started to get a change in the law?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Why had you not done that earlier?

Mr. MUNROE. Because of the constant hope held out to us by Col. Lindsley that we would be able to straighten the thing out without legislation.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What reason did you have for thinking that you could come to any understanding when his interpretation was one way and yours another?

Mr. MUNROE. Because he always held out the hope to us that the bureau might see the thing differently. It was one of those cases where you have to do a thing gradually, because we had to bring them around to the state of mind where they would act with us and ask for legislation; it was not a thing that we could force on them.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Were you not convinced long before May that something would have to be done in the way of legislation?

Mr. MUNROE. I think I so expressed myself to Col. Lindsley one of the first times that I met him.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What reason did he give you for thinking that it was not necessary?

Mr. MUNROE. He maintained that he had found the bureau in a great state of confusion when he took hold of it, and I think he made the public statement that in four or five weeks he would get it all straightened out. It was in the hope that he would get it all straightened out and the thing would go through all right that we held off.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Here were these boys' cases piling up by the thousands. As I understand you, the matter had gone along all right from about January, the beginning of January, until the middle of April or the 1st of May and that then there were some 8,000 cases that had accumulated?

Mr. MUNROE. They did not begin to pile up very seriously until about April.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You say the only reason you did not act earlier because Col. Lindsley held you off by saying that he thought the matter could be arranged otherwise?

Mr. MUNROE. The bureau was in great confusion, because of this great outpouring of men and he thought that he would get it straightened out in a few weeks and that we could come to some cooperative arrangement without the necessity of asking for legislation.

Mr. BURROUGHS. As I understand it, the board has two functions, that is to say, there is the function of vocational education proper and then there is the rehabilitation section?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. The board was created originally simply to carry out the vocational feature.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That means that there are men on two pay rolls there?

Mr. MUNROE. No; there is no man on two pay rolls. There are ix or seven men who would have to perform functions of both divisions in the auditing department, bookkeeping, and that sort of thing, and the clerk to the board, and so instead of putting new officers on those duties we asked the existing officers to do double duty and we split their salaries, after having secured a ruling from the comptroller that that was a proper thing to do.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You have the so-called split pay roll?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. And they get a salary from each?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Would you say that it is not a full salary from each?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; it is the old salary split in two, payable from two different appropriations.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is it or is it not a fact that men in the service of the board who are doing purely vocational educational work are on the payroll of the rehabilitation division?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. It is not true?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Would it be possible to have a statement submitted to the committee showing the names of the staff members and clerks who are doing purely educational work? You say there are none on the payroll of the vocational board?

Mr. MUNROE. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Or the rehabilitation board?

Mr. MUNROE. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. BURROUGHS. How long have you been connected with the board?

Mr. MUNROE. From its establishment in July, 1917.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Will you kindly name the chiefs of the rehabilitation section since you came on it?

Mr. MUNROE. The first chief was Dr. J. A. C. Chandler, who resigned in order to take the presidency of the College of William and Mary; the next chief was D. H. L. Smith, who had been loaned to us by the University of Indiana; he was in charge of the educational department there and was obliged to return, under the original agreement, at the opening of the fall term in 1919; and the present chief, Mr. Lamkin, who has been the chief since that time.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You have no women employed on the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Women?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MUNROE. A large number in the clerical staff; yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I did not know that.

Mr. ROBSION. You have women employed where?

Mr. MUNROE. The clerical and stenographic force is almost wholly women.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Have you any women employed in responsible positions in the board?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Only in the division of vocational education.
Mr. BURROUGHS. How about the rehabilitation division?
Mr. MUNROE. None.
Mr. BURROUGHS. Is there any reason for that?
Mr. MUNROE. Simply because in dealing with young men it seemed important to have men.
Mr. BURROUGHS. You stated, I think, yesterday, that half of the actual employees are ex-service men?
Mr. MUNROE. Fully half.
Mr. BURROUGHS. That is true?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURROUGHS. How many of them saw actual service?
Mr. MUNROE. I can not say offhand; I could get the figures for you.
Mr. BURROUGHS. Do you know how many were Y. M. C. A., Red Cross, or K. of C. workers and how many were real soldiers?
Mr. MUNROE. Real soldiers, all of them.
Mr. BURROUGHS. All of the 50 per cent?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURROUGHS. I think you spoke of some 96 of the male employees being discharged soldiers?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURROUGHS. How many of them have been re-educated?
Mr. MUNROE. They did not need it.
Mr. BURROUGHS. They were disabled men?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; but they were carried on without being re-educated. I said 96. That was the number known to us. There may be others disabled. We never made any canvas of the situation. Some of the other ex-service men may have been disabled and we not know of it.
Mr. BURROUGHS. You spoke of Mr. Lamkin recommending appointments and the board acting upon the recommendation?
Mr. MUNROE. Staff appointments.
Mr. BURROUGHS. That was the procedure?
Mr. MUNROE. With staff appointments; yes, sir.
Mr. BURROUGHS. Did Mr. Lamkin recommend the appointment of Mr. Clark?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURROUGHS. That was upon his own initiative, without any suggestion from anyone, as far as you know?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURROUGHS. Mr. Holder, I think, yesterday testified, or somebody did, that Mr. Clark's salary had been increased to $4,000 but that he was not yet drawing it?
Mr MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin will have to answer that; I am not familiar with it.
Mr. BURROUGHS. I think that is all at present.
Mr. TOWNER. The hearings will be adjourned until 1 o'clock this afternoon.
(Thereupon, the committee took a recess until 1 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee reassembled, pursuant to recess, at 1 o'clock p. m., Hon. Horace M. Towner presiding

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. The committee will be in order. Before going on with the testimony I want to call attention to a letter which I just received on the mail that came in just before noon. This letter is written by a service man, who is a lawyer and who used to live in my district in Iowa, and now lives in Phœnix, Ariz. He writes me a letter protesting against the proposed bonus bill and then he makes this statement, which I will want to put in the record as an indication of how widespread the feeling is that the board or somebody is responsible for unusual delays with regard to the benefits provided for the disabled service men. This is what he says in his letter, after discussing the bonus proposition:

While it does not concern the Fordney bill, I would suggest that some pressure be brought to bear upon the heads of departments having to do with disabled service men. The hardships of these men and their families in many cases are receiving no attention whatever. The dilatory tactics of those having the relief of disabled men in charge is disgusting, and in many instances the men and their families grow discouraged and give up in their efforts to secure aid which is justly due them. If a real service is to be done, let it be done on behalf of these men.

You may resume, Mr. Munroe.

STATEMENT OF MR. JAMES P. MUNROE—Resumed.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Munroe, I have lost in my memory the exact date on which you became associated with the board. Would you state that again?

Mr. MUNROE. It was in July; I think it was the 21st of July, 1917.

Mr. ROBSION. And your service has been continuous up to this date?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Have you occupied the same position in the board all the time?

Mr. MUNROE. I was elected vice chairman at the first organization meeting which I think took place on that date.

Mr. ROBSION. Your suggestions of improvements relate to outside agencies, that is, to Congress?

Mr. MUNROE. To legislation to be passed by Congress.

Mr. ROBSION. You have no suggestion as to the improvement of the central office?

Mr. MUNROE. Except as improvement would come with the removal of the salary limitations. That would tend to an improvement.

Mr. ROBSION. So far as you can see it, there is nothing that the central office can do to improve the service or to become more efficient in administering the laws as they are now written?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, I am not so foolish as to maintain that our organization, any more than any other Government body, is absolutely perfect.

Mr. ROBSION. I say so far as you see you are unable to make any suggested improvement there?

Mr. MUNROE. Except we are always strengthening the office in every way we can.

Mr. ROBSION. Would that apply to the New York office?

Mr. MUNROE. In regard to possible improvement?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. I stated this morning that I thought the morale would be improved by some shake up there.

Mr. ROBSION. Who do you have in mind that ought to be shaken up?

Mr. MUNROE. Two or three of the staff there, I think, are making more or less trouble.

Mr. ROBSION. Who are they?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin could give the names better than I could, but it is my general impression that there is some lack of cooperation there.

Mr. ROBSION. They are a part of the staff there, and, of course, hold responsible positions. Can not you give the names?

Mr. MUNROE. I would prefer not to do so because it is a question of administration which Mr. Lamkin is responsible for rather than myself.

Mr. ROBSION. I would like to get it into the record at this time in view of some other matters I desire to ask you. I wish you would inquire of Mr. Lamkin now and let it go into the record.

Mr. MUNROE. Are you prepared to make any statement? (After a pause.) Mr Lamkin apparently is not.

Mr. ROBSION. If you can not give the names, how can you say there ought to be a shake-up there?

Mr. MUNROE. Because it is my general impression that there has been more or less friction there, which I believe would probably be disposed of by the removal of some of the men.

Mr. ROBSION. You were present here during all of the hearings, were you not?

Mr. MUNROE. Most of them; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. When Mr. Clark testified?

Mr. MUNROE. Most of the time; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. When Mr. Meyer and Mr. Ives and Mr. Noyes testified. There are those four men who related the situation in New York, did they not?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Didn't you gather from their testimony what the trouble was at New York so far as morale goes?

Mr. MUNROE. As far as I could gather from their testimony I should think that Mr. Meyer and Mr. Ives should be transferred.

Mr. ROBSION. What about Mr. Noyes?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not think Mr. Noyes—I think he is all right.

Mr. ROBSION. But he did give substantially the same evidence that Mr. Ives gave, did he not?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Noyes is a gentleman of quite a different disposition.

Mr. ROBSION. But so far as discussing conditions in the New York office, there is very little difference in the testimony Mr. Noyes and Mr. Ives gave?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; but Mr. Noyes is of a cooperative nature and the other two gentlemen are not. That is, judging from their attitude.

Mr. ROBSION. They, at least, are the men that have come before the committee at the request of the committee and have detailed the conditions in the New York office and you feel ought to be relieved and transferred?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; because I do not think that Mr. Noyes should be transferred.

Mr. ROBSION. I say Mr. Meyer and Mr. Ives.

Mr. MUNROE. I do.

Mr. ROBSION. Well, from the appearance of the men here and their testimony, their knowledge of the work there, were you not impressed with the fact that Meyer and Ives appeared to be better trained, and have the work in hand better than Mr. Noyes?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I did not gather that impression.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, Mr. Munroe, after hearing the testimony of Mr. Noyes who you say is all right, are you not convinced that there is something radically wrong in the New York office?

Mr. MUNROE. I am convinced that there was something wrong there for the early part of the history of the office and that it is being very rapidly cleared up.

Mr. ROBSION. Did not Mr. Noyes bring the condition right down to April, 1920?

Mr. MUNROE. I still say that I think Mr. Noyes is of a proper state of mind and would not make trouble in the office whereas I think the other men would.

Mr. ROBSION. But if Mr. Noyes is a good man and unbiased, unprejudiced, and is that type of man that you describe him, when he makes the charges that he makes, that are substantially the same as Mr. Meyer and Mr. Ives make, can we escape the conclusion that there is something radically wrong in the New York office as late as April 1, 1920?

Mr. MUNROE. I think Mr. Noyes is mistaken in his conclusions. That is the way I size him up.

Mr. ROBSION. But, Mr. Munroe, he did not testify as to conclusions; he stated the conditions, the facts.

Mr. MUNROE. I shall have to read his testimony, really. I only heard part of it.

Mr. ROBSION. Would you, before Mr. Meyer and Mr. Noyes stated the facts of the situation and conditions there—do you know anything that would cause either Mr. Noyes or Mr. Ives, and Mr. Meyer to come before this committee and willfully commit perjury?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I do not think they would commit perjury. I think they simply saw things in the rather warped way that people do if they think they are not being given proper consideration.

Mr. ROBSION. But Mr. Griffin and a great many other witnesses that appeared here all seem to have found the same condition existing there in the New York office.

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, Mr. Griffin testified to a time practically anterior to the July 11 legislation.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, Mr. Noyes and these other witnesses put the blame for the failure of the office there on Mr. Clark. Might that not have some weight in influencing you to feel that perhaps Mr. Clark is responsible for conditions there?

Mr. MUNROE. I should have to read their testimony carefully before I gave my opinion in the matter.

Mr. ROBSION. If I have understood you, you never spent more than half a day at any one time in the New York office, did you?

Mr. MUNROE. At times I have spent the whole of one day, or even two successive days.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Did you do in your visits to the New York office as Mr. Noyes and Mr. Meyer stated that they did, that they went right into the files there and looked into the many individual cases to learn the true conditions there?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I did not examine the files, but I questioned the persons in charge of the files as to the situation.

Mr. ROBSION. The persons in charge of the files would be rather supposed to give themselves a clean bill of health, would they not?

Mr. MUNROE. I did not consider it the duty of a member of the board to go into details of that sort. Our duties are more of a general character rather than of a detailed administrative character.

Mr. ROBSION. But you must admit, must you not, Mr. Munroe, that Noyes and Ives and Meyer and a great many of the other witnesses that testified had a better opportunity to know conditions in the New York office than you had yourself?

Mr. MUNROE. If their opinion was unbiased.

Mr. ROBSION. I am not speaking as to their opinion, but where they undertook to detail the facts. You, as the head here in the central office, in your visits to New York, your information, whatever you had, was merely information from the heads, was it not, to a large extent?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And it had to be largely confined to that, did it not?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, say that a young man should go into the New York office and register and contact should be made, what would you say, on an average, would be a reasonable time upon which to pass on that fellow's case?

Mr. MUNROE. It would depend entirely on the complications of the case.

Mr. ROBSION. As a general rule.

Mr. MUNROE. What do you mean by pass; get him into training?

Mr. ROBSION. Have it determined whether or not he is to take training; whether or not he is entitled to the training there under sections 2 or 3?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not make any general statement on that, sir, because every case is individual, and some are complicated and others quite simple. The simple case ought to be a matter of 24 or 48 hours, as many cases are passed on in that time.

Mr. ROBSION. If I have understood your testimony, you have looked into the facts, and you say that it is your opinion that all these thousands of cases will be disposed of by about the 1st of July?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, I should think in making a statement like that you must have in your mind some period of time that it would usually take?

Mr. MUNROE. It is very difficult.

Mr. ROBSION. Some period of time that it would usually take to pass upon these cases?

Mr. MUNROE. It is very difficult to give an average because, as I say, the cases vary from the perfectly simple one that can be settled in a few moments to the one that would require a great deal of investigation before they could come to a decision.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Can you in a measure classify them in some way to give the percentage of time that it would require?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not do so without making a study of a thousand or more typical cases, and then I could give you figures.

Mr. ROBSION. Say it was a case that did not require that it be referred to the central office here. How long would you say it ought to take that New York office to pass upon the case?

Mr. MUNROE. It would depend, of course, upon how rapidly the cases were flooding in. I should say three or four days.

Mr. ROBSION. When was it that you had the New York office organized, as you say, under the laws amended July 11, 1919?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Farwell came there at that time, the 10th of August, and the office began to improve from that time.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Farwell was the representative of the central office, was he?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; he was the D. V. O. at New York.

Mr. ROBSION. That is so. He was D. V. O. Did you have a representative of the central office there on August 10, 1919?

Mr. MUNROE. Do you mean somebody permanently there?

Mr. ROBSION. Somebody there to help take care of the business?

Mr. MUNROE. There is practically somebody there all the time from the central office.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, could you give me the number of registrations that had been made in the New York office, say, up to the 10th of August, 1919?

Mr. MUNROE. To the present date, or up to that time?

Mr. ROBSION. Up to that time.

Mr. MUNROE. Not without looking up the figures. I can get them for you.

Mr. ROBSION. Have you that, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. MUNROE. I can get the figures.

Mr. ROBSION. I would like you to put in the record those figures. I just want to get at that condition in New York. There is somebody badly mistaken in their testimony. It is either right or wrong up there.

Mr. MUNROE. We will make a note of that, please, Mr. Lamkin.

Mr. ROBSION. I want a statement of all of the men who had registered and whose cases would be passed upon by the New York office or through the New York office on the 10th day of August, 1919.

Mr. MUNROE. Up to that time?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes, sir.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; I can get that.

Mr. TOWNER. The number of men.

Mr. ROBSION. The number of men.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Then I should like to have how many men had registered or whose cases had passed through the New York office on the 1st day of January, 1920. Now, what is the date you give that the auditor furnished in his statement that you read there? What is your last statement as to the number of men that are in training, etc.?

Mr. MUNROE. On April 15, was the date I gave. The number of men in section 2 was 58,000.

Mr. ROBSION I do not ask you to give the figures at all in here now.

Mr. MUNROE. What is it you wish me to give?

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. You can give the figures, or let Mr. Lamkin put in his figures.

Mr. MUNROE. You mean January 1 to April 15?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. Very well.

Mr. ROBSION. Then I should like to have you put in either how many cases had been passed on for section 2 training and section 3 training on August 10, 1919?

Mr. MUNROE. You mean now just the New York office or the whole?

Mr. ROBSION. The New York office.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. How many cases had been passed on for section 2 training and section 3 training on January 1, 1920? How many cases had been passed on for section 2 training and section 3 training on April 15, 1920, and I wish either Mr. Lamkin or yourself would put in that in the statement because I am going to ask him to produce the records when he appears to show the average length of time that those cases were in the New York office from the time they were filed up until they were passed upon. How many cases have been passed upon in March and up to April 15?

Mr. MUNROE. You mean the total number up to April 15?

Mr. ROBSION. For the month of March and for April, up to the 15th of April. You had that somewhere.

Mr. MUNROE. I haven't that figure by itself. I do not find it here, but I can get it for you.

Mr. ROBSION. I would like to have Mr. Lamkin put that in here with the other figures of the number of cases that were passed on approved for the month of March and for April, up to the 15th of April, 1920. I believe, however, you did give the number of cases that had been approved in the month of March?

Mr. MUNROE. That was for the whole country, not for the New York district. As I understand it, your questions are all for the New York district.

Mr. ROBSION. Yes. How many cases for the whole country were approved in the month of March?

Mr. MUNROE. I can not seem to find that figure. I remember that I gave it.

Mr. ROBSION. Four thousand and something.

Mr. MUNROE. It was something over 4,000.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you have the figures for the month of February, 1920?

Mr. MUNROE. I haven't it here; no, sir; I can get that for you. Are you referring now to the whole country or just to New York?

Mr. ROBSION. The whole country.

Mr. MUNROE. I will get those figures for you, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Who selected Mr. Farwell?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not know, sir. Do you mean originally? He came from the Boston office.

Mr. ROBSION. Your board approved him.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes. I presume he was recommended by the gentleman who was chief at that time. I do not remember when his appointment was made.

Mr. HOLDER. Dr. Prosser.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. I noticed that Mr. Noyes who testified here, and you say that he is all right, in speaking of Mr. Farwell said, in recent testimony before this committee:

A sort of paralysis seemed to hit the office at this time.

That is when Mr. Farwell came. How would you explain that statement?

Mr. MUNROE. I explain it that in my opinion Mr. Noyes is mistaken.

Mr. ROBSION. If I have understood your figures, there are 32,470 ex-service men who have registered for vocational training with whom your board has not yet come in contact; is that true?

Mr. MUNROE. I should have to make the subtraction. [After a pause.] Yes, sir; it is about that figure.

Mr. ROBSION. You have stated that there have been 174,196 contacts with ex-service men of those who have registered and of those 141,953 have been surveyed, and, of course, that leaves 32,243 that have not been surveyed. What do you do when you survey them, what is it?

Mr. MUNROE. There are all kinds of ways of surveying a man.

Mr. ROBSION. What do you mean when you say that a man has been surveyed?

Mr. MUNROE. I mean one of our agents has seen him and talked with him and looked into his case.

Mr. ROBSION. Why should not those other 32,000 have been surveyed. Your boards have been in contact with them?

Mr. MUNROE. I would rather that Mr. Lamkin would answer that question. It is an administrative question.

Mr. ROBSION. That is a large number, is it not, to have contact with and no survey made?

Mr. MUNROE. I think you were not present this morning when I stated these were made up very largely of the names brought into us from all sources, the Red Cross, local agencies of one sort and another, and in my opinion, and I am very confident in expressing this opinion, the great majority of those men are negligible cases that would not come under the law at all.

Mr. ROBSION. If your board, if a representative of your board had not made a survey of them, you can not tell what their condition is.

Mr. MUNROE. From every standpoint they have been communicated with.

Mr. ROBSION. But you have had contact. When you have contact and no survey made, that is the trouble with the board, is it not, and representatives of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Contact simply means that we have had the name given to us from some source, usually from the local Red Cross or something of that sort.

Mr. ROBSION. But my question is that, so far as you are concerned, Mr. Munroe, you do not know why the 32,000 have not been surveyed?

Mr. MUNROE. Simply because they have not responded to communications sent to them to get at that.

Mr. ROBSION. You do not know that they have had communications, do you?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; everybody on our list has had a communication.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Of course, you do not speak of your own personal knowledge, do you?

Mr. MUNROE. I know that is the practice of the office.

Mr. ROBSION. You have given directions to do that, but how far it has been done you do not know?

Mr. MUNROE. I have every confidence it has been done as directed.

Mr. ROBSION. You feel that the central office here and the New York office and all of the representatives are doing their duty substantially, do you not?

Mr. MUNROE. I do.

Mr. ROBSION. You feel that way?

Mr. MUNROE. I do.

Mr. ROBSION. You are just testifying to and going upon that general assumption?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And must do that, of course. I was very much interested in your statement that our own country is doing more for our disabled soldiers than any other government. Did I understand you to say that England, the Parliament of England, had made no appropriation of money for the training of soldiers as directed through the government.

Mr. MUNROE. You misunderstood me. I said it was being largely carried on through private enterprise as most things are in England along that way.

Mr. ROBSION. Can you give us approximately the amount of money that the English Government has appropriated?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not offhand. I could get it for you.

Mr. ROBSION. I wish that would be furnished.

Mr. MUNROE. Will you make a note of that, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. ROBSION. Can you give us the amount that the French Government has appropriated?

Mr. MUNROE. If the figures are available; I am not sure that they are.

Mr. ROBSION. And the Italian Government?

Mr. MUNROE. I make this promise on the supposition that they are available. I am not certain that they are.

Mr. ROBSION. I notice a recent dispatch from the Canadian Government that claims to be official, in which it appears that they have outstripped our country in the matter of vocational training. I will read it.

OTTAWA, April 10, 1920.

Canada has graduated 13,030 disabled soldiers from its industrial retraining school, it was officially announced to-day. More than 43,000 ex-service men are now taking training courses.

If that is official, and if it is true, Canada has greatly outstripped us, has she not?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course I do not know about those particular figures, but I am pretty certain that this 43,000 includes the nondisabled boys who enlisted at 18 and younger, who are being educated under this commission, although they may not be disabled. As to the number of disabled men, the figures are a little over 30,000 that are in training.

Mr. ROBSION. But they are doing more for ex-service men than we are, if that is official.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. The problem of training nondisabled boys in the ordinary schools is quite a different problem from that of training the disabled men.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, can you give the committee what sum of money that Canada has appropriated for this purpose?

Mr. MUNROE. As I recollect it, the first appropriation was $50,000,000 and they have asked—I do not know whether it has yet been appropriated—for another $50,000,000.

Mr. ROBSION. So far as you know, they have only appropriated $50,000,000?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not know whether the second appropriation has been made or not.

Mr. ROBSION. When was that first appropriation made?

Mr. MUNROE. The Commission of Soldiers' Civil Reestablishment was appointed in July of 1915.

Mr. ROBSION. When was this additional $50,000,000 asked?

Mr. MUNROE. I saw reference to it some months ago, but I do not remember the exact date. I believe that the actual appropriation—altnough the commission was established in July, 1915—was not made until during the subsequent year.

Mr. ROBSION. Wnat sum did the Canadian Government pay to the soldiers while taking the training?

Mr. MUNROE. Tnat I should have to look up; I do not remember.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you remember whether it is more or less than we paid?

Mr. MUNROE. Less, I think.

Mr. ROBSION. Wnen was this $2,000,000 appropriated that you spoke of, by our Congress?

Mr. MUNROE. In connection with the act of June, 1918.

Mr. ROBSION. 1918 or 1917?

Mr. MUNROE. Nineteen hundred and eighteen.

Mr. ROBSION. Was that the first appropriation for the retraining of our disabled soldiers?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Did your board ask for more than $2,000,000?

Mr. MUNROE. I think not. I think that that was the figure we asked.

Mr. ROBSION. Congress gave you just what you asked for?

Mr. MUNROE. I have no fault to find with that but only with the budgeting of it. We strenuously objected at that time to the budgeting because we had no data on which to go.

Mr. ROBSION. And that was the act that you complain of that tied your board up with the War Risk?

Mr. MUNROE. I am not complaining of the act, I am complaining of the attitude of the War Risk Insurance Bureau which refused to interpret it in a liberal way. Tne act itself was all right.

Mr. ROBSION. The Bureau of War Risk was undertaking to administer the law different from your board? When was it that you asked Congress to amend that act?

Mr. MUNROE. I think it was December 9, 1918.

Mr. ROBSION. Was it amended?

Mr. MUNROE. It was amended the latter part of February; that is, by permitting the coalescing of the funds.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Yes. Was there any additional fund appropriated in 1919, or before July, 1919?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; there was $77,000 given, as was permitted under the act, by the American Red Cross and the National Catholic War Council. I think those were the two bodies.

Mr. ROBSION. When did you ask Congress to divorce you from the War Risk?

Mr. MUNROE. In the latter part of April, I think, 1919.

Mr. ROBSION. There was no session of Congress then, was there?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; I think Congress was in session at that time. I think the new Congress had come in in April.

Mr. ROBSION. The new Congress was called into session May 19, 1919.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; I am mistaken. It was in May and not in April.

Mr. ROBSION. So it was the new Congress, the Sixty-sixth Congress, that you appealed to for relief, and got relief.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION. What appropriation did you ask for from the Sixty-sixth Congress at the first session?

Mr. MUNROE. $4,000,000.

Mr. ROBSION. $4,000,000?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. How much did the Sixty-sixth Congress give you at its first session?

Mr. TOWNER. Finally.

Mr. ROBSION. Yes; finally.

Mr. MUNROE. $14,000,000.

Mr. ROBSION. So that they gave your board $10,000,000 more than you asked for?

Mr. MUNROE. But meanwhile they passed the amendment to section 2, and that threw on us the whole responsibility for the maintenance of the men.

Mr. ROBSION. But they gave you $10,000,000 more than you asked?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; but, of course, when we asked for $4,000,000 we did not know that there would be the added responsibility under the amendment to section 2.

Mr. ROBSION. How much has your board expended for tuition?

Mr. MUNROE. I would have to get those figures. I do not carry them in my head.

Mr. ROBSION. You had it here.

Mr. MUNROE. I think not.

Mr. ROBSION. You were telling about it in comparing it with Mr. Littledale's charges.

Mr. MUNROE. Oh, yes; that is in the tables. I had forgotten [after a pause]. You mean the total expenditures or for one month?

Mr. ROBSION. No; the total expenditure.

Mr. MUNROE. Up to March 31, 1920, the total expenditure for tuition was what you asked me?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. For tuition the figure was $956,744.89.

Mr. ROBSION. What has been expended altogether?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. For the soldiers?

Mr. ROBSION. Up to March 31, 1920, for the training of soldiers, leaving out the tuition?

Mr. MUNROE. Including the tuition, the total for the soldiers was $15,689,677.77. Subtracting the tuition from that leaves it about $14,500,000 in round figures.

Mr. ROBSION. How much money has been appropriated altogether for this work?

Mr. MUNROE. Up to this time?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. What is that figure? $21,000,000. I have a poor head for figures.

Mr. ROBSION. How much do you still have to your credit? Of the appropriations, how much is still available?

Mr. MUNROE. That I should like to look up. I do not know what the figure is to-day.

Mr. ROBSION. Approximately?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin says on the 1st of April, approximately $10,000,000.

Mr. ROBSION. So that there can be no claim made of any shortage of funds, can there?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. After you had expended all along as you have, you now have something like, on the first of the month, something like $10,000,000 of appropriations still available.

Mr. MUNROE. But, of course, our expenditures are running now at the rate of between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000 a month.

Mr. ROBSION. What would you like for Congress to do is to give your board the authority to fix the salaries?

Mr. MUNROE. I did not get the first part of your question?

Mr. ROBSION. What you would like for Congress to give your board is authority to fix the salaries of all the men in the employ of the Federal Vocational Board?

Mr. MUNROE. To restore the act into its original shape in which it was without any salary limitations.

Mr. ROBSION. Then your idea there was to ask Congress to build more hospitals?

Mr. MUNROE. It is the Bureau of Public Health Service that is asking for the hospitals and we propose and are already carrying out a plan for cooperative work in those hospitals in which we give under medical advice so much training as it is proper for a man to have in his condition of health.

Mr. ROBSION. Don't you think that Judge Towner's suggestion is a fine one that we have a good many cantonments in the country not in use and whose buildings would be available for purposes like that?

Mr. MUNROE. As I said this morning, I have no first-hand knowledge of that subject and I would not venture to give an opinion.

Mr. ROBSION. What do you say about the Philadelphia office?

Mr. MUNROE. In what way?

Mr. ROBSION. Is it in a condition as described by Mr. Reid, who was a witness here?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir. I visited the Philadelphia office two or three weeks ago and it seemed to me in remarkably good condition.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Did you go into the files and records as Mr. Reid says he went into them and found the conditions there?

Mr. MUNROE. I did not pull out the files, but I talked with the responsible people in the office.

Mr. ROBSION. They all gave it a good name?

Mr. MUNROE. A man with business experience can judge from talking with people whether they are doing their work or not.

Mr. ROBSION. How can you tell from that whether or not the soldiers cases were being passed upon?

Mr. MUNROE. Because I asked questions about it and found that they were being dealt with.

Mr. ROBSION. If conditions were what they were described in New York and Philadelphia, the files were put in and handled so that the last would be first and the first would be last in handling cases in passing upon them.

Mr. MUNROE. I think that was a mistake in the testimony.

Mr. ROBSION. I notice you state that you had sent out squads of doctors and others. When did the first squad go out?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin can give you the date. I can not. Do you mean in New York?

Mr. ROBSION. Anywhere?

Mr. MUNROE. When did that New York squad, the first one go out?

Mr. LAMKIN. Some time in February, I think.

Mr. ROBSION. Were any squads going out before March, 1920?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin just said the first one went out in February.

Mr. ROBSION. Where?

Mr. MUNROE. These details can be answered much better by Mr. Lamkin. They are administrative details which I do not carry in my mind.

Mr. ROBSION. I only assumed it on the ground that you stated that the squads were sent out and I thought that you knew something about them.

Mr. MUNROE. I knew in a general way but could not possibly give the dates when they went out.

Mr. ROBSION. Was that under an order of the board or by Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. MUNROE. It was one of Mr. Lamkin's administrative acts.

Mr. ROBSION. That was not an order of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Things of that sort do not require an order from the board.

Mr. ROBSION. Can you tell us the percentage of the cases that have been passed upon by the Atlanta office?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not without looking up the figures.

Mr. ROBSION. There are 14 districts, are there not?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. I wish that you would have Mr. Lamkin furnish in his testimony the percentage or the number of cases that have been passed upon and those that have not been passed upon at each district office in the United States up to April 15, 1920?

Mr. MUNROE. Have you made a note of that, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Have you any figures there to show how many of this 58,099 have been approved for section 2 training?

Mr. MUNROE. Fifty-eight thousand in section 2. For section 3, there have been 36,000 approved.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, there are 25,000 of these 58,000 that have been approved for section 2 training that have not been put into training?

Mr. MUNROE. That have not yet accepted training. We can not force the men to take it, of course.

Mr. ROBSION. What is your impression as to whether or not they will take it?

Mr. MUNROE. As I think I stated this morning, at the outside, possibly 50 per cent of them would. That is a high figure but I hope that that number will take it.

Mr. ROBSION. How many do you claim will be subject to section 2 training?

Mr. MUNROE. Of what we have already?

Mr. ROBSION. Altogether.

Mr. MUNROE. No one can tell that because we do not know about the men who are still in hospitals and about these tuberculosis cases and about the mental cases. It is absolutely impossible.

Mr. ROBSION. How many do you think you still have to pass upon and approve?

Mr. MUNROE. Of the men on our rolls by this time we must have determined the eligibility and assigned training to close to 90 per cent. But, of course, men are continually coming out, being discharged from the hospitals.

Mr. ROBSION. You mean that there are just 10 per cent to pass on?

Mr. MUNROE. Of those on our list; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Then you can tell me, can you not, how many will be subject to section 2 training up to the present?

Mr. MUNROE. Of those now on the roll?

Mr. ROBSION. Of the 206,666 ex-service men who have registered and would be entitled to section 2 training, in your judgment?

Mr. MUNROE. It will be purely a guess. I should guess that the total of 70,000, and subtracting 58,000 from that, leaves it at the outside 12,000. That is an outside figure.

Mr. ROBSION. That are yet to be approved?

Mr. MUNROE. That will accept training.

Mr. ROBSION. That are yet to be approved, whose cases must yet be passed upon for section 2.

Mr. MUNROE. I think we are talking at cross purposes. I stated a little while ago that of the cases on our lists, practically 90 per cent have been passed on at this time. That leaves 10 per cent still to be acted on.

Mr. ROBSION. But if I have understood your evidence, it is that there will be approved for section 2 training, 58,099?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And if I further understood, you stated that in your judgment there would be 70,000 altogether of this 206,666 that would be entitled to section 2 training and that would leave 12,000 who in your opinion would be entitled to section 2 training, whose cases have not yet been approved. Are we both clear on that?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. I think we are still talking at cross purposes because we have approved section 2 training for 58,000 men.

Mr. ROBSION. Before you go any further, let me interrupt you. In your opinion, how many will there be who will be entitled to section 2 training of this 206,666?

Mr. MUNROE. I will have to do some addition here. There remain about 45,000 cases—that is, at the time of these figures—still to be passed on. The vast majority of those, I believe, are minor disabilities and consequently the proportion will be very small of men eligible for section 2 of that 45,000.

Mr. ROBSION. But you have not yet given the committee and myself your opinion as to how many there will be of section 2 training of that 206,666?

Mr. MUNROE. It all depends on the proportion of the 45,000.

Mr. ROBSION. I know you can not tell exactly.

Mr. MUNROE. If you take 10 per cent, that is 4,500, and added to 58,000, it gives you 62,500. If you take 20 per cent, that is 9,000, and added to 58,000, it makes 67,000. It is all guess, absolutely.

Mr. ROBSION. But you say that you will have all those cases practically passed on that are now in by the 1st of July cleaned up?

Mr. MUNROE. We will have them; yes.

Mr. ROBSION. Of course, you will ask Congress to appropriate money?

Mr. MUNROE. We have asked that for the next year.

Mr. ROBSION. If you have asked it, then, of course, you must have some figures from which you make your request?

Mr. MUNROE. I have not those figures. It is a public document in which we made the estimates.

Mr. ROBSION. How much do you estimate it will cost to train each soldier; I mean as an average?

Mr. MUNROE. It averages about $1,500.

Mr. HOLDER. On the $80 basis?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; but, of course, if the Darrow bill passes, raising it to $100, that will increase the cost for each soldier by $20 a month.

Mr. ROBSION. Did you go before the committee last year in May or June, when you asked to have a separation of these two departments—the Vocational Board and the War Risk—and ask for an appropriation?

Mr. MUNROE. At the time that we asked for the separation?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. I should have to refresh my memory on the details of that.

Mr. ROBSION. Did you testify last year before the Appropriations Committee, of which Mr. Good is chairman?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Who all appeared there before that committee of your board that you know?

Mr. MUNROE. Who of our organization appeared?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. I should have to look up the record to find out. I do not remember. I know I testified. I have forgotten who else did.

Mr. ROBSION. Did Mr. Good, the chairman, appear to be sympathetic with your desires and purposes?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Which hearing do you mean?

Mr. ROBSION. Before the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. MUNROE. I have appeared before the Appropriations Committee several times. I do not know which one you mean.

Mr. ROBSION. Last year in May or June before you had the change in the law and before you got the $14,000,000?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Good has always been very courteous.

Mr. ROBSION. In what way did your board fail in presenting your case to cause the chairman of the Appropriations Committee on the floor of the House to use this language in the Congressional Record of the date of July, 1919, page 2787:

There never was a body of men anywhere entrusted with a great work who seem to know as little about the subject and had as small a vision of the great work with which they were entrusted as the body to whom we had entrusted the rehabilitation of those boys who have been so unfortunate as to be wounded in this great war.

Mr. MUNROE. You would have to ask Mr. Good the basis of those remarks. I could not stand sponsor for them.

Mr. ROBSION. Was there any ground for the chairman of the Appropriations Committee after hearing you and other members of your board, in making a charge like that on the floor of the House?

Mr. MUNROE. You would have to ask Mr. Good.

Mr. VESTAL. I object to that question. That is certainly not a pertinent question to this investigation as to what Mr. Good might have said in the Record. I want to see a full investigation, but taking what somebody else has said about these people certainly is not a proper question to ask this witness.

Mr. TOWNER. I think perhaps the question is a little out of order.

Mr. ROBSION. There was some complaint about the official organ of the American Legion throwing obstacles in your way in this training in carrying on the work. How did it do that?

Mr. MUNROE. I simply pointed out the anomalous situation of the American Legion officers asking us to cooperate with them and offering to cooperate with us and establishing with us the most cordial relations so that there was placed on my desk the other day a manual to be used by the officers of the American Legion in helping us along with our work and persuading the men assigned training to take the training which, of course, is one of their chief ways in which they can help us. I pointed out the anomalous situation of the officers working with us in that way and yet the paper which bears the name of the Legion, to use a slang phrase, knocking us in every way.

Mr. ROBSION. The Legion itself, the head of the Legion, has been criticising the delay of your board? Is that not so?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. D'Olier has always been very friendly.

Mr. ROBSION. Did not the head of the Legion, as representative of the Legion, appear before our committee and point out these delays as inexcusable delays?

Mr. MUNROE. I was not present; I do not know, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. You spoke about receiving some contributions from certain sources. How much was that?

Mr. MUNROE. It was $77,000. I can not tell you just how it was divided but the two givers, as I remember it, were the American Red Cross and the National Catholic War Council. The two gifts totaled $77,000 and there was $25 from some organization whose name I do not remember.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. What disposition was made of that?

Mr. MUNROE. It was added to the fund and utilized during the winter of 1918–19 to some extent in the payment of employees.

Mr. ROBSION. I notice a statement that was issued by your board where you state that $66,000 of it was used for salaries. Was it necessary to do that, to use that fund for the purpose?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; at that time, because of the budgeting. We had used up all of the funds that we could untilize for salaries under that budgeting.

Mr. ROBSION. Was the money given with the idea that it was to be used for salaries?

Mr. MUNROE. Used for any purpose that we needed it. There was no restriction on it at all. Of course, we could not have received it with any restrictions because the law does not permit it.

Mr. ROBSION. Haven't you a copy in your office of the so-called hard-boiled order?

Mr. MUNROE. I have never seen any except what was published in the New York Evening Post.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you not understand that there is such an order, whether it was ever sent out or not, in the files of the department?

Mr. MUNROE. There was no such order ever sent out or ever prepared.

Mr. ROBSION. There was no such order in the files?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Haven't you heard it discussed in your department and in the board?

Mr. MUNROE. We asked for a report from the chief and I think he will be glad to testify in that matter.

Mr. ROBSION. You got information that there was such an order, did you not?

Mr. MUNROE. There was no such order there and I have never seen such an order.

Mr. ROBSION. It was prepared, if not signed?

Mr. MUNROE. There was no order prepared.

Mr. ROBSION. What is that gentleman's name in New York?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Brigham.

Mr. ROBSION. One of the witnesses here testified that Mr. Brigham in New York, who was in the New York office as representative of the board was talking and Mr. Brigham claimed that he was responsible for it.

Mr. MUNROE. A little group of them drew up a memorandum which did not relate to the soldiers in any way. It was a memorendum to be used, according to the testimony given to us by Mr. Brigham, for their relations with the other officials at the district offices. It had no bearing on the soldiers whatever.

Mr. ROBSION. Where was that prepared?

Mr. MUNROE. If you wish me to read the report from Mr. Lamkin, I will do so.

This is addressed to me by Mr. Lamkin. It reads as follows:

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION,
DIVISION OF REHABILITATION FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS, SAILORS, AND MARINES,
Washington, D. C., March 6, 1920.

Mr. JAMES P. MUNROE,
Vice Chairman, Federal Board for Vocational Education,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MUNROE: I am submitting herewith a statement from Mr. Carl C. Brigham concerning the Helpful Hints to Central Office Case Board Representatives, about which you inquire. As I remember the incident the facts are as stated by him. The material was prepared, as I recollect, at a time when I was temporarily absent from the office, and lay on my desk for several days before I saw it.

It was in no sense an order or instruction. There are five ways used for communication in the central office, and to central office representatives in the field.

1. Through the general regulations of the board, referred to as miscellaneous 150 revised.
2. Through a series of instruction letters numbered serially.
3. Through a series of information letters, also numbered serially.
4. Through memorandums usually used only in central office.
5. Through notes always used only in central office, and which are not of as lasting interest as the memorandums.

The first three of the above have the force of orders, and are signed by the chief of the Division of Rehabilitation. The last two are used as recommendations on which orders or instructions are later issued. The material above referred to was in none of these classes.

I did not know until Mr. Brigham's statement, attached hereto, was handed to me that the material prepared by him in October was intended to be sent out of the office, or was sent out by anyone. It certainly did not go out to my knowledge in any official letters of the board. Mr. Carl Becker, one of our field representatives wrote me from Oklahoma City on November 14, inclosing what purported to be an original copy of the statement.

When I got his letter, I asked Mr. Hamilton, the supervisor of training, under whose general direction Mr. Becker was working, if he sent a copy of the material to Mr. Becker. He told me that either Mr. Becker got an original copy before it had been shown to me, or that such copy had been sent him by mistake. I told Mr. Hamilton that no such material should be sent out by anyone connected with this office, and promptly wrote Mr. Becker under date of November 19. The following paragraphs of that letter to Mr. Becker are quoted:

"I am glad to have the Helpful Hints to Central Office Case Board Representatives, which you sent me. As written, this has not been sent out by central office. This draft was submitted to the chief and was not approved. I have taken the matter up with Mr. Hamilton and find that the original draft went to you without authority. There is no reason for central office to be 'hard boiled' nor for any man representing central office to be 'hard boiled.' Men who are sent out from central office are expected to give the soldiers the benefit of the doubt, as the central office case board is expected to give them the benefit of the doubt. The recommendations of the district medical officer must be taken regarding the nature of a man's disability. It will not be overruled by central office except in rare cases or where the soldier receives the benefit. Central office case board representatives are expected to see that all the information necessary from a legal standpoint is in the case.

"With that exception, they are not expected to 'split hairs' in approving or disapproving a man's case."

The language of the statement shows it was never intended for an order, or instruction, or to be sent out. The fact that it was not signed by anyone also shows it was not so intended.

In order to determine as rapidly as possible whether or not men whose names were in our files, were entitled to vocational training, and to notify them, and to prevent the delay which resulted from sending all files and papers to Washington, we have sent out to various district offices: First, individual representatives or so-called central office case board representatives, and later, groups of men called eligibility squads.

These men were to pass on the legal evidence in the files, and so the interviewing of the disabled men, and the securing of legal evidence naturally had to be left to the men in the district offices. The representatives sent out from this office can not interview disabled men, and at the same time pass on a large number of cases. Every instruction and order has been to give the disabled soldier the benefit of the doubt, and every effort has been made to keep the men sent out from central office at the work which I believed would expedite action, and which could only be expedited by their time not being taken up by conversation or "visiting" with members of the district staffs. In other words, I believed the efficiency of the organization could be promoted by insisting that these central office representatives who were to maintain uniform standards throughout the country, fair to the disabled man, and fair to the Government, giving the disabled man the benefit of the doubt, confine themselves to the work which they were sent out to do. An attempt to increase the efficiency of a Government employee should not be the subject of severe criticism.

Digitized by Google

The figures for September 15, and for March 1, in this connection may be of interest:

	Sept. 15	Mar. 1.
Number approved for training under section 2	17,000	55,000
Number approved for section 3 training	500	22,000
Number deemed ineligible in training on the evidence in the files	15,000	48,000
Total definite decisions rendered	32,500	125,000

It should be remembered that a large per cent of the men serving on central office case board were ex-service men. Mr. Brigham himself is an ex-service man, having in addition, a very high civil-service rating. The present central office case board which acts on appeals from the decisions adverse to claims, is composed of eight men, one of whom, a veteran of the Spanish-American War, was physically incapacitated for service in the late war, one was in the Engineer Corps, and the other six saw overseas service as line officers.

As to my attitude toward the disabled men, and as to instructions and orders written, or which I have sent out, it has always been to be fair to the men and to the Government, giving the disabled man the benefit of the doubt. I should be glad to see the provisions of the present rehabilitation law liberalized to such an extent that every man who suffered any disability could have the training he needed, if he wanted it, but such is not the provision of the present law.

It may be of some value in determining my attitude toward the disabled man to know that so far as I can remember, while I was in charge of the office at St. Louis, or temporarily in charge at Philadelphia, or New York, or since I have been here as chief of this division, I have never declined to personally see any disabled man who asked to see me personally, nor have I declined to see anyone else who asked to see me, either an employee or not an employee, whatever his business. Nor have I kept any individual waiting any length of time, but frequently I have had to refer them to others for action where their matters would consume any length of time.

As my resignation was placed in your hands shortly after I became chief of the division, to become effective at your pleasure, so that you would not feel bound to retain me in my present position because I am under the civil service, and was not subject to removal except after charges are filed, and also, as you have, so far, not accepted it, and as you have approved the regulations which have gone out in Miscellaneous 150, and in the instruction and information series, all of which are subject to review, I am sure that the statement which I have expressed regarding my attitude toward the disabled soldier is approved by all the members of the board.

Very truly, yours,

UEL W. LAMKIN,
Chief, Division of Rehabilitation.

Mr. ROBSION. How long is it? On that one point, I just wanted to know who wrote that order if it was written?

Mr. MUNROE. You will notice that he says that he transmits the report made by Mr. Brigham.

Mr. ROBSION. You need not read that all. But did he write it according to the report. Who prepared that so-called hard boiled order in the New York office or wherever it was?

Mr. MUNROE. There was no order prepared. There never was an order of any kind.

Mr. ROBSION. Would you want to put that report in the record?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. As long as there seems to be so much misunderstanding about it, I think we had better.

Mr. ROBSION. Let it go in the record.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION. Is there with that record a copy of the so-called order, whatever it was, hard-boiled, that related to the soldiers or anybody else?

Mr. MUNROE. Let me repeat, sir. There never was an order, hard-boiled, or any other kind along those lines. The thing was entitled, "Helpful Hints to Central Office Case-Board Representatives."

Mr. ROBSION. Is there a copy of that Helpful Hints in there?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; it is embodied in Mr. Brigham's report or statement.

Mr. ROBSION. How many pages does it cover?

Mr. MUNROE. The Helpful Hints? It covers about 1 page.

Mr. ROBSION. I wish you would read that?

Mr. MUNROE. The Helpful Hints?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Is that embraced in the report of Mr. Lamkin which you have already put into the record?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin made a formal report as requested by the standing committee and embodied in it this statement by Mr. Brigham.

Mr. TOWNER. And that you have already offered for the record?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir. Do you wish me to read it?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Very well.

(The statement referred to, previously quoted from and including the Helpful Hints is as follows:)

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION,
DIVISION OF REHABILITATION FOR
DISABLED SOLDIERS, SAILORS, AND MARINES,
Washington, D. C., March 6, 1920.

Statement of Carl C. Brigham to Chief Division of Rehabilitation concerning the origin of an unofficial statement known as Helpful Hints to C. O. C. B. Representatives.

An unofficial statement entitled "Helpful Hints to C. O. C. B. Representatives" was prepared by me some time in October, 1919, to be forwarded to representatives of the central office case board working in the district offices. The original copy of this unofficial statement is not in my possession, and to the best of my knowledge and belief at that time the original and all copies of the original were destroyed.

About 10 copies of this unofficial statement were prepared and before being submitted to the chief of division were shown to three members of the staff of central office at that time. After showing the statement to these three persons I collected, as I thought, all the copies and placed them on your desk. It is possible that one of these copies was mislaid, picked up by a clerk, and sent out by mistake. This is, however, a supposition. After that evening I saw the original copy only after certain sentences had been deleted by you. I handed the copies to a typist and had 10 or 12 copies prepared. These copies were mailed by me to the five or six central office case board representatives in the field and given to the members of the eligibility squad then in training in central office, consisting of 8 or 10 men.

HELPFUL HINTS FOR C. O. C. B. REPRESENTATIVES.

"1. As representative of the central office case board you are to give individual rulings on individual cases. General rulings originate at central office. Don't make any yourself.

"2. You are to pass on cases, and whenever you think out loud see that the thought is placed on paper and is then placed in the man's folder.

Digitized by Google

"3. Don't argue with the district office staff. Tell them to write central office if they don't like your judgment.

"4. Don't speculate. If a fact exists, the existence of the fact can be proved on a piece of paper. Accept legal proof and don't trust to hearsay evidence. If any member of a district staff knows a lot more about a case than is in the folder, tell him to dictate it and get the D. V. O. to sign it. Don't listen to him. It wastes time.

"5. The organs used in approving cases are the eyes and the brain.

"6. Don't gossip. If a man tells you a tale of woe in one district, don't tell it in the next district. You are not sent out to arrange salary readjustments, or to install filing systems, but to approve cases.

"7. Keep your opinions to yourself. If you believe one section is more efficient than another section or one district more efficient than another, keep it to yourself.

"8. Members of the district office staffs will beat you over the head with verbal pressure. District pressure causes many of our mistakes. Put cotton in your ears and lock the door.

"9. District office staffs believe that any one from Central Office is full of wisdom. You will preserve this good impression, if you don't talk.

"10. Whenever you draw a conclusion, draw it in duplicate and forward one copy to central office.

"11. Accept advice from central office. Take all the cigarettes you can get from members of the district office staff, but no advice. The district office will never crawl you for approving cases in error, but central office will. Don't get mad when you get crawled, but come back with the evidence. If the evidence wasn't there, don't do it again."

The copies sent out were not signed by the chief of division or anybody else. No instructions were given me to send them out. The chief of division did not approve the copy and issued no instructions that they be sent.

In explanation of the reasons for issuing this circular I wish to call your attention to certain factors which lead to its reparation.

The first stimulus to the preparation of this circular was a complaint received by me that one of the traveling representatives carried word from one district to another that a member of one district staff would like a transfer to another district, and then carried word back to the man concerned that his transfer would be highly acceptable and possibly at an increased salary. The transfer would have disrupted the organization of the district from which the man was transferred and the person making the complaint was entirely justified. Another complaint was received that another representative dropped a suggestion in one district that another district was more efficient in some respects. To meet these complaints the following paragraphs were inserted:

"6. Don't gossip. If a man tells you a tale of woe in one district, don't tell it in the next district. You are not sent out to arrange salary readjustments, or to install filing systems, but to approve cases.

"7. Keep your opinions to yourself. If you believe one section is more efficient than another section or one district more efficient than another, keep it to yourself."

Another difficulty at the time of the preparation of this circular resulted from the fact that the district offices were inclined to generalize on the basis of rulings made on individual cases and that our traveling representatives were inclined to make general rulings. You will probably remember that about this time one district office wrote to us stating that a central office man had rated a case of otitis media "major" and that if this case were rated "major" they had 5,000 other cases which must be rated "major" also. Our case board representatives were instructed to pass on the individual cases on their merits and not to generalize. All matters of general policy were submitted to the chief of division. To overcome this tendency the following paragraphs were inserted:

"1. As representatives of the central office case board you are to give individual rulings on individual cases. General rulings originate at central office. Don't make any yourself.

"9. District office staffs believe that anyone from central office is full of wisdom. You will preserve this good impression, if you don't talk."

Another difficulty at that time resulted from the failure of the district offices in some instances to transmit to central office the evidence on which a decision was based, and the failure of our case board representatives in some instances to specify the evidence on which his decision was based. It was the policy of central office to have the actual evidence on which the award was based in our files, so that any question as to the legality of any award or the authorization of payments could be answered. If the question of the legality of payments ever came up, there would be no record in the iolder of any conversation held in a district office, although the facts developed in this conversation might clearly indicate that the man was in need of training. Another difficulty of the same sort arose from the fact that in some instances cases were disapproved verbally by a case-board representative with the statement that he would approve it if certain evidence were secured. The representative would then leave the district and the case would be presented to another man with the statement that the first man said it would be approved, if certain evidence were supplied. To overcome these difficulties the following paragraphs were inserted:

Digitized by Google

"2. You are to pass on cases and whenever you think out loud see that the thought is placed on paper and is then placed in the man's folder."

"4. Don't speculate. If a fact exists, the existence of the fact can be proved on a piece of paper. Accept legal proof and don't trust to hearsay evidence. If any member of a district staff knows a lot more about a case than is in the folder, tell him to dictate it, and get the D. V. O. to sign it. Don't listen to him. It wastes time."

"10. Whenever you draw a conclusion, draw it in duplicate and forward one copy to central office."

"11. Accept advice from central office. Take all the cigarettes you can get from members of the district staff, but no advice. The district office will never crawl you for approving cases in error, but central office will. Don't get mad when you get crawled, but come back with the evidence. If the evidence wasn't there—don't do again."

Our greatest difficulty at the time this circular was written resulted from the fact that there was an enormous amount of work to be done by a very few men. It was impossible to obtain additional men and it was frequently necessary for our representatives to cover three and sometimes four offices a week. In some instances it was necessary to move them so rapidly that a man left a district with a number of cases ready for decision unacted upon. The representatives worked day and night in their effort to clear the load, and they should have been protected from interference. On the other hand, members of the district office staffs were very much interested in practically all of these cases on which definite action was to be taken. The members of the district staff were in contact with the man and deeply interested in his welfare, as they should have been. On the other hand the case-board representative, interested in all the men, as well as in individuals, had more work to do in a given time than he could accomplish. If there were 200 cases ready for decision, a representative could spend all of the time talking over 10 cases and be forced to leave 190 cases until his next visit. The stress of the work sometimes made it necessary for representatives to refuse to talk. This was why they were advised to "put cotton in their ears and lock the door," and to work nights. This attitude was encouraged in order that the work might progress more rapidly.

The artificial relationship which resulted from the stress of work sometimes caused friction between the central office representatives and some members of the district staffs, but on the whole the offices realized the strain our men were working under and the man was given a quiet room and interference prohibited. On account of the time element and the necessity of drastic action, paragraph 3 was inserted as follows:

"3. Don't argue with the district office staff. Tell them to write central office if they don't like your judgment."

and also paragraph—

"8. Members of the district office staffs will beat you over the head with verbal pressure. District pressure causes many of our mistakes. Put cotton in your ears and lock the door."

It was in paragraph 8 that the words "hard boiled" and "naturally sympathetic" appeared in the original draft, from which they were stricken out. The "hard boiled" phrase and the "naturally sympathetic" phrase had no reference to the attitude of the central office representative toward the claim of the disabled man and applied only to the very difficult but entirely necessary relationship he was forced to maintain with the members of the district office staff. In passing on the cases of disabled men the case-board representatives have always been instructed to give the disabled man the benefit of the doubt, and any change in their policy must come from a change in the vocational rehabilitation act liberalizing the provisions of section 2. In this connection the paragraph "The organs used in approving cases are the eyes and the brain" should be discussed. When a man makes application for training under section 2 of the vocational rehabilitation act, it is necessary that four conditions be met:

(a) That the man has been discharged from the service under honorable conditions since April 6, 1917.

(b) That he has a disability that was incurred in the service or is traceable to the service.

Digitized by Google

(c) That his disability constitutes a vocational handicap.
(d) That training from a mental and physical standpoint is feasible.

There may be many other social and economic reasons why a man should receive support, but none of these social and economic reasons legally entitles a man to training. In taking this position your case board representatives have adopted the spirit and letter of the law as expressed in the act of Congress.

In conclusion I wish to apologize for the manner and style in which this circular was written. It was intended for a limited number of persons, all of whom were capable of interpreting it correctly and who did interpret it correctly. That the communication may be very easily misinterpreted is evidenced by the storm of protest following the publication of the copy disapproved by you. It would have been a very easy matter to write the same instructions in such a manner that the same points would be covered and the same difficulties overcome without rendering the board liable to attack on account of misinterpretation. I regret exceedingly that my unfortunate expression has placed you and the members of the board in such an embarrassing predicament and wish to state to you again what I have previously stated verbally that my resignation from the service will be placed before you any time you express your willingness to accept it.

CARL C. BRIGHAM.

MARCH 6, 1920.

Please remember that this central office case board was sent out to pass upon cases which had already been passed upon by the district office. The central office case board never came in contact with the boys at all and these hints were for their relations and their attitude toward the employees of the district offices.

Mr. ROBSION. You say that instruction is for whom?

Mr. MUNROE. To the representatives. It is a memorandum, as I understand it, as stated here, to be passed around, a few copies among the central office case board representatives who were going out to pass upon cases to give the central office stamp of approval or disapproval on cases that were acted upon and settled by the district offices.

Mr. ROBSION. Who was your representative in New York at that time from the central office?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not say without looking up the record.

Mr. ROBSION. Did each fellow that went out have one of them?

Mr. MUNROE. Just a few of them.

Mr. ROBSION. How many were prepared?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Brigham here says 10 or 12 copies were prepared.

Mr. ROBSION. Did he have one himself?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Brigham?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. I presume so.

Mr. ROBSION. Was he the district representative—I mean the central office representative—at the New York office?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. What was he?

Mr. MUNROE. What was Mr. Brigham at that time? He was sort of a general utility man, was he not, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. ROBSION. But he represented the central office here at Washington, did he not?

Mr. MUNROE. As far as any member of the staff represents the office.

Mr. ROBSION. What I mean is, that he was not connected with the New York office. He was connected with the central office?

Mr. MUNROE. He has never been connected with the New York office as far as I know.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. He was sent up to New York to help straighten out things?

Mr. MUNROE. I should have to ask Mr. Lamkin. I do not remember the details.

Mr. ROBSION. Does Mr. Brigham say in the report there to him he gave those orders?

Mr. MUNROE. Do you wish me to read his statement?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE (reading):

An unofficial statement entitled "Helpful hints to C. O. C. B. representatives" was prepared by me some time in October, 1919, to be forwarded to representatives of the central office case board working in the district offices. The original copy of this unofficial statement is not in my possession, and to the best of my knowledge and belief at that time the original and all copies of the original were destroyed.

About 10 copies of this unofficial statement were prepared and before being submitted to the chief of the division were shown to three members of the staff of central office at that time. After showing the statement to these three persons I collected, as I thought, all the copies and placed them on your desk.

This is addressed to Mr. Lamkin:

It is possible that one of these copies was mislaid, picked up by a clerk and sent out by mistake. This is, however, a supposition. After that evening I saw the original copy only after certain sentences had been deleted by you. I handed the copies to a typist and had 10 or 12 copies prepared. These copies were mailed by me to the five or six central office case board representatives in the field and given to the members of the eligibility squad then in training in central office, consisting of 8 or 10 men.

The rest I have already read.

Mr. ROBSION. When he says he "put it on his desk," he is referring to Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes; it is addressed to Mr. Lamkin.

Mr. ROBSION. Then he says that certain sentences were left out.

Mr. MUNROE. He refers to the chief.

Mr. ROBSION. He says that certain sentences were deleted and that he did have some of the copies prepared.

Mr. MUNROE. That is in what I have read to you.

Mr. ROBSION. And sent out to the district offices?

Mr. MUNROE. That is his statement; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. So then there is ground, as claimed by Mr. Reid of the Philadelphia office and Mr. Meyer of the New York office and the New York Evening Post, that this so-called order was sent out from the central office?

Mr. MUNROE. But it is not an order in any sense, manner, or shape.

Mr. ROBSION. Well, instructions?

Mr. MUNROE. It was not an instruction. It was a memorandum. It was not signed by anybody or addressed to anybody.

Mr. ROBSION. Well, who sent it out?

Mr. MUNROE. If I may read further—this is still Mr. Brigham's statement:

The copies sent out were not signed by the chief of division or anybody else. No instructions were given me to send them out. The chief of division did not approve the copy and issued no instructions that they be sent.

In explanation of the reasons for issuing this circular I wish to call your attention to certain factors which led to its preparation.

Mr. ROBSION. You need not go any further than that.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. I think it is very essential, now that the thing has been questioned, that Mr. Brigham should be allowed to give his statement.

Mr. ROBSION. I asked you a specific question. It is already in the record. I was going to ask you for an answer to my question. All of that is in the record. I have asked that it be put in the record

Now will you read my question?

(The reporter read the question as follows: "So then there is ground, as claimed by Mr. Reid of the Philadelphia office and Mr. Meyer of the New York office and the New York Evening Post, that this so-called order was sent out from the central office?")

Did this gentleman who prepared that memorandum, as you call it, or suggestion—did he visit other district offices?

Mr. MUNROE. You will have to ask Mr. Lamkin. I am not familiar with these administrative details.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, the man sent out to the district office, was it his business to cooperate with the district office staff?

Mr. MUNROE. To cooperate with them; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. But if the instructions had been followed that are set out in that circular or order or instructions, there would have been no cooperation, would there?

Mr. MUNROE. Oh, yes; certainly; because these instructions had nothing absolutely to do with the disabled soldier, but they were given to these men in order to stimulate them not to waste their time by idle talk and gossip with the district officers.

Mr. ROBSION. But it did instruct the district office staff to keep their ears closed?

Mr. MUNROE. Not to the soldier, but to the district people.

Mr. ROBSION. Let me ask you now—to keep their ears closed and to listen to nothing, information or advice from the district staff, did it not?

Mr. MUNROE. In order that these cases might be——

Mr. ROBSION (interposing). Now, don't argue, Mr. Munroe; but isn't that the fact?

Mr. MUNROE. I wish to explain the fact. It is in order that nothing shall—that no man shall be put in training on hearsay or statements that are not put down in writing. It was merely business advice to do this thing in a businesslike way.

Mr. ROBSION. But since this was a human problem and he was sent up there to cooperate, or for the various district offices to cooperate, then why should he be instructed not to take any advice from the district officers but to be an autocrat and supreme in himself, as that order would indicate?

Mr. MUNROE. As this thing is not an order; as it has no official standing; and as I knew nothing about it till I saw it in the New York Evening Post, I do not see why I should be asked to justify something that did not exist as an order.

Mr. ROBSION. I am not asking you to justify it; I don't think there is any justification for it; but, Mr. Munroe, if it went to Mr. Lamkin and he cut out a part of it, and the part he did not cut out was approved, evidently then this man who visited the various district offices to line up things—didn't he have the authority—didn't Mr. Lamkin have the authority to issue that sort of instructions?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. You will have to question Mr. Lamkin himself on that.

Mr. ROBSION. But you are the head of the bureau, of the department, and Mr. Lamkin gets his orders from you; don't you say that Mr. Lamkin had the authority to pass upon and issue an instruction such as was issued by this man Brigham?

Mr. MUNROE. Mr. Lamkin has authority to issue orders on administrative matters, of course.

Mr. ROBSION. Well, now, if this was written up by Mr. Brigham and submitted to Mr. Lamkin, and Mr. Lamkin cut out what he though was the objectionable part and turned it over then to Mr. Brigham to have printed and copies made of it, and those were sent out from the central office, then do you say that it was without authority?

Mr. MUNROE. The other reporter has taken that letter. I wanted to read from Mr. Brigham's statement in which he says this memorandum never was approved by Mr. Lamkin or ordered to be sent out by him.

Mr. ROBSION. So then it is your contention that Mr. Brigham acted without authority?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. When did you find that out, that he acted without authority?

Mr. MUNROE. When this report was made to me.

Mr. ROBSION. What date is that?

Mr. MUNROE. In March, I think it was.

Mr. ROBSION. And where is Mr. Brigham now?

Mr. MUNROE. He is in the central office.

Mr. ROBSION. Has he been promoted or permitted to remain in the same position?

Mr. MUNROE. It had absolutely nothing to do with the disabled soldier. There is nothing reprehensible in the thing at all.

Mr. ROBSION. But you say there is nothing reprehensible when a man in the central office here sends out instructions to the district offices when he did not have authority to do it?

Mr. MUNROE. They were not instructions, sir. I have repeated that many times. They were not instructions; they were not signed; they had none of the character of instructions at all.

Mr. ROBSION. Well, I want to ask you this, Mr. Munroe. Would you approve, then, that suggestion or instruction written up by Mr. Brigham? Do you approve of it?

Mr. MUNROE. Because it is capable of misinterpretation, I disapprove of it on that ground.

Mr. ROBSION. Is that the only ground on which you disapprove of it?

Mr. MUNROE. That is all.

Mr. ROBSION. So then you don't want it in writing, but so far as you are concerned you would want these men who go from the central office to the district offices to close their ears and take no advice from anybody—to take cigarettes, but no advice. You want them to act in that manner?

Mr. MUNROE. I would not have phrased it in that way, of course.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Would that be justified on any grounds, an instruction like that going to a central office man when he was right in with the staff and with the work at the district office? Must there not be closer cooperation between the men that can talk and advise with each other over these important matters?

Mr. MUNROE. There is the very closest cooperation between the central office and the district offices.

Mr. ROBSION. Could there be a situation where the central representative should go to the district office and close his ears entirely to what the district head should say or what the district staff should say? Should they do that in any district in this United States, in either of the 14 districts?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And you would not approve of that being sent out, would you?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, what did you say to Mr. Brigham for sending out a thing like that?

Mr. MUNROE. I reprimanded him.

Mr. ROBSION. You reprimanded him?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Have you at any time put anyone in authority in your place as assistant vice chairman? I will put it this way: This memorandum that was prepared by Mr. Brigham, which you say was not an order, and which he had printed and sent out to the representatives that were going out to the district offices, if I understand you, Mr. Brigham's position on the matter was—and your position—that this was only a memoranda or instructions to be given to and used by a central offices representative that should be sent to and stationed in a district office somewhere.

Mr. MUNROE. Not an instruction; it was merely a memorandum.

Mr. ROBSION. And it was a suggestion as to his line of conduct or the relation between the central office representative and the district office head and staff; is that true?

Mr. MUNROE. The district office; not the head, but the representatives with whom he would come in contact.

Mr. ROBSION. I would like to inquire, Mr. Munroe, if at any time you appointed your stenographer vice chairman.

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Well, didn't you designate her vice chairman and have her to sign important legal matters—I mean departmental matters?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I sign all documents—and there are thousands of them—myself. When I have to be absent, they are signed by other members of the standing committee as acting vice chairman.

Mr. ROBSION. And after she had been acting for some time, didn't some head of one of the departments—the Department of Justice—advise you that she could not be vice chairman?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; she never served as vice chairman.

Mr. ROBSION. That never occurred at all? Didn't you at one time write out such an authority and give it to your clerk or stenographer?

Mr. MUNROE. Not that I have the slightest recollection of.

Mr. ROBSION. Which was signed by you, in which she was authorized to act as vice chairman of this important board?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. And didn't she undertake to act in that capacity in violation of the law?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you know anything about the contract made between either the central office here or the Philadelphia office with that Mr. Borland of Pittsburgh, in which he is paid $35 per month tuition for each student, and guaranteed a certain number of students per month?

Mr. MUNROE. I approved that contract, as I have to approve all contracts.

Mr. ROBSION. And have you learned how much money Mr. Borland has made out of that?

Mr. MUNROE. I have reason to believe that he is not more than coming out square, if he is not even losing money.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you know how many students he has in his school?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not say without looking up the figures. I haven't them in mind.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you know how many students he has?

Mr. MUNROE. I would have to look that up.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you know how many teachers he has?

Mr. MUNROE. Those figures I would have to look up; I haven't them in mind.

Mr. ROBSION. You don't know what his expenses are?

Mr. MUNROE. I would have to look that up.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, how could you say, Mr. Munroe, that he was just about coming out square?

Mr. MUNROE. From my experience with that kind of thing. I have been associated with educational institutions most of my life, and I know what that sort of thing costs, and consequently I believe the figure which he is paid is a reasonable figure.

Mr. ROBSION. If conditions obtain, as the witnesses claim do obtain in New York, who is responsible for it?

Mr. MUNROE. I don't acknowledge that those conditions do obtain.

Mr. ROBSION. I say if they do obtain.

Mr. MUNROE. That is a supposition that I can not agree to.

Mr. ROBSION. I am not asking you to agree to it. There are quite a number of men who have come here and testified about it, and some men I feel that are disinterested, and have given quite a good deal of damaging testimony about conditions in New York. I would like to know now if the conditions obtain as they say they obtain, who is responsible?

Mr. MUNROE. Naturally the district vocational officer would be responsible.

Mr. ROBSION. And you would feel it would not be the central office here at Washington?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; because the district offices have very great freedom in the management of their own offices.

Mr. ROBSION. And if the condition obtained in Philadelphia, as described by witnesses, who was responsible for that?

Mr. MUNROE. If they exist, which I do not acknowledge, of course, the district vocational officer would be responsible there.

Mr. ROBSION. And do you claim that he is all right, the Philadelphia man?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. I do not claim that anybody is perfect. I claim he is doing a very good job.

Mr. ROBSION. And you claim that for the 14 districts in the country?

Mr. MUNROE. Considering the very difficult conditions under which all the offices have to work I think they are doing a very good job.

Mr. ROBSION. What I mean is, you feel that it is reasonably good, as good as could be expected in the work?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And you could not get other men to do it better, with any reasonable effort?

Mr. MUNROE. Not at the figures we are permitted to pay.

Mr. ROBSION. When did you reprimand Mr. Brigham for putting out this memorandum?

Mr. MUNROE. When I got the report that he claimed he was responsible for it.

Mr. ROBSION. What was the nature of your reprimand?

Mr. MUNROE. I don't remember the words I used. I reprimanded him as one does an employee.

Mr. ROBSION. Did you talk, as we say, pretty straight to him?

Mr. MUNROE. I did.

Mr. ROBSION. And tell him he should not do that again, and so on?

Mr. MUNROE. I did.

Mr. ROBSION. Or did you write to him?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I talked to him.

Mr. TOWNER. The hearing will be adjourned until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

(Whereupon, at 2.50 o'clock p. m., the committee adjourned until 10 o'clock a. m., Saturday, May 1, 1920).

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Saturday, May 1, 1920.

The committee met at 10 o'clock a. m., Hon. Horace M. Towner presiding.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Munroe, you may take the stand again.

STATEMENT OF MR. JAMES P. MUNROE, VICE CHAIRMAN FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION—Resumed.

Mr. BURROUGHS Mr. Munroe, I want to call your attention to a letter which appears to have been written by a young man by the name of Troy, Joseph A. Troy, jr., who gives his address as 723 St. Louis Avenue, East St. Louis, Ill. The letter is written to Mr. Harold Littledale, and I call attention to it simply to inquire why it is that such letters as this seem to be so frequent. I presume I might find a number of them in my own files. He says:

Mr. LITTLEDALE.

DEAR SIR: I read recently an article written by you concerning the unspeakable manner in which the Federal Board for Vocational Training has been treating the disabled service men.

I was wounded in France, June, 1918, and spent eight months in the hospital recovering from an injured spine and a gunshot wound through my foot, which causes me to limp slightly. The Federal board sent me to school these last seven months, and although I have only one more year until I get my legal degree, they tell me if I want to go another year they will give me only section 3 training, if any at all. I do not live with my folks, so if I do not get this last year I will have to forfeit my degree. I feel that I am justly entitled to it and am ready to substantiate my claim to them, but I may as well talk to the wall.

The letter seems to indicate a feeling on the young man's part that he can not get justice. Now, if this were an isolated or an individual case, I would perhaps be inclined to feel that it was due to some idiosyncrasy or peculiarity of the young man himself, but where the letters come and keep coming from all sides, I just wonder if you have any explanation to make of it. I am wondering myself what explanation I can make to satisfy my own mind.

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, I could not answer in this particular case without looking up the circumstances, but I would presume from what he states there that it was a question of the interpretation of the law; that is, under the law as it reads he was not entitled to anything except section 3 training, but, of course, I would have to verify that by looking into the case.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes. It seems from this young man's letter that he had actually had the training with compensation for some number of months—for seven months he says—but that for some reason that training had now been stopped.

Mr. MUNROE. Well, as I say, I will have to look into the case. I could not express an opinion on it without having an opportunity to look into the circumstances.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Is that a usual occurrence, to have a young man given the section 2 training, or training with compensation, and then have that changed over to section 3 training?

Mr. MUNROE. There are a great many cases where the boy under a strict interpretation of the law would be entitled to nothing but section 3 training. We have stretched the law so far as to give them at least one year, and in some cases two years under section 2, with the understanding, which in most cases the boys understand, he will be transferred to section 3 training; but some time ago the board voted that in practically all cases where the boy had had one year under section 2, it should be continued automatically for another year. I presume this would come under that general ruling.

Mr. BURROUGHS. This young man has not had quite a year.

Mr. MUNROE. Well, of course, by year we mean the college year.

Mr. BURROUGHS. He has had seven months of it, but now he has been told that he can not have any more of it.

Mr. MUNROE. As I say, I should have to get the facts in the case before I could express an opinion on it.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Munroe, it seems that this man had a considerable disability. He says he was wounded in France June, 1918, and spent eight months in the hospital, "recovering from an injured spine and a gunshot wound through my foot, which causes me to limp slightly." That would indicate at least the right to training with compensation, would it not?

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, the law reads that he is not entitled to training and compensation unless he is unable to "carry on" in his former or in some other occupation. Of course, we never hew close to the line on that. If we did, thousands of these boys would be shut out. We always lean to the side of giving the boy all that is possible without too great disobedience to the law.

Mr. TOWNER. I think you should be able to answer promptly upon that proposition. This man spent eight months in the hospital with spinal trouble and besides that a wound that causes him still to limp; is there any question about his being entitled to compensation?

Mr. MUNROE. That is his own statement, of course. We have not the medical certification——

Mr. TOWNER. Why do you hesitate about answering that?

Mr. MUNROE. Because, sir, I do not know the circumstances.

Mr. TOWNER. But can you not know the circumstances from the statements that this man makes?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. If they are true?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; but I want the medical verification.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me say, frankly, that if that is the attitude of the department with regard to cases of that kind, it accounts for all of these complaints and even more complaints than are coming; that is, if that is the attitude of the very head of the board with regard to these matters. I must confess that I am very much surprised.

Mr. MUNROE. Well, as I have said, sir, we always give the boy the benefit of the doubt, even when he does not strictly come within the terms of the law.

Mr. TOWNER. But you say you do not know from the statement that this man makes whether or not he is entitled to the training?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; because we can not take the boy's unsupported statement as to his condition.

Mr. TOWNER. But I am assuming it is true.

Mr. MUNROE. Well, if it is true, then, of course, we would give him the two or three years, whatever it is.

Mr. TOWNER. That is what I asked you, and yet you hesitated about answering.

Mr. MUNROE. I misunderstood you then, sir. Of course, if the statement is true, then there is no question about his getting it.

Mr. TOWNER. Have you any doubt about the statement being true?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not say——

Mr. TOWNER. Here this man has been in training for seven months without compensation; is not that a determination of the fact that he is entitled to the training with compensation?

Mr. MUNROE. As I say, it may have been one of those cases where he strictly was not entitled to any training except under section 3, and we gave him the benefit of the doubt by giving him one year under section 2, but I really ought not to express an opinion on the case, because I do not know the details of it.

Mr. TOWNER. I am not asking about the case in particular; I am asking about the facts assuming they are true.

Mr. MUNROE. Well, as I have stated——

Mr. TOWNER. You have already stated several times that you did act upon the assumption that these statements made by the boys were true.

Mr. MUNROE. Provided, of course, there is medical verification. The law requires that.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, I think we may assume that the young man having been seven months in training was entitled to this training with compensation, he having had the training with compensation during that time. Now, what justification would there be, that being true—and assuming it was justifiably so—what justification would there be of depriving him of the year that would be necessary for him to complete his course?

Mr. MUNROE. Assuming that the statement which he makes is actually so——

Mr. TOWNER. You need not repeat that over and over again, Mr. Munroe. I am assuming that it is true, and I tell you I want you to assume it is true before you answer.

Mr. MUNROE. Do I understand, then, that the Congress wishes us to disobey the law by not getting medical verification, which the law requires?

Mr. TOWNER. I am not asking you anything about that. I am asking you what you do. What is the practice of the board? We will draw our own conclusions from that proposition.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. The practice of the board, as I have said, sir, is always to give the boy the benefit of the doubt, and give him the very most that he possibly could have under the most liberal interpretation of the law. That has been our attitude always.

Mr. TOWNER. Why do you not answer the question? The question is whether there is any reason or justification for stopping the young man's training after he has had seven months of it.

Mr. MUNROE. I stated that there had been a general ruling of the board that where a boy had one year's training it should be continued automatically for a second year.

Mr. TOWNER. I wish you would report fully about this case and, if necessary, use the telegraph and present the records of the matter to the committee before the hearing is closed.

Mr. MUNROE. I will be very glad to, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. We asked you something, Mr. Munroe, yesterday, about Mr. Carl Brigham, and, as I understand, you reprimanded him some time in March. Did you promote Mr. Brigham after you reprimanded him?

Mr. MONROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Has he not been promoted?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; his duties have been changed somewhat. Mr. Matthews resigned to take a position paying him two or three times as much money as he was getting from us, and so we put Mr. Brigham in charge of the work Mr. Matthews had been in charge of.

Mr. ROBSION. Does he get an increase of salary in that position?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. It is a position of more responsibility than he had, is it not?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I think not. It is just a different responsibility, but no greater responsibility.

Mr. ROBSION. What is the difference in salary in the two positions.

Mr. MUNROE. As I say, there was no increase in salary so far as I know.

Mr. ROBSION. I understand; but what salary did Mr. Brigham get? What was Mr. Brigham's salary?

Mr. MUNROE. $3,600.

Mr. ROBSION. What was Mr. Matthew's salary?

Mr. MUNROE. $4,000.

Mr. ROBSION. Well, it is reasonable to assume, is it not, that the $4,000 position is a position of more responsibility than the $3,600 position?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I think not in this case. I think Mr. Brigham has had fully as much responsibility in the work he has been doing as in this new position. The new position is one more of routine work than the other work he was doing.

Mr. ROBSION. In reading this report that you filed yesterday from Mr. Lamkin, I observe that this so-called instruction or hard-boiled order, as it has been some times designated, was sent out in October, and sent to the Oklahoma district officer to Mr. Becker, did you know about that?

Mr. MUNROE. I read Mr. Lamkin's report.

Mr. ROBSION. That was sent from the central office here in Washington?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. If Mr. Lamkin so reported.

Mr. ROBSION. And as it was sent out to the Oklahoma office it was in its original form and no part of it had been deleted, had it?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not know, sir. I have not Mr. Lamkin's report at hand.

Mr. ROBSION. You filed excerpts or extracts from quite a number of letters you had received that spoke in words of commendation of the board, and I am glad you did that; but is it not true that the only letters that you filed or excerpts from letters that you filed were from ex-service men whose cases had been passed upon favorably and were under section 2 training and were receiving the training?

Mr. MUNROE. As I remember it, the letters were from men who were in training.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, could you not file many times more letters from fellows whose cases had not been passed upon?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir. If it came to a question of mere numbers, the number of men who would approve and be grateful for what we had done for them would be far in excess, many times in excess, of those finding fault.

Mr. ROBSION. If I understood the testimony of the witnesses from New York, there were more letters of condemnation there than you have mentioned in your testimony at that one office. Do they make any report to your office about these letters they are receiving?

Mr. MUNROE. Not to me personally; no.

Mr. ROBSION. Did you know a Mr. Harvey, of New York?

Mr. MUNROE. A Mr. Harvey?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. Connected with our organization?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MUNROE. I do not remember any such name; no, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. I think he is employed or retained in some way to get up exhibits.

Mr. MUNROE. Oh, there was a Mr. Harvey who was employed, I believe, by the order of Elks.

Mr. ROBSION. Did you have any consultations with him?

Mr. MUNROE. I met him once; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Did you know anything about Mr. Harvey?

Mr. MUNROE. Nothing except the fact that I met him at that time. I met him twice, excuse me; the first time was to confer with him about the nature of some moving-picture exhibits that he was to get up for the Elks, to be shown at the moving-picture houses, as one of our various means of bringing information to the disabled boys about what the Government was anxious to do for them.

Mr. ROBSION. Did you know that Mr. Harvey's picture was in the rogue's gallery in New York?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Did you ever hear about that?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; he had nothing to do with us in any way. The only reason that I ever saw him at all was because he was employed by the Elks, and the Elks, as you know, were cooperating with us in the matter of funds.

Mr. ROBSION. How much money did he get out of the proposition?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not know, sir; I have no relations with that. I am not an Elk, and I know nothing about the Elks' affairs.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. What fund was he paid out of?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not know, sir; I know nothing about the Elks' business.

Mr. ROBSION. What was the nature of the work that Mr. Harvey was to do?

Mr. MUNROE. I understood from this conversation that I had with him that the Elks had commissioned him to get up a moving picture to be shown, covering the disabled-soldier problem.

Mr. ROBSION. To help promote the work of the Vocational Board?

Mr. MUNROE. One of the numerous means we used to advertise the Government's work.

Mr. ROBSION. Would you think that a fellow whose picture was in the rogue's gallery in New York would be a proper person for work like that?

Mr. MUNROE. I am not in the least responsible for what the Elks do.

Mr. ROBSION. I am not asking you about your responsibility, but I am asking you if you think that would be a proper person for work like that?

Mr. MUNROE. I should think not; no, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Recurring again to the matter of naming your clerk as vice chairman, do you remember about two months ago, when you were attending an association or going away somewhere, you wrote a letter designating your clerk?

Mr. MUNROE. I am sorry that I had forgotten about the circumstances of that yesterday. I looked them up when I went back to the office, and I find they were as follows: In February, I think it was, there was a conference called of all the State directors of vocational education and other persons who were cooperating with us in the States at Chicago, in connection with a meeting of the National Society for Vocational Education, and as it is the one opportunity in the year when we can get all these men, practically from all the States, together, it seemed important that the three members of the standing committee should all be there to confer with these men. There arose, of course, immediately the question as to how the signing of leases and vouchers and contracts and all that sort of thing could be carried along. So, on what we thought was good advice, we passed a vote in the standing committee designating my secretary as assistant to the vice chairman, with the understanding that under that designation she could sign these documents. The order was transmitted, as usual, to the heads of the various divisions, and the head of the disbursing department stated he could not pay vouchers, under the law, signed in that way. Consequently I gave up going to Chicago, much to my regret and with considerable loss to myself, because these conferences with the State officials are important, in order that there should not be a single day's delay in the paying of our bills or the signing of leases or anything of that sort. I endured a good deal of sacrifice for the sake of continuing the work. This young lady never signed a single document.

Mr. ROBSION. Were the three members of the Cabinet who are members of your board present when that order was made?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; this was a standing committee order.

Mr. ROBSION. What is the name of this young lady?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Miss Myers.
Mr. ROBSION. Her first name?
Mr. MUNROE. Helen K.
Mr. ROBSION. Is she still in the service?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. ROBSION. Referring again to this man Harvey, I understand that he had a lot of the stationery and other effects of the Vocational Board with which he carried on his correspondence; do you know how he got that?
Mr. MUNROE. That was the occasion of my second interview with him. I learned of this, and I immediately sent for him and told him that he was immediately to cease using the name of the Federal Board for Vocational Education in any way, because he had no official or any other connection with us. That was the reason of my meeting him the second time.
Mr. ROBSION. To what extent had he used it, if at all?
Mr. MUNROE. I do not know, sir. It was simply brought to my attention that he had stationery with our name on it, and I told him that he must cease that at once.
Mr. ROBSION. Did you not also have information that he was using it?
Mr. MUNROE. I should not have summoned him here unless I had heard he had used it.
Mr. ROBSION. And that he was also claiming to represent the board as a representative of the board?
Mr. MUNROE. Naturally, by using the stationery, he was misrepresenting the situation.
Mr. ROBSION. Well, what had Harvey been doing? What activity had he been carrying on in the use of the stationery of the board, and in a way representing the board, that caused you to take action?
Mr. MUNROE. As I have already said, I understand that he was getting up this motion picture for the Elks, and it was in connection with that that he used stationery which he had no business to use, soliciting cooperation in the making of this film.
Mr. ROBSION. Did you not also understand that he was representing that to business people and to men and women of means in an effort to collect money?
Mr. MUNROE. That was a matter for the Elks, not for us. We were not soliciting money.
Mr. ROBSION. He was using the Federal board's stationery, and so on, in writing these people in an effort to collect funds?
Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.
Mr. ROBSION. Did you not understand that?
Mr. MUNROE. The moment I heard of it I summoned him here and told him to stop it.
Mr. ROBSION. But did you learn he was doing that?
Mr. MUNROE. I should not have summoned him otherwise; yes, sir.
Mr. ROBSION. And how long did he continue to represent the board—I mean not to represent the board, but to be connected with this board activity, after you learned that?
Mr. MUNROE. It was not a board activity; it was an Elks' activity. I had no knowledge whatever of his relation to the Elks. You would have to ask somebody connected with the Elks about that.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Well, it was your work?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; it was entirely an Elks proposition. It was one of the ways in which they proposed to cooperate with us by getting up this moving picture, but we were not in any way responsible for it. It was entirely an Elks proposition.

Mr. ROBSION. But it was to help promote the work of the Vocational Board, was it not?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. My question was, How long did he continue in that work after you had learned of this matter and went to see him the second time?

Mr. MUNROE. I did not go to see him. I summoned him here to Washington. I have no idea, sir, because it was an Elks enterprise and not ours.

Mr. ROBSION. When you learned he was using the board's stationery and undertaking to collect money, did you not also get information as to the character of the man and the reputation of Mr. Harvey?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I simply forbade him to do that thing which he had no authority to do. I was not concerned in his personal character or anything else. I simply was concerned in his using the Federal board's name without authority, and I forbade it.

Mr. ROBSION. But in his efforts to collect money, did he not claim that it was to help the Vocational Board and to rehabilitate the disabled soldiers and things like that?

Mr. MUNROE. I have no idea what he claimed at all.

Mr. ROBSION. You made no inquiry as to his standing?

Mr. MUNROE. It was none of my affair. He was not an employee of the board, and I had no business to inquire into his personal affairs.

Mr. ROBSION. It has been suggested that I ask you if your board, headed by Dr. Prosser or some member of the board, took this man Harvey and introduced him to the Elks and established the connection.

Mr. MUNROE. I certainly did not. I never heard of the man until he came down to ask advice about getting pictures or photographs for this motion picture.

Mr. ROBSION. On his office, did not Harvey display the board's name in New York?

Mr. MUNROE. I do not know, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Did not you and Dr. Prosser have your pictures taken in his office?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Or in New York in connection with the work?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir; I never had my picture taken in New York.

Mr. ROBSION. And if the Vocational Board's name was on this man Harvey's office in New York, you did not observe it.

Mr. MUNROE. I never was in his office. I do not know where it was.

Mr. DONOVAN. Dr. Munroe, I want to ask you one question: When the debate was up on the floor of the House on the Darrow bill—this is a little personal, and if you do not care to answer it you do not need to—it was stated by one of the Members of the House in that debate, and you will recall that the Darrow bill was a bill increasing the compensation of the married men and single men, it was stated that this board was a Democratic board, meaning the Vocational Education Board, particularly the men in the administration. Have you any objection to telling whether you are either a Democrat or a Republican or a Prohibitionist?

Mr. MUNROE. None whatever, sir. I suppose I should be designated as an Independent Republican; that is, I have generally voted, practically, I think, always the Republican ticket in Massachusetts, except when Billy Russell was up for governor. I did vote, when I first voted, for Mr. Cleveland, as many Republicans did, and I may have voted once or twice for Democratic candidates since.

Mr. DONOVAN. But in general——

Mr. MUNROE (interposing). In general, I vote the Republican ticket.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Munroe, you voted for Mr. Wilson, did you not?

Mr. MUNROE. The first time; yes, sir.

Mr. DONOVAN. Did you the last time?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Mr. Munroe, since I put in the former letter from Mr. Joseph A. Troy, jr., I find still another one which Mr. Littledale has called to my attention, which had been written to him by Mr. Troy under date of April 28, 1920, and I would like this letter also to go into the record, if you please. The letter reads as follows:

EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL., April 28, 1920.

Mr. HAROLD A. LITTLEDALE,
New York Evening Sun, New York City, N. Y.

DEAR MR. LITTLEDALE: Received your letter of the 26th. I highly appreciate your kind offer to bring my case to the attention of the investigation going on in Washington.

The following is the gist of my case:

Enlisted July 28, 1917, and at the time was earning my way through law school and had completed one year.

Wounded by enemy fire June 24, 1917.

Injuries sustained: Wounded through left foot and a fracture of the cervical spine.

Sent back to United States September 23, 1917.

Present disability: Slight limp and weakness of left foot and recurring stiffness and pain in neck, accompanied at times by pains in arms and headaches. Doctors tell me this injury will return in after years.

X-ray examinations since leaving the service have failed to disclose this neck injury, although the Army records show it. The latest picture showed an anatomical irregularity, but the doctor gave his personal opining, saying he believed this was normal in my case.

In my chart my disability has been figured with respect to my foot with an utter disregard to the spinal injury. Case board at San Francisco thought me worthy of section 2 training, and my chart is full of telegrams urging approval, but the swivel-chair experts in Washington seem to be able to overrule the opinions of men who examined me in person.

Washington gave Mr. Baird, of the traveling case board, the authority to put me in section 2 training if he saw fit, and on his approval and the permission of the district vocational officer I came to St. Louis University. Some months later they informed me I was being trained by mistake. They tell me I have no need of further education, although I need only one more year to complete my course. The district vocational officer at St. Louis flatly refuses to give me in writing why they will not give me this one year. My record at the university will prove my earnestness.

With a multitude of thanks, I am,

JOSEPH A. TROY, Jr.,
1723 St. Louis Avenue.

Mr. Munroe, in the course of your testimony yesterday you spoke of certain changes, or a shake-up, as you referred to it, as being necessary, in your opinion, to bring about a better morale in the New York office, and referred, if I remember correctly, to one or two individuals whom you thought should be transferred from New York to some other office.

Mr. MUNROE. It was just a personal opinion; yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That was your personal opinion. You did refer, however, to Mr. Noyes, who had testified here at considerable length, as being a man, as I recall your testimony, who had the right point of view, the right temperament, and a man who was, in your opinion, a right-minded man.

Mr. MUNROE. Cooperative spirit, I think, was the term I used.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I understand from what you said, that while you might not accept all Mr. Noyes's conclusions in the course of the testimony he gave here, you would feel that any statement of fact he made could be relied upon.

Mr. MUNROE. I think you must have misunderstood me, sir. I simply stated that I thought he had the right cooperative spirit. I expressed no opinion as to his judgment of facts.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Well, would you or would you not consider him trustworthy?

Mr. MUNROE. I think he means to be.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You testified, I think, that when Mr. Noyes said that in his opinion the New York office seemed to be suffering from a "kind of paralysis" between the 1st of November and the middle of January, that you thought he was mistaken in that conclusion.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. He goes on, however, in the course of the testimony which he gave, to state the reasons why he thought the New York office had fallen into that state of paralysis, and I will just quote a few lines of his testimony:

The supervisor of training and the district vocational officer were unable to agree upon a method, upon a procedure by which these orders could be carried out. We had the authority put in our hands to put men in training under certain restrictions, and it was after hammering and hammering that finally the procedure was gotten through by which that could be done. Meanwhile, as you can see by the statistics of it and the falling off during those two months of the men that were put into training, the training officers spent a large part of their time writing and rewriting and rewriting their recommendations, simply in order to get them into the form that was required by the district vocational officer, and they were no sooner done than next day or the next week around would come a new order not to proceed from that day forward doing this new method, but to go back to the past dates and rewrite them over and over again. It got to be a perfect joke in the office.

He was talking then about a period when Mr. Farwell was at the head of the office, the period from the 1st of November, as he says, to the 1st of the following January. What would you say as to the correctness of that statement?

Mr. MUNROE. As far as I was observing the office during that time I think he has, to say the least, exaggerated.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Again, he says:

Now, as a matter of fact, what happens? You go into the field, and in the first place you have to apologize to the treasurer of the school because he hasn't got any money.

Digitized by Google

He is talking now about present conditions, not past conditions.

Mr. MUNROE. Yes.

Mr. BURROUGHS (reading):

One of the men in the follow-up section told me two weeks ago that he just had taken a trip through New York State. He visited nine professional schools in that State and not one of those schools had been paid for the tuition of any man in those schools.

Mr. MUNROE. I have forgotten whether or not I testified that at this time all tuition bills up to 30 days ago are paid, so far as I am aware.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That was two weeks ago and his testimony was given on April 13.

Mr. MUNROE. So far as the vouchers have come into the office they are practically current, within the 30 days, of course.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Later he said:

I know the bills were held up in the central office sometimes for many weeks before they were paid. I don't know why.

Judge Towner asked him:

After they had been passed?

And his answer was:

After they had passed the local office and had been sent on. They were not paid.

Now, again, I quote from his testimony:

Now, if you will let me give an illustration. For example, we can not send a man to Alfred University, an institution as well known as that, without having the case passed upon by the central office, but we can send a man around the corner to a cobbler shop to learn cobbling without saying anything to them about it. They make that difference in the institutional course. We can't put a man in an institutional course without the central office passing upon it.

Mr. MUNROE. He is quite mistaken about that.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Then Mr. Donovan asked him this question:

I thought I understood you to say that there was a recent ruling which permitted the district office to place a man in an institutional course that did not take over two years and that did not cost more than $500.

And Mr. Noyes answered:

Provided that institution has been approved by the central office.

Mr. MUNROE. Of course, we have to make sure that these boys are sent to reputable institutions. Unfortunately there are a good many in this country that are not reputable.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Take the institution he speaks of, Alfred University, which I understand is one of the most reputable in that section of the country; he says that even in that case the matter has to be submitted to Washington.

Mr. MUNROE. I think he he is mistaken, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Then, speaking about the authority which the men have in the district vocational offices, I asked Mr. Noyes this question:

The point I am trying to make is, is it possible, do you think, to get many men now of the type that you think are suitable for this work; men who would not be influenced primarily by the pecuniary or monetary consideration involved?

Digitized by Google

He answered:

If they can be given more authority, so that they will feel that they are doing the job and putting the thing over. The man doesn't live by bread alone, and men don't work for wages alone. I have seen it over and over again in our office.

Mr. BURROUGHS. So you think if the men could feel that they had some responsibility in the matter and could go about and work out something on their own initiative, a good many men might be obtained who would be willing to do it aside from the money consideration involved?

Mr. NOYES. If they can be given authority, just exactly as if the central office gives authority to the local office; if the head of the office or the heads of the sections give authority to the men under them, they will respond immediately.

What would you say in regard to that?

Mr. MUNROE. It is a matter of opinion, and, of course, a matter of local administration which Mr. Lamkin is more competent to pass on than I am; but I do not see how, without absolutely cutting these district offices adrift and letting them do just as they please, we could give them any more authority than we have given them now. I venture to say that we are the most decentralized organization in the Government at this time.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Do you know of certain rules of administration that were issued some time in August last, I think, that have been referred to here in this testimony?

Mr. MUNROE. I could not identify them simply from the dates. If you could give me some other identification——

Mr. BURROUGHS. I asked Mr. Noyes this question?

Do you know, Mr. Noyes, of the issuance of certain rulings by the central board here some time in August, I think, this last year, certain orders or administrative rulings?

Mr. NOYES. To conform to the—yes; I know about them.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You saw those rulings when they were issued?

Mr. NOYES. Yes.

Mr. BURROUGHS. How did they impress you?

Mr. NOYES. As giving the impression to the employees of the board that they must be more restrictive in the allowances of recommendations of men to be put in training.

Mr. BURROUGHS. They seemed to be rules of exclusion?

Mr. NOYES. Yes.

Mr. BURROUGHS. And not to have been put out in the spirit that seemed to you to be the spirit in which this law was enacted by Congress? Is that right?

Mr. NOYES. That is my impression.

Mr. MUNROE. I could not possibly identify them from that description, because I know we have never sent out any rules or regulations that could be interpreted in that way. They have always been the opposite—to give the widest possible latitude and to stretch the law to the utmost limit so that the boys may get what we desire them to have.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Would you recognize them under the name of Miscellaneous 150?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir; those are our general instructions; but I should interpret them in exactly the opposite way from which Mr. Noyes has interpreted them.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Are they available so they could be produced here?

Mr. MUNROE. Oh, yes.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You would not call them rules of exclusion?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MUNROE. Far from it. I should call them rules of the utmost inclusion.

Mr. BURROUGHS. And they were not so intended by the board?

Mr. MUNROE. No, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Did you know they had been so interpreted by your officers in the field?

Mr. MUNROE. It is the first I have ever heard of it. This is the first criticism of that sort I have ever heard.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Let me ask you just one other question. Did you know of any rule or order issued by Mr. Lamkin to the effect that a man once given section 2 traning should be entitled to it and not be changed over to section 3 training?

Mr. MUNROE. I think that is what I have already referred to as a ruling made by the board some time ago, that where a man had been in training one year it should be continued automatically for a second year—that is, section 2 training.

Mr. BURROUGHS. And that is the policy of the board?

Mr. MUNROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That is all.

TESTIMONY OF MR. WILLIAM M. GODWIN.

(The witness was duly sworn by the acting chairman.)

Mr. TOWNER. Please give your full name to the reporter.

Mr. GODWIN. William M. Godwin.

Mr. TOWNER. And your residence and post office?

Mr. GODWIN. My home is Clinton, Mo.

Mr. TOWNER. That is your post-office address generally, Clinton, Mo.?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. What is your business now?

Mr. GODWIN. I am vocational adviser for the Federal board at the branch office of district No. 9, Kansas City, Mo.

Mr. TOWNER. You are making your home now, I suppose, in Kansas City, Mo.?

Mr. GODWIN. Well, that is my Federal station. My home is at Clinton.

Mr. TOWNER. What is the address of the board there?

Mr. GODWIN. 311 Massachusetts Building.

Mr. TOWNER. How long have you been with the board?

Mr. GODWIN. Since the 2d of February, 1919.

Mr. TOWNER. Did you desire to make a general statement regarding the work of the board there?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir. My mission here, as I understand it, is to tell something of the way the work was conducted in the hospitals, having been in the hospitals of the ninth district until they were finally evacuated on the 15th of October last.

Mr. TOWNER. You may proceed in your own way.

Mr. GODWIN. I was called to St. Louis the latter part of January. I met a man who was very much at cross purposes with the Government and everything in general, having received a bad wound in his left arm, and after about a day's wrestling, before I had been initiated into the service of the Government, we got him into training at the David Rankin School in St. Louis, to make a stationary engineer of him. His attitude was entirely changed toward the Government within 24 hours. He seemed to be quite a happy man when I last saw him. I went up to Camp Funston. It was stated that there were about 35,000 men in Funston and they were being discharged in shoals. There were three of us working there, and in an effort to keep up to the rush, take care of the disabled men, we sometimes surveyed as many as 75 in a day, 25 to the man, which was entirely too many, but the press and the men and the people and Congress all seemed to be in a hurry to get the men home. One of my duties was to go to what we called the recreation hall every morning and to meet the casuals who had come in the day before to be discharged as soon as possible, and to tell them of the privileges and advantages that might accrue to the disabled men under the law governing the Federal board. I met bodies of men like that, from 50 to 500, every morning for weeks, telling them about the advantages and opportunities. I was allowed not to exceed 15 minutes, but after getting through with my talk the men would gather around me and ply me with personal questions, and sometimes take as much as two hours of my time talking to groups of men, so that we disseminated the knowledge as fast as we could to the men. After being there a few weeks I was detailed to go to Fort Riley a part of the time. At first we were not permitted to go into the wards where the crippled men were, but in just a few days that was changed and we were given free access to the men at Fort Riley that were crippled and being operated upon. In connection with the vocational service that was established there under Maj. Berry, we had free access from that time on to the men in the wards, and Col. Peed, who was in command at Fort Riley, volunteered to suggest to me, after a few days there, that if there was anything in that fort that I wanted that I might have it for the asking. I asked liberally and was never turned down very often. I met the men en masse and continued that by going to the places of recreation at the Y. M. C. A., the Red Cross, and the Knights of Columbus, and between the acts in the picture shows, and would tell them what the Federal board had for the men. I had not been there very long when talking to them one night I said, "Gentlemen, this is your chance, not mine. You are at liberty to approach me at any time, anywhere, on any part of the grounds, and I will tell you all that I know about it in about a minute, any time of the day or night; do not hesitate to call on the representative of the Federal board. My name is Godwin and if you can not think of that, just say 'Hey, there,' you need not delay. If you want to call on me, do it." It was not an unusual thing for half a dozen boys to call me "Dad." I would stop and talk to them.

The night I made that proposition was a very disagreeable night, and I was half a mile from the office, and an ex-service negro came up and said, "Sir, may I talk to you?" I said, "Cut that out. I want to be as good as my promise, even if it is a bad night." From that time on I was at the service of the men, and some of the most pleasant recollections are in connection with the men that I met at Fort Riley, giving them what advice that I could. I got on good terms with them and gave them instructions. There were a few obstreperous fellows, of course, but I managed to keep my temper most of the time and to direct them as I thought they should be directed.

Mr. TOWNER. Your experience with the medical officers in charge of the hospitals then was that as soon as they understood what you wanted they cooperated?

Mr. GODWIN. They were in hearty sympathy; yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. In sympathy with the work?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir. I met Dr. Zachritz, one of the members of the discharge board just a few days ago and was recounting matters that occurred there. They got to be a little bit strict upon the percentage. That was under the days of percentage. They were not giving the boys what I thought was a high enough percentage. I went into the office and had a talk with Dr. Zachritz out there and it had the effect of giving the men, I thought, more liberal disabilities, giving them a better chance.

Mr. TOWNER. The men whom you came into contact with, as a usual rule, who had determinable disabilities, were anxious to talk to you about the training, were they?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir; after I talked to them. At first there was an aloofness about it.

Mr. TOWNER. In other words, it was necessary for you to sympathize with them in order to win their confidence?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. And those men who were working with you in the same class, were they as able to win the confidence of the boys as you were?

Mr. GODWIN. I think so.

Mr. TOWNER. You had a chance to observe them, are the men usually engaged in this work able to win the confidence of the boys?

Mr. GODWIN. That has been my experience, every one of them. Mr. Beck, who now represents the central office in St. Louis; Mr. B. G. Baird, at Wichita; Mr. Robertson, at Dallas, Tex., and Mr. Murray are men that the boys would slap on the shoulder, after they got acquainted with them, and put their arms around them and talk to them as confidentially as they would to their own fathers and brothers.

Mr. TOWNER. It has been suggested that the surgeons were reluctant to let go of the boys in the hospitals, to discharge them even for training. What has been your experience with regard to that?

Mr. GODWIN. My experience is that the men themselves thought the surgeons were reluctant, but it was a matter of surgical and medical judgment, and I have no right to pass upon it.

Mr. TOWNER So far as your observation went you think the surgeons dealt fairly, and in accordance with their best judgment?

Mr. GODWIN. I certainly do.

Mr. TOWNER. With regard to the discharge of the boys?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. I suppose naturally that a boy in the hospital is anxious to get out?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir; they are.

Mr. TOWNER. And would complain bitterly because he was not allowed to get out?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. And perhaps think that the doctors were keeping him there when he should not be there?

Mr. GODWIN. It was the general talk among the men, Mr. Chairman, that they were being held there in order that the officers might hold their jobs with the Government, when, as a matter of fact, nearly every one was more anxious to go home than the men were.

Mr. TOWNER. I see. You think that charge was a natural one, psychological, and, as a matter of fact, was not well founded?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. You may proceed with your statement.

Mr. GODWIN. I found the same condition largely existing among the nurses and the aides that existed among the surgeons and the doctors. They were earnest, faithful, and conscientious, and I should like to say here that anything that is being done for the men in uniform ought to be done for the nurses; I think they are a magnificent body of women.

There are some few faultfinders at Fort Riley. One, Pat Short, had a little rheumatism in one knee and he complained bitterly about everything. Another one, John L. Allen, had his neck broken and his head carried in a plaster paris cast, was the brightest sunshiniest, happiest man you ever wanted to see. I could not but contrast those two men. Having left Pat, with a little rheumatism in one knee, less than 50 yards up the road, I met Allen, and I said, "How are you coming?" He said, "All right; everything is fine, Mr. Godwin, my country and my God are on my side." Just the difference between the two men. His head was held just so [indicating] in a plaster paris cast.

The work in connection with the educational service at Fort Riley was satisfactory. The men were directed to read up on the subjects that they might possibly think they would be interested in, while in their wards and being treated. Books were carried to them by the aides and instructions were given to them in agriculture and engineering, law, and all of those courses. I found one Lieut. Fry, a splendid fellow, who was convalescing, a college man, who had been 18 years in business, a thorough railroad engineer. Some of the boys studying steam engineering were not altogether satisfied with the work they were getting from the educational service there, and I asked permission of Maj. Berry, which he granted, to let Lieut. Fry aid, and he soon had a class of boys whose noses were in the books all the time. He had gotten them interested very greatly. I am sorry to have lost trace of Lieut. Fry, because I think he needs the assistance of the Federal board or the Government at any rate.

The men at Fort Riley were certainly treated well, and in the main appreciated the treatment, except for the fact that they wanted to go home. Everything that was said in Washington and elsewhere about hurrying the boys home they read apparently with avidity, forgetting the fact that professional judgment in the matter of a man's health ought to supersede anything that might be said a thousand miles away.

For instance, in the St. Louis office just the other day a man came in who had tuberculosis. He had been six or seven months in a sanitarium. He thought he was cured and insisted upon returning home, and since he had been home he had had a violent hemorrhage.

Digitized by Google

I said to him, "The thing for you to do is to hurry back to the sanitarium." He admitted that his treatment had been very beneficial to him, but he said, "No; I am going to fight it out a while." "Take the advice of the doctor and go back," I said. That is the feeling of the men. They want to have their own way in many cases; they should have it most of the time. I stayed at Fort Riley until two or three days of the evacuation of the hospital.

I will give you an instance, with your permission, of Walter Minor, who is the man who has to be wheeled about in a chair. One Sunday evening I said, "Walter, let us go to the picture show?" It was not half a mile over to the Red Cross, where they were going to have the picture show. He said, "They will not let me go." I got permission of the nurse and wheeled him over to the picture show, and we had a good time. That is just a sample of the way the men were treated at Fort Riley.

I was sent to Liberal, Kans., to look after some men. One man came in to see me and he apologized for its being about 8 o'clock in the evening. I said, "That is all right, come in any time of the day or night." Then, a man came in at 11 o'clock. I was leaving at 3 o'clock in the morning. I had already retired, but I had him come in, and after he finished he thanked me very greatly for permitting him to disturb my rest. So far as I could find out that is the attitude of the men with whom I have come in contact.

I was then detailed to Fort Des Moines, under Col Jeuneman, who is in command; and, like Col. Peed, he said, "If there is anything you want, ask for it." I talked to the men at the Y. M. C. A. and the Knights of Columbus shows, and I talked with the nurses; I went into the wards and met the men and talked with them on the parade ground, when I was not otherwise busy, and discussed with them their futures and found some men who were badly mangled, one or two who showed a very ugly disposition toward the Government. I talked with them frequently and finally they admitted that they had had a wrong vision and said that they would change their attitude.

It must be borne in mind that a large majority of the men with whom we come in contact have been men of the lower educational qualifications and, unfortunately, it seems that as many as 75 per cent have had less than a fifth-grade education and a great many of them had no education whatever until they got into the Army and had been taught to write their names and possibly read a little. That class of man has been a very difficult class with which to deal. They are suspicious; they have the natural element of rebellion in them, and rebelled against the Army discipline which they had to undergo, and in a great many cases they feel that somebody is trying to put something over on them all the time. It has been a difficult thing to meet the man who feel that way—not all of them feel that way, but a good percentage; it is a difficult thing to meet men with that feeling and overcome it and turn it around into one of admiration.

For instance, just a few days ago a gentleman came into the office at Kansas City. He was very ugly at first. He said, "I have been discharged seven months and I have had nothing done." I said, "Wait a minute and let me get your file. How many letters have you had from the board from St. Louis and Kansas City offices?" He said, "Oh, I do not know how many." I said, "How many have you replied to?" He said, "I did not reply; it was not worth while." Then I lectured him a little on the ordinary courtesy if he should receive a letter. I said, "You have been discharged seven months, and you have had seven or eight letters written to you by the Kansas City and St. Louis offices, and you live within 20 miles of Kansas City and yet have not replied to any of them. It is your fault and not ours."

I lectured him along that line. Then he wanted to know whether, if he took the training he would have to be under military discipline. I said, "I am very sorry to tell you that you do not." Then I lectured him a little along that line of obedience to authority. Then he wanted to know if he would have to wear the uniform, and I said that it was the greatest badge of honor that could be worn, and I am sorry to say that you do not have to wear the uniform when in training. When a man speaks against the uniform in my presence he is talking against my country, and you must pardon me if I get a little bit enthusiastic about what I am going to say to you. When we got through he came over and slapped me on the shoulder and said, "I am glad that I came to see you." Some time later he ran in almost breathless and said, "I came to town, and I came to see you and to thank you for what you have done for me." That is the attitude.

Mr. TOWNER. Did he accept training?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir; in the Agricultural College of Missouri.

Mr. TOWNER. Out of every 100 men, I suppose, there is a certain proportion of natural growlers and ingrates?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Under normal conditions, as we say, there is a certain proportion of those who are dissatisfied with whatever conditions exist. As I understand your testimony, you say that the proportion of these dissatisfied persons among the boys who would be subject to training would be greater than the normal proportion?

Mr. GODWIN. I think so; slightly.

Mr. TOWNER. Those men have to be given special consideration in order to make them at all agreeable to the conditions?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. It is your experience that those who deal with the men at these offices and in the hospitals were considerate to them or did they seem to be offended at their attitude?

Mr. GODWIN. I have never heard a grouchy conversation among the men connected with the Federal board about any of the men. I have never heard of but one case; that was my own. I ran across one of the conscientious objectors and I did not spare him much. I left him. I was in a bad temper.

Mr. TOWNER. Is there any further statement that you desire to make?

Mr. GODWIN. I have one or two brief communications that I received, one from Nic Rene Wilhemly, whom I met at Fort Des Moines, dated November 29, 1919, from 6100 Watermen Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

6100 WATERMEN AVENUE, ST. LOUIS, MO.,
November 29, 1919.

Mr. W. M. GODWIN,
St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR MR. GODWIN: Perhaps you remember the writer's case and perhaps you also remember his pessimistic attitude at the time when you made out his papers at Fort Des Moines, in regard toward the future board and the training he was desiring.

I have been here in St. Louis since November 20. The Federal board had me assigned to the Washington University in behalf of my course for South American trade, and I had my assignment within one week after my discharge October 14. Duck hunting and in consequence an attack of bronchitis prevented me from being here sooner.

But what I wanted to say to you, Mr. Godwin, is in regard to your view of my case. I can not express the gratitude I feel for you, and I feel myself very much indebted to you, indeed, for I am confident that solely your efforts brought about the training I have been aspiring for.

Your predecessor had me pretty nearly discouraged with his line of civil service he was offering me as substitute to my wishes, to the extent that I had quite preparatory training, and your humanly interest in us boys gave me confidence again in the board.

So I wish to apologize for the prejudice I was nursing against the board at the time, and again I wish to thank you from the bottom of my heart for the genuine interest and enthusiasm with which you took up my case. My hope is to again meet you personally some day and thank you personally. In the meantime I wish to remain your friend.

NIC RENE WILHELMY.

As to my trip to St. Joseph, Mo., after I went to Kansas City, we had a man in training, Mr. Raymond L. Bearer. He was in placement training. He had been for two or three years in a printing office and was put in a printing establishment, but under the rules of the union they were not entitled to pay him. So, when I went to St. Joseph—I had been there two or three times—he came to see me. He was very much depressed, had only $10 in money, had married since being discharged, he was out of employment, and there was nothing that he could do. He was very much depressed. He began to tell me about his wife and her condition, and tears began to roll down his face. I said, "You must quit crying or you will get me crying." He said, "I have only $10." I said, "What is the Red Cross for, if it is not to fall back on in such a time? They have $35,000,000 subscribed by the American people." The Red Cross promptly loaned him $50, when he asked for $20, and I said, "I will take a long shot at you, Raymond. I do not know whether my action will be ratified by the board or not, but I will put you in school to-day. You had five months in a commercial college before you entered the service. Would you like to complete your commercial course?" He said that it would delight him. I called up Mr. Platt, of one of the schools at St. Joseph, and explained the situation; told him that I was assuming no responsibility for the board, but that if he would take him, pending the ratification of my action by the board at St. Louis, I would send him up to be enrolled. He told me to send him up and he was enrolled. Here is a letter from him to me addressed at Kansas City, dated St. Joseph, Mo., December 6, 1919:

ST. JOSEPH, MO., December 6, 1919.

Mr. W. M. GODWIN,
411-412 Massachusetts Building, Kansas City, Mo.

MY DEAR SIR: It is with the greatest of pleasure that I take in writing this letter, trying to express my thanks that are due you for being so kind as to take the responsibility of placing me in training, and I am sure that I will get along fine.

Now, really, I am so proud of the kindness that you and the Red Cross people did for me that I can not find words enough to express my gratitude, only that I appreciate it most immensely.

So, thanking you again for your kindness, I am,

Very faithfully, yours, RAYMOND L. BEARER.

My action was promptly ratified by wire by the St. Louis board and the young man is in training and is doing finely. The men do come to us at Kansas City frequently and when they go into the hospitals we visit them and find that the work is satisfactory and that they seem to appreciate it. The four men that are in the Kansas City office, with whom I have been intimately associated since the middle of October, I think they all feel like I do toward the men, and the members in the St. Louis office. We have to bow to the decision of the medical officers about the health condition of the men. I have in past times had controversies with the doctors, but they know more about the physical condition than I do. I feel when a man comes to me that I am placed in the attitude almost of his guardian until I can get him landed in section 2 training, and I lose no opportunity in acting upon the theory that it is my business to put the man in training if he will accept it.

A great many refuse to accept training. Some because of their home relations. A young man lives in my own town. He was in France. I was chairman of the home service section of the Red Cross. His mother came to me almost three times a week trying to find out why her boy did not write her every day. He was discharged in December, 1918, and came home. Before I had anything to do with the Federal board I urged him to accept the training. His mother objected, she as well as the boy. I went to his home some few weeks ago. He lost his voice, having been gassed. His mother was willing for him to apply for compensation if it did not require that he go to some hospital somewhere to be treated, but would not give her consent to have him sent to Columbia, Mo., to take a course in agriculture, because he had enough money coming to him under the Sweet bill to make a payment on the little farm which he expected to buy. I had to kidnap the boy, take him to my house, and get him to fill out his papers for compensation, but he absolutely refused to let me survey him preparatory to entering upon training, because his mother objected.

Mr. TOWNER. What has been your experience in regard to the delays in final action in determining whether or not the boy was qualified or entitled to training?

Mr. GODWIN. There have been some delays, especially since I have been in the Kansas City office. When I was at the hospitals we had all the papers at hand. We send out a letter asking him to bring all the papers relative to his service, his discharge, compensation and proposed training under the Federal board. The man will frequently appear with that letter and that letter only. Then, he has to go back and we will give him an envelope already addressed to put his discharge paper in, his certificate of discharge or his notice that compensation has been granted him, and sometimes it will be weeks before we get that, although the letter is put in his hand that we can not proceed without getting those papers. Yet he will sometimes keep those things in his pocket a week or two or three weeks before he returns them. Of course, we can do nothing until then.

Another thing that has been recalled to me, in the Kansas City office we have had only one stenographer for four men. We could not get any more stenographers or we would have had them, because stenographers get more than we are allowed by the Federal board to pay them. Recently we got a substitute stenographer who is very hard of hearing. We have done the best we could. We went through the files then while we had her the two or three weeks and got up the work generally. There were some cases held in the files because we did not have the physical force to go through the files. Some cases have been delayed on that account.

Mr. TOWNER. Were these conditions reported to the board here in Washington?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir; they were reported to the St. Louis office.

Mr. TOWNER. Kansas City is a branch of the St. Louis office?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. What reply was made by the St. Louis office to that request?

Mr. GODWIN. About getting a stenographer?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. GODWIN. To get one if we could under the allowance of $100 a month.

Mr. TOWNER. And you could not get a stenographer in Kansas City competent for $100 a month?

Mr. GODWIN. No, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. What is the prevailing rate there?

Mr. GODWIN. From $125 up.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I should like to ask you just one or two questions. You are a vocational adviser?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What would you say would be on an average the proportion of the total number of cases surveyed in any given district by a vocational adviser that would be recommended for training by the case board? Is there any percentage that you would expect to find?

Mr. GODWIN. This is a guess; at least 80 per cent.

Mr. BURROUGHS. At least 80 per cent of the total number surveyed?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Should be recommended for either section 2 or section 3 training?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Do you think anything like that prevails in your district—No. 9?

Mr. GODWIN. Well, sir, I do not know. The figures could be obtained. They have not been yet, for the reason that the medical authorities had not completed the rating of the papers.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I have here a copy of the Vocational Summary which states on its face that it is published monthly by the Federal Board for Vocational Education. This is volume 2, No. 5. It is the September, 1919, issue. On pages 92 and 93 of this Summary appears what purports to be Federal board registration of disabled men for vocational training and placement—a summary statement of progress of cases by rehabilitation districts by periods to August 23, 1919. I find, according to this table, that to date—March 15, 1919, in district No. 9 there were 2,099 cases surveyed by the educational adviser, and I find that to date—March 15, 1919—there were 302 cases actually recommended for training by the case board in the same district.

Mr. GODWIN. That was March, 1919?

Mr. BURROUGHS. To date—March 15, 1919.

Mr. GODWIN. I see.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Then to date—April 26, 1919—I find there were a total of 6,033 cases surveyed by the vocational adviser in that district, and to date—April 26, 1919—there was a total of 668 cases actually recommended for training by the case board.

To date—May 24, 1919—there were 7,244 cases surveyed by the vocational adviser, and to date—May 24, 1919—there were 1,067 cases recommended for training by the case board.

To date—June 28, 1919—there were 9,484 cases surveyed by the vocational adviser, and on the same date there were 1,682 cases recommended for training by the case board.

To date—July 26, 1919—the total surveyed by the vocational adviser was 11,204, and on the same date the total recommended for training by the case board was 1,891.

To date, August 23, 1919, the total surveyed by the vocational adviser was 13,154, and on the same date the total number recommended for training by the case board was 2,078.

If my mathematics is correct and I have reckoned it correctly, it is about one-seventh instead of being 80 per cent.

Mr. GODWIN. Your question was how many would be eligible, as I understood it, sir?

Mr. BURROUGHS. I intended to ask how many of those actually surveyed for training would be actually recommended for training later by the case board.

Mr. GODWIN. That is what I thought your question was and I answered it that way.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That is just what this is.

Mr. GODWIN. The figures you have there were a year ago?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes, sir.

Mr. GODWIN. The board has been catching up since then.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You think that the figures to-day would show an altogether different percentage?

Mr. GODWIN. It is merely a guess, but I think there would be a very material increase of the percentage.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You think it would be around 75 or 80 per cent?

Mr. GODWIN. I am offering an opinion. I think that the men in the district office at St. Louis are using every effort, because they work night shifts there and the men do not quit when the hour comes to quit.

Mr. BURROUGHS. There would not, to your mind, be any reason, if the office was working on a proper standard of efficiency, why that total of surveyed cases of 13,154 as on August 23, 1919, there should actually be recommended for training by the case board only 2,078?

Digitized by Google

Mr. GODWIN. I think that might very well be the condition under the most favorable circumstances that existed at that time. I think that is no mark of lack of efficiency.

Mr. BURROUGHS. How do you account for it?

Mr. GODWIN. By the simple fact that owing to the status of the officers and the men relative to the law governing the Federal board the cases could not be decided instantly.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That is subsequent to July 11 and you were not tied up by complications with the War Risk Insurance Bureau at that time? That was in August. I guess perhaps some of these were before that date.

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. And that might account for some of it?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You think if the figures could be obtained for the present time that they would make an altogether better showing than this?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir; that is my opinion.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That is all.

Mr. ROBSION. Pursuing that thought a little further, Mr. Godwin, I believe from the statement read by a member of the committee who was just questioning you it appeared that there had been contact established with 6,033 cases in April, 1919, and you say that 80 per cent of those, in your opinion, would be entitled to one training or the other?

Mr. GODWIN. Finally; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. That would be more than 4,800 of the 6,000 that would receive a favorable report—that is, a decision for one training or the other—but it appears that up until August, 1919, only 2,078 cases had been passed upon favorably, and that would leave 2,800 which had been pending for at least four months and had not been passed upon?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. How would you account for a delay like that?

Mr. GODWIN. I am not in a position to know those things. Do you want my opinion?

Mr. ROBSION. If you do not know, the shortest answer would be that you do not know.

Mr. GODWIN. I have an opinion.

Mr. ROBSION. You need not give me that now. I did not ask for that.

Mr. GODWIN. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. You do not know of the conditions in New York or Philadelphia?

Mr. GODWIN. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. You say at the places you were they called you "Dad"?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. If they called you "Dad" generally, you are a good fellow. I can say that for the record. People never make a mistake like that in calling a fellow "Dad."

I was very much interested in some of the special cases which you mentioned. You seem to realize that early action was of the greatest importance to the soldier.

Mr. GODWIN. In every kind of an enterprise, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. But in this enterprise you had two very great impelling motives, one a business proposition?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And the other a human proposition?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. The soldier was in the attitude that delay would mean loss and defeat of the very purpose of the law, was he not?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir; I felt that way. It would at least produce an unpleasant feeling of mind on the soldier.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you think much about your salary while in this work?

Mr. GODWIN. No; I do not. I had been working ever since the war began for the Government, and I had pretty nearly lost sight of that.

Mr. ROBSION. A fellow to be successful in this work must not have that as his aim?

Mr. GODWIN. No. If I had, I should not have entered the service at all. I was making more money than my salary amounts to.

Mr. ROBSION. You spoke of the young man with the wife, depressed in both body and mind and who was fast losing any hope and ambition?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And by acting right then you likely saved that young fellow?

Mr. GODWIN. He feels that way about it. That is only one of a number of cases that I could have cited; I did not want to burden the record.

Mr. ROBSION. You are in charge of the Kansas City office?

Mr. GODWIN. No; I am the vocational adviser there.

Mr. ROBSION. Who is in charge?

Mr. GODWIN. Mr. G. W. Kirk is in charge of the office there.

Mr. ROBSION. Is he here?

Mr. GODWIN. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you know why he did not come?

Mr. GODWIN. He was not directed to come.

Mr. ROBSION. Have there been any complaints to the Kansas City office about delays?

Mr. GODWIN. Why, certainly.

Mr. ROBSION. How many men have been handled through that office, about?

Mr. GODWIN. I have not kept a record; it would be a guess.

Mr. ROBSION. I should like to have you guess.

Mr. GODWIN. I would say, since I have been there, October 20, up to this time, that I have averaged three new cases a day.

Mr. ROBSION. You have?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir. I am the man who makes the first contact with the man after he is discharged.

Mr. ROBSION. That would represent the increase to that branch office, three cases a day?

which had been referred to this office. I wrote him four days after it had been referred here. I got that case out of the files and find that two days before I got his letter approval had been given and the boy started into training.

In connection with this tuition of $500 we have given the New York office a certain definite list of schools where the tuition is at a higher rate than $500 a year, where those men would be placed without leaving them to the central office. For instance, the West Side Y. M. C. A. school in automechanics, where the tuition rate is $50 a month, which is more than the rate of $500 a year, although for the total length of time that the man is in training it does not amount to $500. They have authority to place a man there, and they have authority to place men in training in a number of institutions there where the tuition rate is more than $500.

Mr. Burroughs raised the question as to the rate of—what university was it?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Alfred.

Mr. LAMKIN. I have not had an opportunity to look it up, but I should not think that the rate was more than $500 a year there. If it is more than $500 a year I see no reason why this same privilege should not be extended to the New York office to put a man in training there; but the difficulty, Mr. Chairman, as you will understand when you get into the administration of it, is that here is a fellow who comes and asks for a course—let me give this specific example: We had a young man who came and asked for a course in a special school in New York. His injury was a slight hernia, for which the doctor stated they would not operate; that operation was not necessary, but he could be cured by the wearing of a truss; and he asked the approval of his course at a tuition which was $700 a year. The general history of such schools is that they are not worth the $700, and we believed that it would be better to keep our hands on expenditures in excess of a reasonable amount.

In the districts, the next officer I would like to speak of is the chief clerk of the district office. The chief clerk of the district office performs the same functions that any Government property agent does. He has charge of the property of the Government in the office. He also has charge of employing the personnel, the clerical personnel. Through the office goes the payment to the soldiers. Our disbursing officer issues the checks which are payable to the soldiers twice a month. Since last December, I am confident that I am correct when I say that the checks for the men in training have always left Washington before the 15th and the 30th of the month. I think, too, you will find that the Federal Board for Vocational Education is the only Government agency that is paying its beneficiaries, outside of the District of Columbia, more than once a month. The Bureau of War Risk Insurance, of course, pays its beneficiaries once a month; the Pension Department pays the pensioners once a month—or is it once a quarter?

Mr. TOWNER. Once every three months.

Mr. LAMKIN. We are paying our boys once every 15 days. I might say to you that that was one of the first things that I directed my attention to when I got here—that the boys might get their money on time. That does not mean that they get their money on the 1st and 16th of the month. In some districts the money is delivered to them on the 5th and 20th; in some districts on the 3d and 18th. It depends on when it can get out; but the point is that we are trying to get the money to the districts so that they can establish definite pay days, and the boys will understand what that definite pay day is. The checks are sent to the district. Some Congressmen have asked why it was that checks were not sent directly to the men. It is not necessary for me to answer that.

You had the case of young Dunstall, who was here on the stand and testified that he had not received a payment from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance nor from the Federal board since his discharge from the hospital; and inquiry from the bureau, which I will file a little later, developed the fact that his checks had gone regularly to the address which he gave, which was in Toronto, Canada; and the check for him, which was due from the Federal Board for Vocational Education, and amounting, as I recall it, to $66 and some odd cents, was then waiting for him at the place where the board knew where he was.

The district office, when it puts a man in training, has authority to change a man from one institution to another, from one course to another, from an institution to training on the job, from training on job to training on another job, from training on the job to an institution. It has authority to change the course and regulate it, without reference to the central office, and it knows where a man is; and consequently we send the checks to the district offices to be distributed to the men; and, as I said earlier, we have not established disbursing offices in the districts because of the fact that the overhead did not justify it. The salary which we can pay for that work will not get men who know Government regulations so that we could entrust them with the payment of money. I might say to you, however, that we appointed a disbursing officer for the two districts west of the Rocky Mountains, and as soon as the Treasury Department approves his bond we will have him disburse the money of the soldiers in training west of the Rocky Mountains.

The chief clerk, therefore, handles the payment of the soldiers in the districts, and he has charge of the preparation and submission to this office of vouchers for all bills.

In that connection I would like to say now, Mr. Chairman, that this is the first time that this class of payments has ever been called upon to be paid by the Treasury Department. We have 30,000 boys scattered over 48 States, 1,300 different institutions, 2,600 different industrial establishments, and each one of them has to have a certain amount of supplies and equipment, and the matter of formulating regulations which will conform to the Treasury requirements for the payment of money has been one of the most difficult problems of administration. I understand that there have been some acts of Congress which have allowed the Treasury to pay bills which were certified as mathematically correct. That would be easily done. I do not know. That is a matter which we should like to have authority to make a little fuller investigation of and report to the committee, because I believe that you want and Congress wants to do everything that can be done to expedite the work and at the same time be fair to the man and fair to the Government.

There are two other persons who are not exactly on the staff of the districts, but who are so closely related to the staff that I would like to describe to you their functions. In the first place, there is what we call the coordinator. You understand that in many of these institutions established particularly for the training of men of elementary grade we have had to try out the boys to see what kind of training they could take, or what kind they wanted. We placed a full-time employee of the board in charge of those institutions, and a man who we call a coordinator, who is supposed to be very close in touch with the men, follow them up very carefully and see that they get what the Government is paying for and to advise with them as to any change of course that may be necessary.

There is another class of men who are stationed at the various institutions, usually a member of the faculty of the colleges. That man is called a counselor. They are paid anywhere from a dollar to $100 a year. None of them is paid more than $100 and none of them is paid less than $1. The reason for paying the $1, of course, is in order that we can call them into conference, if necessary. When they are paid $50 or $100 it is for the purpose of providing the necessary clerical assistance which they have to have. The counselor is the friend of the boys in the school. We usually send the boys direct to the counselor. If he has any difficulty in making a claim for dependency, for instance—and, of course, the question of dependency is an uncertain thing, because a lot of the boys are getting married or having additions to their families—but if there is any question about making out the claim for dependency, or things of that kind, the boy takes it up with the counselor. If he wants to change his course, he consults with the counselor. We have at each of the institutions where we have men in training a counselor, but we have not put coordinators where we do not have at least 100 men in training. If we have 50 or 75 men in training, we have sometimes named a coordinator for two institutions, to spend half his time at each. A coordinator is a full-time employee of the board. A counselor is not a full-time employee of the board.

Mr. ROBSION. What does the coordinator get?

Mr. LAMKIN. He gets anywhere, Mr. Chairman, from $1,800 to $2,400. I can not answer definitely. We take into consideration the place where he is living. In other words, a coordinator can live a good deal more cheaply at Ames, Iowa, or Starkville, Miss., at the agricultural colleges there than he can in the city of New York. I remember that Mr. Nelson, who is our coordinator at the David Rankin School in St. Louis, was paid $2,000.

I have spoken of the branch offices and of the district offices. We have about 98 of them, I believe, 78 of which we have in definite quarters, and about 20 where we have no rented quarters, or quarters that are given to us. You understand that in a number of these branch offices we have rooms either rented to us by the Red Cross or by the city officers, or by the county officials, or by some one of that kind. Of course, in the larger places the demand for office space is increasing so rapidly now that we are having to change our quarters in some of them.

The employees in these branch offices run from one person to probably 20 or 25 in the larger branch offices, such as Detroit, Los Angeles, Cleveland, and some other of the larger offices.

I have spoken to you about the desire to decentralize the central office in the matter of auditing and disbursing, or accounting, I should say, of the disbursing offices. The central office is maintained as a supervising agency. It reaches the districts through the personal visits of the field organizer and the chief of the division when he can get away from Washington. I may say, in passing, that I have been in 8 of the 14 district offices, and if it had not been for being asked to remain or expected to remain here in Washington I would have visited three or four of them during the past 30 days, three or four which I had not yet seen.

It also keeps in touch by personal visits from the members of the advisement and training staffs, and of the Placement Section. These men go out to consult with the various districts officers with regard to the work of the boys.

We also keep in touch with the district offices through the medium of what we call miscellaneous 150, revised, and information and instruction. I am not going to ask that these be included in the record, Mr. Chairman. I think there is nothing in them that is objectionable to being printed, but I know it will not justify the printing. Of course, some of our friends have stated that these compose 1,500 different instructions. As a matter of fact, I think there are 351 different sections instead of 1,500. The sections are numbered from 1 to 100. For instance, the article concerning training pay for the men in training is the 700 group, and in that there are 14 sections, numbered from 700 to 714. The next one is from 800 to 889, but that pertains to the Government regulations regarding expenditures, what are proper charges against the Government, and things of that kind.

Criticism was made here by one employee of the board who stated that these were not furnished to all of the employees of the board. Seven copies of this miscellaneous 150, revised, have been furnished to each one of the districts. They are for the use of the section heads and for constant reference in the sections. They are there, and if anybody in the departments wants to consult them they can be consulted.

The same thing can be said of the instruction letters and the information letters which are sent out in sufficient quantities to supply the persons who need them, but we have not thought it necessary to duplicate a larger number, Mr. Chairman, than was absolutely needed in the several offices. So if I can file those with the chairman for any reference you care to make of them I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. TOWNER. Let the record show that they are filed without printing.

Mr. LAMKIN. As I say, I prefer that some of those be filed, and not be printed. You can do as you please about it, Mr. Chairman. The ones to which I refer are the ones which give information concerning certain schools. That is in the nature more or less of a confidential communication, but the details of the board concerning schools which have been approved we have not regarded as being necessary for public distribution.

I would like to make this statement in connection with the filing of those documents. On October 20, 1919, the following letter was sent from the chief to all the district vocational offices regarding procedure. I shall not ask permission to put all of that letter in the record, unless you insist, Mr. Chairman, but there are three paragraphs from it which I would like to read which pertain to that:

2. This letter is written for the purpose of laying down definite principles and should be considered as official.

3. In the first place, the chief wishes it distinctly understood that all procedure is set up for the purpose of expediting business, not for delaying. That no letter of instructions sent out by this office is to be followed blindly, except in the matter of observing certain definite forms and the keeping of certain definite records upon which depends the legality, as well as the wisdom, of our acts. But no "procedure" sent out from here is intended to interfere with the initiative of the district vocational officers, nor to in any way restrict his authority.

9. In the above (that is the general statement), central office will insist on only two things:

1. That the fewest possible number of men be used on your case conference.

2. That a man's application will be "case boarded" but once so far as the internal case board is concerned.

12. The chief also wishes to call the attention of the district vocational officers to the fact that there must be no duplication of records in the district offices if it can be prevented.

13. Again assuring you of the desire of the central office to give you all the support possible, and of their unwillingness to hamper you by unnecessary instructions, I am,

Yours, very truly,

MEL W. LAMKIN,
Chief Division Rehabilitation.

I think that may give you some information as to whether or not the central office is representing the board more and more in the districts. That letter is dated October 20, 1919.

Mr. ROBSION. Signed by yourself?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes; signed by myself as chief of the Division of Rehabilitation.

In regard to the employment of personnel, the question has been asked by you gentlemen here as to who was responsible for the appointment of personnel and the employment of personnel. I have answered it, but I am glad to answer it again, and that is that all the personnel is under civil-service regulations. In the first place, a man is appointed—or up until this last order came, a man would submit his qualifications and be appointed subject to civil-service requirements—subject to civil-service qualifications. That was the appointment which I got. I got it dated along some time in January, 1919. I had to take an examination for district vocational officer in February. I took it on February 4, 1919, and passed, getting the wonderfully high grade of 70 per cent, I think it was. The civil-service requirements provide that all of these positions with the board can be filled from its certificate, or by transfer or promotion—in one of these three ways. Every staff officer in the central office is under the civil-service regulations.

I think it may be well for me to make this statement now, if you do not object, Mr. Chairman. The question is raised as to the civil-service status of the district vocational officer in New York, Mr. Clark. I shall be glad to submit this statement:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., April 13, 1920.

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Referring to the verbal inquiry of to-day by the chief clerk of your board, you are informed that there are at this time available for certification to the board seven eligibles for district vocational officer. Only one of these eligibles is a resident of the second district, his name and address being Eugene H. Meyer, 149 Fabyan Place, Newark, N. J. Mr. Meyer was selected from certificate 470 for placement officer.

By direction of the commission.

Very respectfully,

MARTIN A. MORRISON,
President.

I should also like to introduce a copy of the "Civil Service Act Rules, amended to January 1, 1918, rule 8, page 54, Temporary appointment," which provides that where a register is not certified containing at least three eligibles, the appointing officer has the right to name some one for temporary appointment not on the register.

(The matter referred to is as follows:)

CIVIL-SERVICE ACT RULES, STATUTES, AND EXECUTIVE ORDERS.

[Amended to Jan. 1, 1918. Rule VIII. Temporary appointment. P. 54.]

PAR. 3. When there is at least one eligible and not more than two eligibles on a register for any grade in which a vacancy exists, the commission shall, upon requisition from the proper appointing officer, certify the name of the one eligible or the names of the two eligibles, which shall be considered by the appointing officer with a view to probational appointment; and if the appointing officer shall elect not to make probational appointment from such certificate of less than three names, then, if temporary appointment is required, it shall be made from such certificate unless reasons satisfactory to the commission are given why such appointment should not be made. Such temporary appointment may continue until three eligibles are provided. If selection is not made from the ecrtificate for either probational or temporary appointment under the provisions of this section, then temporary appointment, if required, may be made under the provisions of section 2 of this rule.

I should also like to state that of the seven eligibles referred to as being eligible for the position of district vocational officer, one is in the service of the board as training assistant, five of them declined——

Mr. BURROUGHS. Declined appointment?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; for one reason or another. For instance, Mr. McCartney, whom I know very well, stated that he would not accept an appointment. Mr. Charles M. Pritchard has written stating that he would be glad to be considered for appointment, but does not care to accept temporary appointment unless a very attractive one. You understand that all of our appointments run to the 30th of June, the end of the fiscal year. Of course, as far as I am concerned, if I make good, I have no doubt I will be continued as long as it is necessary to keep men in the service, but you can not get everybody to see it that way.

Mr. Oscar H. Lipps was in the Indian Office, and Secretary Lane reported the transfer could not be approved when Mr. Lipps asked if he could consider a position with the board.

Mr. Price stated he would consider it if he were given $4,000 a year. Mr. Ford was offered a position, and declined. Mr. Whyte is now with the board in District No. 11, which is in Denver.

I may also state, Mr. Chairman, while I am discussing the question of civil service, that from July 18, 1919, to April 15, 1920, there were 531 men certified by the Civil Service Commission as eligible for staff positions on the board. Of these, 329 of them were employed by the board as temporary employees, pending the certification of the Civil Service Commission; that is 62 per cent. Of those 62 per cent, 286 remained, 826 resigned prior to certification, and 17 were transferred to the United States Public Health Service. We offered positions to 42 others who were not previously employed by the board, or 8 per cent, and they accepted. Eighty-four persons, or 16 per cent of those certified, declined to accept the position offered by the board, for the following reasons: 23 gave no reason; 1 declined on account of illness; 10 declined because they could not leave their present position; 7 declined because they had secured more profitable employment elsewhere; 36 refused to accept the salary offered; and 7 could not be located. We rejected 23 persons, or 4 per cent, because we did not believe they had the proper qualifications for the work. We have 53 men, or 10 per cent, of those who have been certified whose final action is still awaited by the board.

From the above it will be noted that only 328 men, or 62 per cent of the men certified by the Civil Service Commission, accepted or remained in the employ of the board. Of this group, only 42, or 8 per cent, were new employees.

In regard to the clerical personnel in the districts, the district vocational officer, subject to the limitations which have been set by the central office as to the amount of salaries which they may pay, chooses his personnel from the civil-service certifications of those on the regular register. There is in preparation now a revised table of organization based on the experience of the last six months, and I want to say to you that we expect to give the district vocational officers ample clerical assistance to do the job. We expect to hold them responsible for it, and ask them to use every business economy to keep the overhead expenses down. But with the exception of meeting the civil-service regulations in the district in which the office is located we give them absolute authority over the appointment, and not only the appointment but the discharge, the separation from the service, of all clerical appointees.

Of course, I think the time is not here and will not come when the chief of the division will not exercise his authority over the districts when he thinks it is necessary, and I believe you will agree that that is sound administration.

On the question of decentralization, I repeat what Mr. Munroe said this morning that there is no department of the Government at the present time that is decentralized to the extent that the Federal Board for Vocational Education is, when you take into consideration the necessity for maintaining uniform standards all over the country. That has not always been true.

I would like, in passing, to just call the attention of this committee to the fact that there were five former employees who testified before this committee. One of them, Mr. Charles H. Winslow, resigned on the 1st of October; one, Mr. George B. McGovern, on the 1st of August, 1919; Mr. F. G. Wadsworth, on October 1, 1919, but had taken his leave prior to that time, if I recollect correctly; Mr. Arthur W. Griffin, on October 10, but, according to his testimony on page 553, he states he did not know of the workings of the board since the 1st of August when he resigned; Dr. Thomas H. Buckler, on May 1, who stated that he did not know of the workings of the board since that time. See pages 631, 633, and 643 of the testimony.

I might also state with regard to all persons who are not former employees of the board that the majority of the information—and I shall discuss it when I come to it—is taken from the views as they got them prior to the 1st of October, 1919.

It is necessary to maintain uniform standards. Mr. McMurtrie, for instance, compared our work with that of the American Red Cross. The American Red Cross is an organization which is not bound by the regulations of anybody except the American Red Cross. It is a wonderful organization, but the Federal Board for Vocational Education is not only bound by its own regualtions, but by the regulations of the Treasury Department, which we must accept. For instance, a few days ago—I think I spoke of this informally to some members of the committee; it is merely a little thing, but it shows some of the things we have had to deal with—a few days ago we had a notice from the Treasury Department that after the 1st day of May—no; I think it was the 15th day of April—they would not pass for payment any more vouchers for tuition which were based on a 30-day month. I can explain that by saying that if a boy goes in training in a commercial school on the 5th of a month, they had been dealing with his tuition as being twenty-five thirtieths of a month, due at the end of the month. The Treasury Department has held that in future we must compute it, in a 31-day month, as being twenty-five thirty-firsts, and in a 28-day month as being twenty-five twenty-eighths. It means but a few cents, but a 30-day month had passed the Treasury Department, had been approved by the auditors, and had gone on through and payment made on that basis, as some other payments were made.

For instance, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, I think, pays its claims on a basis of a 30-day month, but then this regulation comes and we have to conform to it, and when we do conform to it it causes confusion and causes the statement to be made that we are changing our policy in that way.

For the purpose of keeping uniform standards throughout the country these eligibility men, whom I have described a few minutes ago, were sent out. The eligibility man is the outgrowth of a traveling case-board representative, as he was called. The case board in Washington passed on the cases of soldiers as they were submitted to the Washington office. I can not answer definitely the reason why all of these cases were submitted to Washington. You know, and all of us know, that the number of men approved for training, the number of men probably taking training, is very much larger than anyone anticipated.

I think it was originally estimated before the committee, was it not, Judge, that somewhere between 15,000 and 20,000 would be the maximum who would be entitled to training?

Mr. TOWNER. That was the advice the committee received from the Canadian experts, based upon their experience.

Mr. LAMKIN. Based upon their experience. I want to discuss that a little later, if I may, as to what I think are the reasons for some of the confusion during the early part of the last year. In order to clear these cases, shortly after the passage of the divorce law the cases in the districts that had been sent to Washington were piling up, no doubt because they could not get a decision from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. Mr. Godwin said yesterday that he learned a good deal about the early difficulties, and I am sure I learned a good deal about the early difficulties when I heard Mr. Munroe discuss the matter yesterday. I knew of no dealings with the bureau. Those matters had not been discussed with me. When those cases were submitted here and were decided and referred back to the districts, some one in Washington—I do not know who is responsible; I assume Dr. Smith, who was chief of the division of rehabilitation just prior to my coming here, was responsible—sent what they called a traveling case board representative to the various districts. In other words, if I were in St. Louis I would have been informed that on the 15th day of the month a man would come from the central office and spend a few days with us, and during those days with us he would pass on all these cases. That was followed by eligibility squads, which were organized to go over all the case files, to take the cases and go through them, right straight through to the end, through all the files, and take every folder that was in it, and every man that was in it, and say to the district vocational officer, "This man is entitled to training on this evidence he has here," and say, "This man here is not entitled to training on what you have here, is not legally entitled to training, but you get this evidence which will show whether or not he is entitled to training," and that eligibility squad started out, and we tried that first in Boston. We did not have enough men to do the job quickly in Boston. We increased the number by sending in one man from each of the several districts. We sent, I think, 20 men to New York; I think it was 20. Those men audited the files and learned what they could about handling rapidly the cases in the files.

Digitized by Google

I would like to read a paragraph or two from a letter of October 14, 1919, stating that the plan of this eligibility or flying squadron would involve the following:

> The men would be called into central office for a week's intensive training. They would be divided into groups of say four each. A group would be sent to a district office to go through the files, act on such cases as could be acted upon and note definitely the information that is lacking on others.

You understand, Mr. Chairman, that while our relations have been very cordial with many of the Government agencies, the Bureau of Public Health, which has been examining for the bureau of war risk insurance, was supposed to send copies of the men's medical examination to us, but they have not done so in a great many cases. The Army was supposed to send a copy of the man's discharge to us—I mean the medical examination. We did not get them in a large number of cases.

> They would be expected to spend a week in an office, then go to another district office and follow the same procedure. In that way there would be a group in each district office one week in every month. This group would have power to act, but would not necessarily take the place of the traveling case board representative, who would be there when they were not there.
> You will note by this plan that you would lose the service of one man from your force. On the other hand, every four weeks you would have four men who would be trained to do the particular thing they are sent out to do.
>
> The man whom you send should be capable of working rapidly, should have good judgment, should have had Army organization experience, if possible. If not, should be able to judge of Army paper, and should be willing to work day and night. In other words, outside of the supervisors in your office, he should be the best man on your force.

It will be the duty of this "squad" to pass upon eligibility for training. In other words, they will say whether or not a man is eligible for training, or if not eligible on the evidence submitted, what additional is necessary. It will then be the duty of the district office to notify the man that he can be placed in training whenever he is willing to start.

Please wire upon receipt of this letter the name of the man whom you will detail for this duty and have him report at Washington, Monday morning, October 20.

Those eligibility squads generally went out to the districts after they left Boston. They worked in the evening and at night. They did it because by doing it they interfered less with the regular work of the office. They went to the office at the closing hour, either 4.30 or 5, whatever it was, and they worked until midnight. They worked 7½ hours, which were the regular Government hours, but they were not interrupted. They worked rapidly, most of the time with their overcoats on, and much of the time with their hats on, in order to keep warm during the time they were out. Those men finished their work about the 1st of February in all of the districts. Since that time there has been a permanent man established in each one of the district offices.

In New York, for instance, we have three, in Chicago, we have two, and we will place as many other men there as necessary, and they are calling for training with the men from the district office, so that if necessary these men can subsequently be withdrawn.

A question was asked yesterday, I believe it was, about carrying the work out into the field. My recollection is that late in January, or early in February, the first one of these men went out into the field away from the District offices. Mr. J. B. Scott went to several towns in Michigan, and the plan was communicated to other district vocational officers. In that case the eligibility man went right out into the field and sat there in the town of Saginaw, or Jackson, or Bay City, or anywhere else, and said to these boys, "Come in and we will have our talk here, and bring to you our board, and examine you, and then say whether or not you are entitled to training, and we will go on away and leave this training man to put you in training and follow you up and remain with you." The Cincinnati office sent these field men out with the papers in their pockets, stating that so and so and so and so were entitled to training, and they were instructed to go out and put them in training, and notify the Cincinnati office who was in training. A little later the Philadelphia office sent what they called a clean-up squad to Pittsburgh. The New York office started it along about the 1st of April, maybe a little earlier than that, maybe the 15th of March—I do not remember that detail, but other officers had been told to do it just as quickly as they could arrange to get their files out into the field.

Personally, I believe that we should invest the authority which is now in the district offices in the branch offices, I mean clear into the field, but that is a question of development, Mr. Chairman, of training your personnel, of extending into the field the authority to act, and you can not do it with men whom you can not pay a reasonable salary to command them.

Our relations with other Government organizations, Mr. Chairman, have been reasonably friendly. I think here in Washington I can say that our relations are better now than they have ever been. I think there can be no cross purposes between the acts of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the Federal Board for Vocational Education. I really feel that our relations with the United States Public Health Service are even a little closer than the relations between the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the United States Public Health Service, possibly because there is no appropriation jealously between us and the bureau, as there may be between the bureau and the Public Health Service.

Digitized by Google

Mr. BURROUGHS. Would you mind at this point outlining a little bit more fully what your relations are with the Public Health Service?

Mr. LAMKIN. The United States Public Health Service, Mr. Chairman, in the first place furnishes our chief medical officer, Col. McDill, who is a regular employee of the United States Public Health Service, and ranks as Assistant Surgeon General. I spoke to Col. Cholmeley-Jones some time ago about something that was done by the Public Health Service, and he said, "How do you get it over?" I said, "I do not know how it is done. I merely tell Col. McDill what we want, and he goes and gets it."

Our medical officers in the districts are in very close touch with the supervisors. We have made arrangements to get all their medical examinations. We are sending our clerks and stenographers to the offices of the Public Health supervisors in the various districts to make copies of the medical examinations which we need, and which they have not furnished to us. In the Public Health hospitals we have arranged to go in with him and undertake vocational training. There are at present, I believe, some 51 Public Health hospitals. We are now in Greenville, N. C., where we have 127 students. We are now in the Public Health Hospital at Perryville, Md., where we have 78 students in training. We are going into the Public Health Hospital at Norfolk, Mass., which you know is a mental hospital. We are in the Public Health Hospital at Alexandria, La., where we have 173 men now in training. We are going into Biltmore, N. C.; New Haven, Conn.; we are going into the Johnson City, Tenn., soldiers' home, where men with arrested cases of tuberculosis, I believe, are treated. They have set aside a building there where we can give them training on a farm attached to it.

There was, Mr. Chairman, a difference of opinion as to whether or not the work that was done in the Public Health Service Hospital was occupational therapy, curative in its nature, or whether it was really vocational training, but the board has, I think, always been willing to meet the Public Health more than half way on it, and we finally got to the point where we are forgetting whether it is occupational therapy or vocational training, and we are going in and giving the work, putting our teachers in there to lead them, so that we can take advantage of the five or six months that the boys are in the hospital before they get out, so that they can continue right along with their training when they come out. Does that about answer your question?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes, I think so; but perhaps I might state that what led me to make that suggestion was that a month or so ago, when I was at home in New Hampshire, the head of the American

Digitized by Google

Legion in our State, with whom I chanced to be talking, discussing this matter of delays in connection with the Federal board, stated that his experience, latterly, anyway, had been that the chief cause of those delays, so far as they had existed at all, was due rather more to the Public Health Service than to the Federal board officials. Of course, I imagine that he came in contact with the Boston office.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes.

Mr. BURROUGHS. More than with any other. I did not have an opportunity to go into the board fully with him, but I just wondered how that came about.

Mr. LAMKIN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to attempt to throw any blame on any other department of the Government, nor to excuse the delay. The point is that we have got to get rid of delay rather than excuse it. But I think you will find that 75 per cent, I will say, of the sins of omission that have been charged against the Federal board have been largely due to delays of either the bureau or the Public Health Service. I think that is disappearing now, but in the long run the doctor, whose professional honesty is at stake, is the man who is going to take the blame in the minds of a great many of these boys. The Public Health Service was, my last information was, something like 1,000 cases behind our requests in the Boston office. That is my recollection of it.

Our relationship is extending out to the districts. On the 30th of October I sent this following night telegram to every one of our district offices. The same telegram was sent to their representatives by both the bureau and the Public Health Service.

At conference to-day of Public Health Service, War Risk Bureau, Red Cross, and Federal Board it was decided to take steps immediately to house the three Government agencies in one building in each district. Get in touch with representatives of these other organizations, canvass situation, and submit recommendations at earliest practicable moment. Red Cross should be invited to participate in conference to further closer working relations with all.

As the result of that telegram and of our negotiations we are in the same building in Boston, we are in the same building in New York. The War Risk and the Federal board are in the same building in Philadelphia, and the Public Health is coming with us. We are going to the same building they are in in New Orleans. We are in the same building in San Francisco, and we have got our arrangements made in Minneapolis, and the negotiations are under way in other cities. I would rather not state all of our negotiations, because I know that in one city the Public Health Service has been notified that their quarters have been leased to somebody else because they understand they have gotten orders from Washington to combine, and therefore they have got to get out. They are going to get out anyway, but they have got to get out before they are ready. We are going to get together in all of these cities, with the idea that the man, when he comes to one building to see one Government agency can get the service that he needs and get it done. I made the statement to Col. Cholmeley-Jones the other day that whenever he was ready in the city of New York, we were ready; that if he wanted to move the files of the war-risk insurance right up there and decide his cases up there in New York, we would meet him. The Bureau of War Risk Insurance, I might say, is sending us copies of all its awards.

I hope you will understand, gentlemen, that a big organization of this kind is a question of gradual development. It is not a question right now with me as to whether we properly organized to start with. It is the question of a condition as we found it, and what we are going to do to remedy it, and we are developing and cutting down the duplication of work. Now, these eligibility squads have been coming back, and when they come in I say to the men, "Where is it that we can cut out duplication? What is it that we are asking the fellows the same thing for?" And the reply was that we are asking a man for a medical examination when he says he had had a medical examination from the bureau on which he has got an award of compensation.

I immediately went to the bureau and put the proposition up to Col. Cholmeley-Jones and Col. Hallett, in charge of the compensation claims section, and in a few days' time we had an agreement by which they would run us off on their addressograph machine names of the men to whom they were paying awards of compensation, and we had a card printed, what we call Form 553, and we sent them over to the bureau, and they ran them through their addressograph machine, and that gives the man's name, his last known address, and how much compensation he is getting. We send those cards to the various districts, with the instruction, "That you are to accept this card as proof, not evidence, but as proof, first, that the man was honorably discharged from the service. If he was not, he would not get his compensation from the bureau. Second, that he had a disability incurred or increased or aggravated by his service, or traceable to it; if he did not, he would not get his compensation. In other words, we accept as absolute proof the award of any civilian department of the Government that a man was honorably discharged and that he had a disability. Then we instructed every district vocational officer to make an investigation to see whether or not that man was entitled to section 2 training, but, on the basis of the card, to immediately state to him that he was entitled to section 3 training, even if he was not entitled to section 2. We further instructed the district officers, in the case of these men who did not have a certificate of medical examination by the Public Health Service, to send their clerks over to the United States Public Health Service and pull their files and get the medical examination and send them so that we could act on their cases without asking for more. That was not done until this eligibility squad was sent out some time during the first of March, but the bureau is now furnishing us with awards as they are making them from time to time.

Mr. TOWNER. We will have to adjourn at this time until 10 o'clock Monday morning.

(Whereupon the committee adjourned until Monday, May 3, 1920, at 10 o'clock a. m.)

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Monday, May 3, 1920.

The committee met at 10 o'clock a. m., Hon. Simeon D. Fess (chairman) presiding.

TESTIMONY OF MR. UEL W. LAMKIN, CHIEF, DIVISION OF REHABILITATION, FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION—Resumed.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Lamkin, on Saturday, I believe, you were in the process of giving testimony and had not finished?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You may resume your testimony now.

Mr. LAMKIN. Mr. Chairman, I think I had gotten Saturday to our relations with other Government agencies, particularly in Washington. I had stated that I thought they were more friendly and that we were in closer cooperation now than we had ever been. Of course, the three agencies that deal with the soldiers are the Bureau of War Risk, the Federal Board, and the Public Health Service, and they have to be in close cooperation.

I stated Saturday that we had extended that cooperation throughout the districts and that in four cities we were now in the same buildings, and in two cities we would be in the same buildings very shortly.

Our relations with other agencies aside from those Government agencies are very harmonious at this time. The American Red Cross is particularly valuable. The American Red Cross has a work to do which is sometimes confused with the work which Government agencies do. However, it does a social-service work in the aftercare of not only disabled men but other ex-service men who are economically distressed—not physically, but economically distressed. Those, of course, the Federal Board has no authority to assist. The work of the American Red Cross is very largely with the families rather than with the men themselves, although loans are made to the men on occasions.

You had detailed here with a good deal of exactness our relations with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. I think the committee, the Congress, and the American people all agree that the Elks have done a very remarkable and commendatory piece of work.

Our relations with the National Catholic Work Council have been very friendly; in fact, they have put at our disposal hospitals with whom they had contracts which enabled us to take care of some men whom we could not otherwise have taken care of because of the fact that the hospital facilities were not available, and their disabilities did not occur in the military service.

I think our relations with the American Legion are better than they have ever been. The cooperation with the American Legion started some time ago.

On the 7th of November, 1919, the following letter was sent to the district vocational officers, to all of them:

Under arrangements entered into with Mr. Charles P. Sheridan, national war risk officer of the American Legion, district vocational officers will forward to the State chairmen of the various States in their districts complete lists of all men in the respective States who have been approved for training, but who have not yet entered upon their courses of instruction. Supplemental lists are also to be sent from time to time at reasonable intervals as additional men are approved for training.

The idea was to get word out to the American Legion posts that this man had been approved for training and to get into personal touch with him, which the board recognizes is necessary if the man is to take advantage of the opportunities offered to him.

A sufficient number of lists should be furnished to the State chairman in order to provide one for each local post. The number of copies required in your district (Boston) is indicated as follows:

	Copies.
Maine	75
Vermont	80
New Hampshire	70
Massachusetts	235
Rhode Island	35
Total	495

The American Legion representatives have agreed, on their part, upon receipt of the lists of approved men to send a copy to each local post, together with a copy of the inclosed letter and any further instructions which may appear locally advisable. Supplemental lists will be distributed in like manner.

It is hoped by this means to stimulate acceptance of the benefits offered to disabled men by the Federal Board and largely reduce the number who have been approved for training, but who have to date not entered upon it.

Instruction No. 74, as I remember the number, provides that similar lists shall be sent to the American Red Cross division chapters and to the Veterans of Foreign Wars; and it is stated in Instruction No. 74 that the list should give the name of the man, his post-office address, and if desirable, the probable course for which he has been approved. The service and information section of the War Department is also notified so that we can use these various cooperating agencies to get the word over to the man that he is approved for training and to explain to him the benefits which are his under the law.

We are calling in the several States, or asking the American Legion to call in the several States, conferences of what we call vocational-training officers to be appointed by the local posts. This is provided for in Service Bulletin No. 8 of the American Legion, submitted by Commander D'Olier. I think it is not necessary to put that in the record in full. If anybody wants to ask for Bulletin No. 8, the American Legion will be glad to give it to them.

The CHAIRMAN. You can identify it in the record, Mr. Lamkin.

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir; that is a guess.

Mr. ROBSION. Have you any idea of the number when you went into the office?

Mr. GODWIN. We were handling over 800 cases through that office since October or handling them now in process.

Mr. ROBSION. From the time you went there in October up to this time as many as 800 men have made application?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Have made application up to this date?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. How many of those cases have been disposed of?

Mr. GODWIN. That would be another guess.

Mr. ROBSION. Let us have another guess.

Mr. GODWIN. I would say, roughly, 400 of them; 50 per cent.

Mr. ROBSION. You are not maintaining your 80 per cent?

Mr. GODWIN. We can not get to that; we have not had the physical force there to do it.

Mr. ROBSION. I am not asking the reason, I just wanted to find out the condition. Perhaps, you better speak to the central office in Washington.

Mr. GODWIN. No; they are doing what they can.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Munroe testified yesterday that there were $10,000,000 available to the central office that had not been spent.

Mr. GODWIN. We never appealed to the central office for anything that they have not quoted the law on us.

Mr. ROBSION. Does the law provide that you can not pay a stenographer more than $100 a month?

Mr. GODWIN. That is my understanding.

Mr. ROBSION. You have read it and make that statement?

Mr. GODWIN. No; I have not read it.

Mr. ROBSION. Did they write a letter that the law, not their ruling, but the law, not their order, provided that you could not pay a stenographer more than $100 a month?

Mr. GODWIN. I have not the letter before me and I can not say.

Mr. ROBSION. Let us go back to the first principles. The important thing is to get training?

Mr. GODWIN. That is it.

Mr. ROBSION. If he is not getting it this committee wants to find out why he is not getting it, and if Congress is to blame let them bear the blame, and if the central office is to blame I want to put it on them.

Mr. GODWIN. That is right.

Mr. ROBSION. If you are to blame, I would like to see it put there.

Mr. GODWIN. I will take my share.

Mr. ROBSION. There are 800 in your department?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. And you think that, perhaps, 400 have been disposed of?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Of course, that leaves 400?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. What have the 400 fellows been saying?

Mr. GODWIN. Some of them have been saying ugly words.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Have they written some ugly words?

Mr. GODWIN. A few of them, not very many.

Mr. ROBSION. You have read two or three very nice letters and I am glad you have.

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. They show appreciation and that you have done some good?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Have you any letters of the fellows complaining of this bureau?

Mr. GODWIN. I have not one with me, but I remember the substance of one of the letters. The young man is now in the Kansas University at his own expense, pending the decision of the board.

Mr. ROBSION. Pending his decision?

Mr. GODWIN. Pending the decision of the board. He is in the Kansas University at Lawrence. Just a few days before I left he wrote and said that he was getting along fine and sent his schedule of work in the university to show what he was doing and said that he had no complaint whatever, though his case had been delayed—he had no complaint to make against the Federal board.

Mr. TOWNER. The committee will adjourn at this time until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

(Thereupon, the committee took a recess until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee reassembled, pursuant to recess, Hon. Horace M. Towner presiding.

STATEMENT OF MR. WILLIAM M. GODWIN—Resumed.

Mr. TOWNER. The committee will come to order. Do you desire to make any additional statement, Mr. Godwin?

Mr. GODWIN. I may have one or two short statements to make, Mr. Chairman. With reference to the figures in the vocational summary, it occurred to me just as I was leaving the room a while ago that those figures bring us up within the vacation period during which time all of the educational institutions are closed and there could be no people inducted into training during that period, and I suspect that if the figures were for October and November that there would be a different story. I would like to call attention to another fact that in July, about the 9th of July, I think it was, I was directed to leave my post at Fort Riley and go into the St. Louis office, and when I arrived there I learned orders had issued suspending the work for a few days because of something that was going on here, and so it was some two weeks, I believe, after I returned to Fort Riley to my work at that time.

Then there was another matter further with reference to the men who refused to take training. When I was in the St. Louis office a day or two ago on my way here, a few days ago, a man came in who had been some months in the hospital and wanted to know why he had been assigned to training. I looked up his record, and he had been assigned to the hospital again, and he had refused to go, and Mr. Stott, the vocational adviser in the St. Louis office, and I were talking to him. He said that he did not want to go to a hospital, as it would take him four or five months, probably that long, to recover, and I had told him he had better do it. It was suggested to him that he had better be in the hospital a year, and be on the ground the balance of the time, but he seemed to think that he wanted to get away from the hospital and into training, although the doctor advised it, and there is no dissention of opinion among the board that he ought to be in a hospital rather than in training. I have found a number of men of that kind.

I want to say also that while I was in the St. Louis office a young soldier came in and was surveyed and accepted section 3 training, and within an hour was assigned to section 3 training. I saw that in the St. Louis office just a few days ago. I thought I had the man's name here, but I do not see it just now. Those are about all of the additional statements that I have to make. There are instances like those I recited this morning which have occurred almost dozens of times almost every day since I have been with the service, and it is not worth while to repeat them.

Mr. ROBSION. I wish you would state how many and who it is you have in the Kansas City branch?

Mr. GODWIN. When I left there Mr. George W. Kirk was the supervisor of training. Mr. W. I. Potter was the supervisor of placement, assisted by Mr. J. C. Neitzel, and I was vocational advisor. We had one stenographer there—Miss Evans—who was a very competent young woman, and I wondered why she stayed with us, because she could have stepped out of that office any day and gotten $50 a month more than she was being paid.

Mr. ROBSION. Outside of the stenographic help, you have sufficient force to handle it?

Mr. GODWIN. In placement; no, sir. Mr. Potter needs two good assistants.

Mr. ROBSION. I think you are in error when you claim that the law limits the stenographer's salary to $100.

Mr. GODWIN. It has been my advice, and I told you I did not read the law.

Mr. ROBSION. I am not blaming you for that. You are not responsible for that. But I have been somewhat struck with the situation that arises here. Quite a number of the staff at New York testifying here claimed that they are short of help, but under the law they could have all the stenographers and clerical force they needed and had plenty of them and could have had under the law, but they could not use up all the funds provided for stenographers and clerical help. Now, you put it on the other ground that in your office you can not get sufficient help.

Mr. GODWIN. My information was we were limited to $100 for a temporary stenographer; we could not get them at that price that could do the work.

Mr. ROBSION. How many of these 400 men that you think have been passed up for training have been actually placed in training, in your opinion?

Mr. GODWIN. You want my opinion and guess?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Digitized by Google

Mr. GODWIN. I do not believe it would be worth much, because when I survey a man, get him in full sympathy with us and we with him, he is then turned over to the supervisor of training, and I keep no record.

Mr. ROBSION. What is your best estimate?

Mr. GODWIN. My best estimate is that 90 per cent of those who will accept training at this time are in training.

Mr. ROBSION. Have any of them completed their training?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir; some have completed their training and are in placement.

Mr. ROBSION. And upon what terms do you put them in placement training?

Mr. GODWIN. Mr. Potter takes them. He finds the job for which they have been prepared and puts them on the job just the same as if they were still in the institution of the training.

Mr. ROBSION. Do they get paid?

Mr. GODWIN. They are paid by the board.

Mr. ROBSION. Is that the only pay they get?

Mr. GODWIN. Sometimes I understand that their employers pay them some.

Mr. ROBSION. Are they put in business enterprises in groups?

Mr. GODWIN. That is outside of my department. I do not know, but I think not.

Mr. ROBSION. You took occasion to explain the reason of the small number of cases that have been passed upon as compared with the lists read by Mr. Burroughs by stating that last August was the vacation season.

Mr. GODWIN. June, July, and August, generally.

Mr. ROBSION. Would that have anything to do with passing on a man's case?

Mr. GODWIN. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. So these figures that Mr. Burroughs read in that report simply deal with the number of persons who have registered and the persons whose cases have been passed upon, did it not?

Mr. GODWIN. My understanding is that it was the ones who had been placed in training.

Mr. ROBSION. Your figures did not relate to persons placed in training, did they?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Those total figures that I read represented the total cases surveyed, and then the other figures on the same date represented the total number that had actually been placed in training.

Mr. GODWIN. That is my understanding.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Was that correct? May be I am not right in that. Perhaps it was the number that had been actually recommended to the case board.

Mr. ROBSION. I would like to get it. I understand the board did not give the figures of cases that have been passed upon and recommended either for section 2 or section 3 training.

Mr. GODWIN. The record will show that.

Mr. ROBSION. I developed again right along that line after I took you by making a comparison showing there that you had 6,000 cases

Digitized by Google

registered when you went there in July, and when you gave the last figures in August there was only about 2,000 in training, and after the 80 per cent perhaps there were 2,800 whose cases had not been passed upon in the four months.

Mr. GODWIN. The records will all show that.

Mr. ROBSION. So, if Mr. Burroughs was merely reading the figures in the cases that were passed upon and not in training, then your observations about vacation would not apply at all to them. In other words, the matter of the vacation going on in the country in the schools would not interrupt the work of passing on the cases in determining whether or not a fellow would have training, would it?

Mr. GODWIN. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. You spoke of some young man that had written a letter of complaint that was in a university at his own expense.

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Waiting on his case. How long had he been waiting?

Mr. GODWIN. His case, I think, was taken up in January or February of this year.

Mr. ROBSION. When did you get the letter?

Mr. GODWIN. I would say about the first of April.

Mr. ROBSION. What was holding his case up?

Mr. GODWIN. The question as to whether he is a section 2 or section 3 man.

Mr. ROBSION. You have the power in Kansas City to pass on that question, do you not?

Mr. GODWIN. No, sir; that is a matter that is fixed by the medical board in St. Louis.

Mr. ROBSION. St. Louis has the authority to pass on that?

Mr. GODWIN. St. Louis has the power; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Why is it that it would take three or four months to pass on that boy's case?

Mr. GODWIN. Really, I do not know.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, that is not the only letter of complaint that you received at the Kansas City branch, is it?

Mr. GODWIN. No; I think I have received about three others besides that.

Mr. ROBSION. What was the tenor of those letters?

Mr. GODWIN. They were wondering why their cases could not be decided.

Mr. ROBSION. But you have demonstrated to the board here from your actual experience that cases can be and have been passed on in a short time, have you not?

Mr. GODWIN. Yes, sir; they can be and have been.

Mr. ROBSION. That is all.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Lamkin, do you desire to take the stand at this time?

Mr. LAMKIN. Whenever you are ready.

Mr. TOWNER. You may proceed, then.

STATEMENT OF MR. UEL W. LAMKIN, CHIEF DIVISION OF REHABILITATION, FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

(The witness was duly sworn by the acting chairman.)

Mr. TOWNER. Give your name and address to the stenographer.

Mr. LAMKIN. My name is Uel W. Lamkin; my legal residence is in Missouri, and my present residence is in Congress Hall Hotel, Washington, D. C., which is my present address.

Mr. TOWNER. What is your present position with the Federal board?

Mr. LAMKIN. Chief Division of Rehabilitation.

Mr. TOWNER. When did you enter upon your duties?

Mr. LAMKIN. As chief?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAMKIN. September 15, 1919.

Mr. TOWNER. What was your prior occupation?

Mr. LAMKIN. May I make rather an extended statement about that?

Mr. TOWNER. Just as you choose about that.

Mr. LAMKIN. I spent most of my life in administrative school work. That is what my chief occupation has been, although my education was for law. I was admitted to the bar and went back to school administration immediately upon admission. On account of the economic conditions facing school-teachers, I went into business and was in business in September, 1916, when the State superintendent of schools of the State of Missouri died. The governor of Missouri, without solicitation on my part, appointed me to succeed him. I was State superintendent of schools at the outbreak of the war. I would like to make this statement because of the background, which may be valuable in your considering all the phases of the administration of the rehabilitation act. Before the war was declared the schools of Missouri had started on a food-production campaign that, I think, was not excelled by any State in the Union. During the war I did my part as a State official. I am now 43 years old and was then 41. I did not see military service, although I made inquiry as to enlisting and was told that I might get a place in the Army, detailed to Washington. There was no chance for any overseas service or any active service, and I remained where I was. I claimed no exemption, although a State officer, although married, and with a boy whose physical condition has always given us a good deal of concern. As State superintendent of schools it was my privilege to take a very decided stand in regard to the teaching of foreign languages in the elementary schools of the State, and whether anyone agrees or disagrees with my position on that subject, I lost enough votes in the counties where the German language was the language of the playground to make a difference in the election. Just after the election, in which I was defeated for reelection in a popular vote of about 1,000, while the head of the ticket—I being in second place on the ticket—was defeated by 36,000, the then Chief of the Division of Rehabilitation, Dr. Chandler, wired me asking if I would take charge of the St. Louis office of this board. I agreed to do so.

Early in January I became district vocational adviser in St. Louis. I remained there until the 1st of July.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What year was that?

Mr. LAMKIN. 1919. I remained there until the 1st of July, 1919, when I was asked to come to the central office as field organizer. I came. My first assignment was to Philadelphia to succeed Dr. A. J. Roland who was resigning to enter into industrial education work in the city of Milwaukee. I was in charge of the Philadelphia office until the new district vocational officer was appointed. If I remember correctly, Mr. Charles E. Cullen was appointed in Philadelphia about July 23, 1919. I was there until the latter part of July.

Mr. Arthur W. Griffin was being replaced in New York at that timew hile Mr. S. E. Farwell was being transferred to the Boston office. I was asked to take charge of the New York office during the interim of 10 days. I did so and was in charge for 10 days in New York until Mr. Farwell reached there. I then was in the field until the 15th of September. I think I got back to Washington the 11th or 12th and assumed charge of the Rehabilitation Division of the Federal board on September 15, 1919.

I am very glad in this investigation, Mr. Chairman, to answer any questions that I can, but I would like to have it remembered that prior to September 15 my testimony will have to be as a district officer or will have to be taken from the records as I find them in the central office. Since September 15, 1919, I shall be glad to testify concerning my relations as Chief of the Division of Rehabilitation.

Mr. TOWNER. I think the committee will be glad to have you state in your own way the conditions as you fonud them to exist here in Washington at the time when you assumed charge of this rehabilitation work.

Mr. LAMKIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hardly know just how to answer your question. I think in order that this committee should get a comprehensive view of the whole situation some statement and explanation should be made concerning the work of the board and the organization of the board, as a whole, if you would care to have that done.

Mr. TOWNER. We will be very glad to have it.

Mr. LAMKIN. Then I shall be very glad to tell you what the situation was as I saw it here when I came.

I have here a chart showing the organization of the office.

Mr. TOWNER. We would like to have that. I think the committee would like to have that inserted in the record.

Mr. LAMKIN. I will be very glad to do that and I have here several copies.

(Mr. Lamkin distributed copies to each member of the committee.)

Mr. TOWNER. I think that will enable your testimony to be followed more intelligently.

Mr. LAMKIN. The Federal Board for Vocational Education, as has been stated, is composed of seven members. The active members who are on the job all the time are the members of the standing committee, three members. The work of the board falls under two heads, for which there are separate chiefs of divisions and separate appropriations, entirely distinct and separate work. One is the Division of Vocational Education and the other is the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation. The work of the Vocational Education Division, as you know, has to do with the cooperation with the States in promoting vocational education among the schools. The vocational education is the division which is established for the purpose of rehabilitating the disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines. The executive officer of the Vocational Rehabilitation Division is called the chief.

I may say that the executive officer of the whole board, prior to my coming, was called a director. That man was Dr. C. A. Prosser, who resigned October 1, 1915. He acted as executive of the standing committee for both divisions, but since Dr. Prosser's resignation there has been no director, but there have been two chiefs. The chief has as assistants in the central office the chief medical officer, a superintendent of advisement training, a superintendent of placement, a case board, which is headed by the chairman.

I will discuss what the superintendent of records and returns and the case superintendent do a little later, if I may. There is the personnel officer and the chief clerk, the auditor, and the disbursing officer. The corresponding officer in the district is called a district vocational officer. Personal contact with the district vocational officer is made through the field organizers, of whom we have two. These two field organizers are Mr. R. T. Fisher, who was district vocational officer at San Francisco, and Mr. W. F. Shaw, formerly district vocational officer at Cincinnati.

In the district you will find the district medical officer, the supervisor of advisement and training, the supervisor of placement, the case officer, the case board, and the chief clerk. You will find that where we refer to the superintendent of advisement and training it refers to a man in the central office, whereas when referring to the supervisor of training it refers to the man in the district office.

The chief medical officer has, of course, supervisory control only and is the advisor, I should say, as well as supervisor, over the district medical officer. It is the same with the supervisor of advisement and the superintendent of placement. The functions of the case board, records and returns, and the case superintendent are combined in the district under the case officer. The functions of personnel clerk, chief clerk, and auditor and disbursement officer are in the districts under the chief clerk. The supervisor of advisement and training, for instance, keeps in touch with the various educational opportunities in the various districts. He also acts as a clearing house for all questions of advisements, and helps to direct the vocational advisors in the field in their contact with the men. He also has general supervision over the work of follow up of the men in institutional training, as we call it. I do not like the words institutional training. I would like to say training in institutions rather than to call it institutional training. At the conclusion of it the men are turned over to the placement section. The placement section has a double duty. In the first place, it supervises the instruction of the men on the job, or, as we call it, in placement training. In the second place, after the men have been trained in institutions, it is the placement sections duty to see that they are placed in employment and that they can "carry on" in employment.

The case board in both district and central office passes on the cases on the legal evidence, in the first place, and in the second place, as to whether or not the recommendations of the advisors are sound. The records and returns section of the central office, as you can readily surmise, is the department that has charge of the records that are sent in here. The case superintendent in central office passes on matters concerning dependency and claims, and keeps records as to whether or not the man has been in training for the period for which he is placed, and passes on legal questions. He is legal advisor as well as case superintendent. The personnel officer has charge of the personnel of employees in the central office. The chief clerk has charge of the property of the board, of the file room, and performs the ordinary duties of a chief clerk. The auditor or accounting officer is the person who audits the accounts and the disbursing officer pays them.

Now, in the districts, Mr. Chairman, we have similar organizations, except that they are in direct touch with the men. You will notice that the medical officer, supervisor of advisement and training, and the supervisor of placement are similar. Our central office case board has been reduced in the past few months from about 25 or 26 men to 8. Within the next week or so it will be reduced to two or three at the outside. The reason for the reduction is that we are putting the functions of the case board, practically all of them, more largely all the time in the hands of the districts, so that our case board in the central office will pass only on cases that are appealed from the districts here. If the district says "yes" to the boys, the board will stand back of it; and if it says "no" the boys have the right to appeal to the central authorities. The chief clerk of the district performs, as is noted on this chart, duties which correspond to those of chief clerk, auditor, disbursing officer, and personnel officer in the central office. We have not yet decentralized our audit and disbursing functions of the board. There is reason for it. In the first place, I have felt that it was more important to decentralize the other functions first. In the second place, Treasury regulations are rather technical and difficult to meet, and we have not 14 men who know Treasury regulations whom we can place in the 14 districts, and we can rely upon to see that the legal requirements are met, and we have to keep a hand on that part of the work here in central office until we can ge the men and get them trained and put them in the districts. The records and returns will be kept, at least, for a while here, because of the fact that the numbers of men in the several districts are not large enough to justify the overhead of 14 statistical agencies, and so one is kept.

On the other hand, the functions of the board so far as passing on the cases of the men, the advising with them, of approving their training, of putting them in training, of supervising them and following them up while in training, of seeing that they are employed and properly employed, is delegated to the districts, and central office expects to maintain solely the supervisory function which was so well described by some witnesses here, and which I am sure the committee as well as the board approve. Shall I go on?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. LAMKIN. I would like to discuss as briefly as I can the functions of some of these men in the several districts. I believe this committee is trying to get a comprehensive view of the whole situation.

In the first place, the first man to pass on a case, that the boy comes in contact with, is the vocational advisor. Ever since we could get into hospitals we have had men in the hospitals. I had some work here in central office for Mr. Godwin to do, and have had him at work on it when he was here. I called him in for that work, and in order that he might tell you what was being done and what had been done in the hospitals in the St. Louis district. You understand, of course, that the St. Louis district is but 1 of the 14 districts of the country. The districts were established by the board and rather closely follow the districts of the United States Public Health Service and the National Red Cross.

I understand that the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is asking for authority to establish branch offices, district offices, through the Wason bill, which expects to follow these district lines. In addition to the offices we have certain branch offices in the country. The statement has been made that we have not had any branch offices or do not have any branch offices.

Here is a map showing by the red dots where we have branch offices in the United States; the green stars are our district offices. In the State of California there are some of them, which are marked with black crosses. At those places we are not paying rent. We are paying men for "piecework," as you may call it. We are paying them 95 cents an hour, so that we can call upon them for service at any time when in need. We have in addition to that 16 men situated in various parts of the State of Montana whom we are employing at a dollar a year, so we can call upon them for work if necessary. We have men stationed all through the State of South Dakota at this time. We are planning to have similar ones stationed throughout all the States in district No. 5. These men are recommended to us by the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, or the American Red Cross.

You may be interested in that. I think Mr. Munroe put a list of the branch offices in the record yesterday.

I would like to insert, Mr. Chairman, if I may, in the record, a statement which I thought I had right at my hands showing when these branch offices were established, showing they were established as early as December, 1918. I thought I had it right at my hand, but I will insert the statement later.

This vocational adviser is one of the staff members, as we call him, of the district offices in all the branch offices. I may say in that connection, in reference to Mr. Godwin's testimony, that there is no lack of money for the employment of stenographers. I do not remember that the matter has been put up to me. My judgment is that the difficulty is that we can not get competent stenographers certified from the civil service at $1,200. You understand, Mr. Chairman, that the civil service will certify stenographers to the Federal Board at, say, $1,200, and will certify them to the United States Public Health Service at $1,200, and they will draw the bonus in the United States Public Health Service, the $240, and will not draw it from us. Consequently they will go to the United States Public Health Service, and until they serve the probationary period of six months we can not meet them on equal salary terms. However, we want it understood that we are making arrangements with the Civil Service Commission so that they will certify them to us at the base salary plus the bonus, so that we can pay them $1,440 instead of them being paid $1,200 and the $240 bonus. The psychological effect probably is not quite as good, because the clerk likes to get something for nothing in the way of a bonus, although they get the same amount of money. From the viewpoint of our appropriation it is not quite as good, because that is the large question of whether the overhead, the $1,440, and the $240 bonus will be charged against our overhead, and as all of their services were to be paid out by the different appropriations, the charge against their appropriations and that service, the money comes from the same sources, and we do not believe that Congress is going to be antagonistic at all in the matter of appropriations that are necessary to carry on this work.

The vocational adviser, as I say, is the first one of the staff to meet the soldier. We fill these staff positions subject to later qualification by the Civil Service Commission.

On the 3d of March I had a letter from the Civil Service Commission of which I will read only the first paragraph. I do not wish to burden the record with too much.

In view of the fact that boards had ample registers of eligibles resulting from examinations for training officers, training assistants, placement officers, and assistant medical officers, no further temporary appointments to those positions will be authorized outside of the register.

So we are filling our staff places as we have to have them from the regular civil-service register. We are assigning them to certain districts. The way they are assigned is something like this: We appoint Mr. A. B. to the position as training assistant or training officer. He is sent out to the Chicago district. The district vocational officer at Chicago is authorized to use this man as he sees fit for a period of one or two or three weeks. If he wants him permanently assigned to the staff he can have him. If he does not want him, if he is not satisfactory, he will be moved somewhere else. So, with that understanding, the district vocational officers are free in the selection of their men, as far as the clerical positions are concerned, since the 1st of October. Each district vocational officer has been authorized to employ not to exceed so many clerks, stenographers, at so much money per clerk or per stenographer. They must abide by the civil-service regulations. Further than that the central office has exercised no jurisdiction and proposes to exercise no jurisdiction. It is not necessary for me to say that in any administrative Government office there are constantly requests being made for transfers from Washington to various positions in the field and from one part of the field to another. These matters are always referred to the district vocational officer. If he approves the transfer is made. If he does not approve the transfer is not made. Since the 15th of September, and I am sure before that, there has not been any clerk sent to a district that was not acceptable to the district vocational officer.

The vocational adviser surveys the man. Survey is simply putting on a piece of paper what you can find out about the man's past history, his education, his disability, his preference, and his opportunity for employment. We heard in the early part of this hearing, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Blanton, I believe it was, discuss the ideas which the committee had in framing the legislation. In other words, they wanted to do the best thing they could for each one of the boys. I am sure that has been the attitude of the board. There have been five principal things to take into consideration. In the first place, we have to find out his previous education. It is not necessary for me to say to you that these boys are coming to us ranging from illiterates to college graduates—from the man who never saw the inside of a school to the man who carries a doctor's degree. The second thing that we have to consider is the matter of their previous industrial experience, and we have men who have come to us and know nothing but the ordinary day labor, as you would call it—the man who worked at a wage all his life, or, at least until he went into the service. We have the fellow who had never had any industrial experience of any kind, but was a student. We have the man who has been a corporation lawyer, or a specialist in eye, ear, nose, and throat surgery.

The other thing which we have to consider, and it is the most difficult of any of them, Mr. Chairman, is the question of the man's disability. They vary in degrees of disability from the man who has lost his members in the amputation cases down to the fellow who has become very slightly disabled and possibly has practically no disability at all. Some of them were rated to us by the Army surgeon as 5 per cent. You are interested, and you may be interested now in this, Mr. Chairman. Let me put it this way, that 25 per cent of the persons to whom the Bureau of War Risk Insurance now awards compensation were discharged with no particular disability, and that makes the problem exceedingly difficult. The number of what you might call "basket" cases is very small, indeed, and I think the American people should be extremely thankful that it is so, and that there are so few cases who have lost both arms and both legs and both eyes. So far as I have heard, I have heard of none who have lost all of those. The blinded cases are small in number, comparatively speaking.

Those two things, Mr. Chairman, I would like for the committee to remember. When you were speaking about training we usually think about schools and colleges. Well, the great majority of these men are not of college-grade education. When you are speaking about disabilities, we instinctively picture in our mind the fellow with the leg or arm off. I would like the newspapers of the country to find me the men who have suffered major amputations. I am willing to say that no one who has suffered a major amputation and who has been outside of the hospital 48 hours has not been offered vocational training. In any such case I will guarantee that within 24 hours he will be offered vocational training if it is called to the attention of the central office.

There are two other things that should be considered, fourth, the man's preference concerning what he wants to do. You know and

Digitized by Google

I know that in dealing with boys very frequently they want to do things that they are not capable of doing. The statement was made to me the other day that in one of the New York universities, I do not like to put the names in the public record, but in a New York university there are a number of men who they say wanted to be public accountants. They will never become accountants, but would make good bookkeepers. They have not had the education and business background for certified public accountant. We gave them the opportunity and now will have to drop them back into first-class commercial schools to make good bookkeepers of them. The fifth thing and the last to be considered is the man's opportunity for employment, his employability after he has been trained. Personally, I think that any man who is properly trained can get a job. The difficulty is to see that he is getting the proper training. I personally believe that in America there is room enough for every man that is properly trained to get a job to make a living.

The vocational adviser gets that information. He gets it in as confidential a manner as he can, and he gets it sitting at a table or by his side. It is necessary for me to say to this committee that the man who is to advise the boys, or your boy, or my boy, is worth more than $2,400 a year. I said it last summer when I was here talking to some Members of Congress, and I say it now. Whether or not some men are working for the board at $2,400 a year now is beside the question. He is worth considerably more than that amount of money.

As soon as this information is gotten and the boy surveyed, he is given a medical examination, if we have no medical information on file. If we have a medical history from the Army or from the doctor of thePublic Health Service or the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, that is referred to the medical examiner for rating as to whether or not he is handicapped so that he is entitled to training. The eligibility man who is situated in the district offices is situated there for the sole purpose of determining whether or not the legal evidence on which is based the award of training, which involves the expediture of governmental funds, to see whether or not that legal evidence is in the folder. That legal evidence must constitute, first, some showing that the man was discharged from the Army under honorable conditions; and, second, that he has a disability incurred, increased, or aggravated by his service or traceable to his service; third, that the disability is a vocational handicap; and, fourth, that the training is feasible from a physical and mental standpoint.

That follows the language of section 2 of the vocational rehabilitation act, and in order to legally expend Government money that information must be in the man's folder, and the eligibility man is situated there to see that it is in the man's folder.

The statement has been made that this eligibility man in the district is responsible to the central office. That is true. The reason for that is twofold. In the first place, the district vocational officer says that he would rather have him responsible to Washington for the passing on the eligibility on the legal evidence in the folder, rather than have him responsible to the district office. There is no use of trying to persuade ourselves that there is no pressure brought to bear on district officers to give men training who are not entitled to it. I think I would be insulting the intelligence of a Congressman if I would say that he did not understand that. The district vocational officers have said to me, "I want this eligibility man whom you placed here pass on the legal evidence in the folder on which the expenditure of the Government's money is to be charged responsible to the central office and not to me." There is another reason for it. The eligibility man can not be sent out to do any other work if he has any work on these cases before him. In other words, we want him to attend to the business which he is sent out to do, and we have told him he must see that every case that is brought to him is given attention, and we will give him the necessary help.

There is a case board, or a case conference, as we call it, which passes on the recommendations of the vocational adviser. We are reducing machinery, as we have learned the job, so that we can expedite action on these cases. But here is our vocational adviser. I dare say there is no man in the employ of the board who knows definitely the 800 or 900 various occupations within which men are being trained, and you can not expect one man to know them. Consequently, for a review of the vocational advisement, it is referred to this case conference, which is composed of a doctor, who passes on the physical disability of a representative of the training section, who passes on the manner of training, of a representative of the placement section, to see whether or not he can be employed after being trained, and of the permanent secretary, who serves to keep the cases regularly flowing past the case conference. These other men—the doctor, the training representative, and the placement representative—vary; they are changed from time to time. Before a man would be trained in agriculture, for instance, you will call from your training section the man who knows agricultural training to help prescribe the course. If, on the other hand, you are going to place him, after training, in a machine shop, you will call the man from the placement section who knows that occupation to pass on the probability of his future employment. If he is to be a printer, you will call the man who knows printing and knows the trades.

After that is done he is turned over to the supervision of the training section or placement section for his training, which depends on whether he is to be in an institution or on the job. The supervision and follow-up work is done by training officers or placement officers, as he may be in an institution or on the job. The medical follow-up of the men in training is done by the doctor. We are looking after the health of the men who are in training, and our instructions to the districts are to the effect that if a man is taken sick that he must have immediate attention. If it is a recurrence of his war disability the Bureau of War Risk Insurance will pay for his treatment. If it is not a recurrence of his war disability the Federal Board for Vocational Training will pay for it. A man must have immediate attention if he gets sick, and the question of which department of the Government pays for it will be settled later. The money comes from the same source, the Government, and it matters very little so the man gets the attention and gets it at a reasonable cost to the Government.

I have explained to you what placement training means, but the placement section has not only supervised the men who are in placement training, but after a man completes his training the placement section sees that the man has a job in which he can carry on successfully. If the eligibility officer who is stationed in the central office states that on the evidence which has been submitted a man is not entitled to either section 2 or section 3 training, there is in each district what is called a board of appeals. The board of appeals is composed of the district vocational officer or his representative, the chief medical officer or his representative, and the eligibility man from the central office. If the board of appeals decides or holds that a man is not entitled to the training and he still wishes to do so, he can appeal to the central office for review and decision. You may be interested in knowing that the board of appeals is working nicely and that fewer cases are coming to the central office.

For instance, there were two reports made, one from Boston and one from St. Louis, on the 20th of April, as to how the boards of appeals were working in these two districts. In Boston 56 cases had been appealed from the decision of the eligibility officer. Fourteen of them had decided that the man was entitled to section 2 training out of the 56. Thirty-six had been appealed in the St. Louis district. In 13 of them the board of appeals decided that the man should have section 2 training.

As has been stated before, the district office now has authority to approve cases of training which do not extend more than two years in length and which do not involve an expenditure of more than $500 per year for tuition, transportation, books, and supplies. That is a question of administration, Mr. Chairman. It is an attempt to safeguard the moneys of the United States Government. I do not mean it is an attempt to be niggardly at all; it is not. But when you have two institutions, one of them where a man can get training at a cost of $300 a year, and another one where he can get training at a cost of $600 a year, we want to know why the boy is being sent to the school that charges $600 a year. So far as I know of, there has been no refusal to give the man the training that he should have because of the cost. But we have to set up a liability register, and we have to know how much money these men are costing the Government.

I believe you will agree with me, Mr. Chairman, that there was some crticism at one time of this board, because we did not know how much money we were going to have to have. I want to say that I think in the record of the Senate hearing on the first deficiency appriation bill of 1920, when we made our request for a deficiency appropriation of $20,000,000, that on the estimates which we had then as to the men going into training, if the same number had gone into training, we would have had money enough to come out at the end of the 30th of June just about even. In other words, the estimates which were made were remarkably good estimates for a Government department that is dealing with as uncertain a thing as how many men are going into training. It is sound business when you set reasonable limits on the expenditure of money for tuition and ask that any additional or higher tuition rates be referred to this office for approval.

I may say to you that Mr. Wickersham, when he was here a few days ago, stated that he wrote to me personally in regard to a case

Mr. LAMKIN. That is what it is, Service Bulletin No. 8. The purpose of these vocational training conferences with the legion is to perfect plans by which not only will the man be told of his opportunity for training but that the local posts and particularly the woman's auxiliary will help follow up these boys after they are in training and see that they keep satisfied while they are in training, which I know we all regard as a particularly important piece of work.

The CHAIRMAN. We have the right to believe that the legion will be more sympathetic about that sort of work than some outside organization.

Mr. LAMKIN. I have no doubt about that, and we are in the attitude, and have been in the attitude, of using the legion as fully as it will cooperate and act.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you find the legion ready and willing to do this or do they receive it as a task that they think ought to be exercised by the board?

Mr. LAMKIN. Some States receive it very readily, and in other States they are slow to take hold. I think in the States that are slow to take hold the difficulty is very largely a financial one in getting their conferences called. Some of the State legion organizations have not much money with which they can call these conferences.

As far as the actual work being done is concerned, I think we should use all cooperating agencies, Mr. Chairman, but I feel very strongly that this is a governmental problem, and as far as the bills are concerned the United States Government ought to pay all the bills contracted with it.

The CHAIRMAN. I agree with you.

Mr. LAMKIN. I believe you will agree with that.

There is one other cooperating agency of which I would like to speak, and that is the National Antituberculosis Association, and I would like to speak of that at this time, particularly in view of the statements made in the testimony of Mr. McMurtrie, in which it was stated that we had not cooperated with the National Antituberculosis Association.

The National Antituberculosis Association created a special advisory committee which did, and does now, serve as an advisory committee to the board on the question of the training of men suffering with tuberculosis.

I think, aside from the question of the rehabilitation of men disabled in the military service, the tuberculosis problem in the country as a whole is recognized as one of the serious problems of America. I remember upon my first experience with a congressional committee a Senator questioned me concerning the treatment, or rather the training, of men suffering with tuberculosis. I think I can speak for the board—I know I can speak for myself—when I say that in the training of these men we expect to follow as closely as we can the advice and suggestions which are given by this organization which is devoting its entire attention to the tuberculosis problem.

The CHAIRMAN. You might be interested, Mr. Lamkin, in having your memory refreshed, if you were not present at the hearing, that when the joint hearings were held by this committee and the Senate committee on the industrial cripple bill, a bill that was to add to the rehabilitation of the soldiers, this association to which you refer, the Antituberculosis Association, was very exacting in its demand that the Government do something outside of the soldier work; and you have made an affiliation with that association.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir. I was not present at that hearing of which you speak, but I am sure they are exacting. As I recall the testimony of Mr. McMurtrie, he stated that we had not followed the suggestions which the National Antituberculosis Association made.

Here is a summary of a report dated June 10, 1919, by the advisory committee on tuberculosis, which is drawn up by the secretary of that committee:

In October, 1918, the National Tuberculosis Association was asked to cooperate with the Federal Board in an investigation of problems involved in rehabilitation of tuberculous soldiers, sailors, and marines. An advisory committee was appointed by the president, with the medical field secretary acting as secretary to the committee.

The work of the committee may be summarized as follows:

1. Unanimous conclusion that every man who has once manifested active tuberculosis must be considered to have a more or less permanent disability. The board of directors of the association, March 5, passed a resolution that a man with proven tuberculosis is entitled to compensation, the minimum rate to be not less than 25 per cent. Copies of this resolution were sent to the Surgeon General of the Army and directors of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the Federal board.

That is their first recommendation. Instruction No. 20, under date of the 18th of August, 1919, of the Federal Board, applies directly to that recommendation, that a man shall be considered to have a 25 per cent disability if he is suffering from tuberculosis.

2. Suggested that every award to cases of tuberculosis be subject to possible downward revision after lapse of not less than three years.

Mr. TOWNER. Who was it that made that suggestion?

Mr. LAMKIN. The advisory committee of the National Antituberculosis Association.

Mr. TOWNER. What does that mean?

Mr. LAMKIN. If you will just let me read the next sentence, Judge:

Men should always have opportunity to apply for increased compensation.

That section applies solely to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and not to the board. In other words, if a man regains his earning capacity the award of compensation is subject to downward revision. As far as the board is concerned, we are considering the man to have a major vocational handicap if he has suffered tuberculosis in the service, and I believe that the attitude of Congress, as well as the board and the American people, is that when you start upon a program of vocational rehabilitation it should be completed.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me make an observation here, Mr. Lamkin. I do not know whether the other members of the committee will agree with me or not, but this is my personal impression. I think that it is very unfortunate from a good many standpoints, after having made an award, to decrease it because a man gets better. It occurs to me that the only fair thing to do is to not put a premium upon a man's remaining always incapacitated, but to give him the initial rate or the larger rate, whatever it may be, until the man is finally discharged. It occurs to me that is the better and the more liberal and the more defensible policy with regard to the board's action.

Mr. LAMKIN. Well, Mr. Chairman, may I ask the judge to differentiate between the board and the bureau in that respect. As far as the board is concerned, if you will let me a little later I would like to read into the record a letter or two which definitely states that that is the view which we are taking of it. I believe with you that if we say to this man, "You are entitled to training," we should finish the job until he can stand on his own feet.

Mr. TOWNER. More particularly, the matter has been called to our attention from the demotions from the second to the third grade, a thing that in my judgment ought never to occur unless it is a case of fraud or deception or something of that sort.

Mr. LAMKIN. I would like to discuss that. I think we are not far apart on that matter.

Reading from this same report:

3. Compensation should not be withdrawn because of success in overcoming handicap. It was the sense of the committee that tuberculosis should be included among specific injuries of Article III, section 302 (2) of the war risk insurance act.

Again, that is a problem for the bureau and not the board.

4. Recommended that Federal Board exert every effort to secure a clear-cut definition of policy by Bureau of War Risk so that its own policies and program may be stabilized and delays reduced.

That was covered by the legislation of July 11.

5. Recommended that Federal Board make every effort to induce bureau to concentrate in selected sanatoria, so far as possible, the compensable tuberculous cases and that Federal Board provide occupational therapy and prevocational training wherever 20 or more such cases are in one institution.

The Federal Board, of course, has no authority to provide either occupational therapy or prevocational training.

The CHAIRMAN. That is purely by permission of the hospital authorities?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir. We are going into any Public Health hospital where they have 30 patients. We believe that out of 30 patients, probably 60 per cent of them, or 18 men, will be ready for training.

The CHAIRMAN. But even in that case it must be at the option of the hospital authorities.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; some of these boys may be able to take an hour a day, some three or four hours a day, and we are appointing the teachers and sending them in. We are not saying that we have to have one teacher or two or three teachers for a certain number of men; we are going to furnish the teachers that are necessary to do the job, and we are forgetting whether it is "occupational therapy" or "prevocational training" or "vocational training"; it is a job which the Government must do and must undertake as soon as the boy can begin training and carry it through to completion after he gets out of the hospital.

6. Considered inadvisable for the present to attempt to devise a list of occupations which are or are not suitable for the tuberculous.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Lamkin, if it would not interrupt you, I would like to know whether the board has had any trouble about getting into the hospitals for occupational therapy.

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. Considerable trouble.

The CHAIRMAN. You have?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; I think that is obviated at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. That was a phase of the problem that was difficult to get at when the bill was framed. It appeared to us that there ought to be some bedside curative work done.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. That the prevocational training ought to start in the hospitals, but just how to adjust it so as to have no confusion was a very difficult problem, and finally it was left purely to the option of the authorities.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You could go in provided they would admit you, and they could follow up the soldier after his discharge, provided the board would permit it, and it has been a matter of speculation with me as to whether that has worked satisfactorily or not.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think it is working now. It was slow, of course, in getting underway. I would like to make this statement, Mr. Chairman, that in at least one hospital where we found the commanding officer unfriendly to beginning vocational training in the hospital, representations were made to the Surgeon General and a new commanding officer took his place. Consequently we are in that hospital now with a number of patients.

The CHAIRMAN. As Judge Towner suggested a moment ago, it takes the closest cooperation of the two functions to do this work.

Mr. LAMKIN. There is no question about that. In fact, the medical follow-up of men suffering from tuberculosis, after they have been discharged, is one of the most serious problems of the whole reconstruction program.

The CHAIRMAN. That would appear so to the committee.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think we will agree with you that training and treatment should be simultaneous and the follow-up medical care should be simultaneous with training.

7. Recommended a special medical survey form for arrested cases.

That was prepared and is used.

8. A circular on treatment and training for the tuberculous was prepared for use of instruction of vocational advisers. It was first mimeographed and then printed and distributed to camps, Red Cross chapters, etc. Literature to stimulate ambition and determination in the men to reestablish themselves physically and industrially has been printed and distributed.

That has been done.

9. To supplement printed bulletins and leaflets, the committee passed a resolution that direct instruction by a specialist in tuberculosis be provided in the various district offices to include conferences with the district vocational officers and with medical examiners; that an expert on tuberculosis be engaged as an assistant to chief medical officer of Federal board.

That has been done.

10. The committee emphasized the point that any assignment of occupation to a tuberculous man should be considered as tentative only, and that careful supervision by experts is essential. In connection with this, the committee recommended that the board make a survey of Rutland Private Sanatorium.

That was done. The Rutland Private Sanatorium now has a contract with the board by which the training of the men who are placed there by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is begun, and their training is continued in the same institution, except they are transferred over to another building where they keep on in the same shops. under the same medical supervision, until we can complete their training there. So the only difference between a man whose case is not arrested and a man whose cases is arrested is whether he is living in this building or in that building at the Rutland Sanatorium.

11. Recommended the use of the sanitary standards for nonhazardous industries adopted by the committee on shop and industrial sanitation of the Council of National Defense.

They were adopted.

12. Memorandum was prepared setting forth benefits to be derived from the productive vocational workshop for the "industrial convalescence" of arrested cases under proper medical supervision. At its meeting on March 5 the National Tuberculosis Association appointed a committee to confer with the New York committee on tuberculosis of the Charity Organization Society as to possibility of that organization's undertaking the establishment of such a shop. National Tuberculosis Association has agreed to assist financially up to $10,000.

The CHAIRMAN. What is this New York committee?

Mr. LAMKIN. It is a branch of the National Tuberculosis Association.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not governmental.

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir. They have not yet provided their cooperative workshop which they suggested they could furnish.

13. Memorandum presenting definite plan for the establishment of a colony for arrested or quiescent cases was considered and following resolution adopted:

That it is the sense of the advisory committee that the plan for an industrial community for tuberculous people who are able to work, as presented by the secretary, is replete with interest and deserves further study. It is recommended that the plan be published and that discussion be invited from all agencies interested in the subject.

They have not yet provided the colony.

14. Recommended that there be an after-care secretary in the central office who would put into the hands of the district officers all the follow-up information that can be obtained; prepare proper forms for follow-up reports; and in all ways counsel with the officers on follow-up service. He should cooperate with existing agencies thus making it unnecessary for the board to build up a social service organization of its own.

Mr. TOWNER. That is a recommendation for your action, is it?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Have you not done that already?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes. sir.

Mr. TOWNER. And do you not do that already?

Mr. LAMKIN. Judge, this whole thing was June 10, 1919.

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, I see.

Mr. LAMKIN. And while we have not employed a man whom we call the after-care secretary, it has been because we have not been able to get just exactly the man, but we are doing it through our medical officers. We have a specialist on tuberculosis not only in this office but a specialist on tuberculosis in every one of the district offices, a medical officer who is giving his time to that work.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. The important point is that somebody should do it. It is immaterial what you call him.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes. I have read this, Mr. Chairman, in order to show that so far as we have been able to do so, we have absolutely followed the directions and suggestions of the National Antituberculosis Association.

The CHAIRMAN. Those recommendations were made in June, 1919?

Mr. LAMKIN. June 10, 1919.

The CHAIRMAN. And there are a dozen or more of them?

Mr. LAMKIN. Fourteen of them.

The CHAIRMAN. And you have acted favorably on how many?

Mr. LAMKIN. We have acted favorably on all except on that we were to act on.

The CHAIRMAN. And how soon did you act upon them, generally speaking, I mean?

Mr. LAMKIN. I can not answer that definitely, Mr. Chairman, because most of them were acted upon when I got here in September.

The CHAIRMAN. You came here last September?

Mr. LAMKIN. The 15th of September.

The CHAIRMAN. So that they are all in operation now?

Mr. LAMKIN. They are in operation now. We recently had two conferences on the question of tuberculosis, one in New York City along in the first part of February, and the other in Colorado the latter part of February, as I remember, to which an adviser and a medical officer from each district went, and at which the National Antituberculosis Association sent their experts to discuss with these officers of ours the problems of tuberculosis.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is one other very important Government agency which I would like to discuss just a minute or two, and that is our relations to Congress——

Mr. TOWNER (interposing). One of the most difficult problems that we have to consider, and one of the most difficult problems for any governmental agency that has anything to do with this work of rehabilitation, is the treatment and care and education, so far as possible, of the tubercular soldiers, those who have incurred it during the war or since because of disabilities incurred in the war, and the fact seems to be very deeply impressed, I think, upon the minds of the committee, that there ought to be the most earnest and cordial cooperation between governmental agencies, especially with regard to this class of men, and also with the antituberculosis association which is an outside agency but which, of course, is interested in this work of the Government, and if there is anything that may be suggested by the board that will throw further light upon the matter, I am quite sure, the committee will be very glad, indeed, to have it.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think, Mr. Chairman, the board recognizes the difficulty and the importance of the treatment and training of these tubercular men. You have this other phase or element in it, which makes it even more difficult, and that is the mental attitude of the man himself. In the first place, he is a wanderer. The psychology of the man suffering from tuberculosis is that he can get his health over in the next county or the next State or somewhere else. He wants to change. He wants to move, and tuberculosis authorities state that that is not necessary at all. There is another thing that you have to take into consideration, and that is the desire of the man suffering from tuberculosis to be at home, when probably the home is not the best place for him to recover his health. I think it would not be out of the way to make this statement: The Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and I were in Boston along in the first of January and the director was told of a man who was suffering from tuberculosis and had not had care. The director got in a taxicab and went down to the boy's house and persuaded the mother and the boy to let him go to a Public Health Service hospital. The Public Health Service was ready and willing and wanted to help him, but the boy would not go. The boy could not be taken care of at his home. They had no facilities for taking care of him. So the director got him in the taxicab and sent him over to the Public Health hospital and got him admitted where he could get good care. As soon as he got his money under the Sweet bill, he left the hospital and went back home. His mother said she wanted her boy at home and the boy wanted to go.

Now, those are just some problems that complicate the whole situation.

I may say in reference to our relations with Congress, Mr. Chairman, that the standing committee of the board, as I understand it, has been the official representative of the board before congressional committees and before Members of Congress, and as far as my relations as chief of the division are concerned, I have met the individual members only and have been called to committee hearings in one instance only by the chairman of the committee; on other occasions I have gone with the members of the standing committee. I would like to state, however, one or two things which you may want said or may want to be reminded of. The question has been continually raised here about the matter of money and appropriations. I would like to call your attention to the hearings before the Senate committee on the first deficiency appropriation bill on October 17, 1919.

Senator Curtis made this statement:

Senator CURTIS. I think you are wrong about your dates—

I was speaking about how long it took to get a deficiency bill passed—

I think we provided for the War Risk in an urgent bill and urgent bills go through in a rush. The general deficiency bill is the one that is delayed until the last of the session.

Mr. LAMKIN. I can say for the board that if you will see to it that we have the money so that we will not have to make the soldiers wait, it is immaterial to us whether you give it to us at one time or at another time.

The CHAIRMAN (Senator Warren). Your entire board and all the employees under it are satisfied, are you not, that that institution is going to be provided for?

Mr. LAMKIN. There is no question about that.

The CHAIRMAN (Senator Warren). In other words, you are not going to lose your employees because the money is not appropriated a year ahead?

Mr. LAMKIN. Oh, no; we have gone on the theory that Congress is going to see that this work is done, that Congress has given us a definite work to do, and that they will provide us the money to do it.

Now, Mr. Wickersham, when he was here, introduced the statement which I made before the American Legion commanders assembled at the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. I could say some things about that meeting, if necessary. The meeting was called by the bureau. The statement was made that it was called by the bureau and the board and the Public Health Service. The board was present for a part of a day, and we had no notice of it except what came indirectly to us, and the American Legion commanders were specifically asked twice in that half day's session to come over to see the board and investigate its working, and so on and so forth, and I think two members came.

Digitized by Google

Mr. WICKERSHAM. You speak of expense—

This was about the 17th of December, I believe—

Is it the policy of the board to attempt to be economical, or is it the idea of the board to do all it can and when it runs out of money to go back to Congress for another appropriation?

Mr. LAMKIN. That is the policy of the board—to keep the overhead expense as low as possible, to spend everything for it the men need, and go back to Congress for more money if necessary.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Do you think you will need more money before the year is out in order to permit the fullest possible scope in your board?

Mr. LAMKIN. No question about it.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Do you contemplate going to Congress and asking for an additional appropriation?

Mr. LAMKIN. I can reply to that by saying that the Senate Committee on Appropriations called for representatives of the board to appear before them. Senator Warren asked the chief of the division as to whether or not it would be satisfactory to the board to give them $5,000,000, or part of the money he said was necessary, and give them the rest later. We replied it did not make any difference to us how they gave us the money, just so long as they gave us enough and gave it to us quick enough, so the disabled men would not have to wait because of lack of appropriations, and Senator Warren assured us they would appropriate all the money necessary.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. You have no information from any congressional source that Congress would not be ready and willing to appropriate any amount of money necessary for this work?

Mr. LAMKIN. Not a particle.

I think that it is just to the Members of Congress, Mr. Chairman, for a representative of the board, at least, to say that the board has no doubt that Congress is going to appropriate the money that is necessary to put the job through.

The CHAIRMAN. We are glad to have you make that statement, Mr. Lamkin, because there is no doubt but what that is the situation. However, it must be understood that the necessity for the money must be made clear, because Congress is not going to make unusual appropriations on speculation.

Mr. LAMKIN. Congress should not do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The situation is such that Congress would not do that.

Mr. LAMKIN. As far as figuring the expense of the work, Mr. Chairman, is concerned, I think you can figure it only in one way, and that is by the acturial method. That is the way in which we have attempted to figure it out. It cost so much per man per month for tuition, so much per man per month for books and supplies, so much per man per month for maintenance, so much per man per month for his traveling expense and for his maintenance while traveling, and so much per man per month overhead.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, upon that basis you made your representations to the committee and asked for how much this year?

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. For the next year, $90,303,000.

The CHAIRMAN. And it was allowed?

Mr. LAMKIN. And I understand that the sundry civil bill carries $90,000,000. In October, 1919, we estimated that it would take $20,000,000 on that basis, to run us until the 30th of June, 1920, but we estimated at that time, Mr. Chairman, we would have 30,000 men in training in the months of April, May, and June, 1920. I believe those were the three months.

The CHAIRMAN. I have not consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations but in his opening remarks in presenting the sundry civil bill he reported, I remember, from the floor, $90,000,000 for this work, and I think you are to be congratulated on that because I know of no other item that has not been cut from the amount of the estimate. It has been the business of the Committee on Appropriations to cut wherever they could.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations is acting from necessity as well as from wisdom in that matter. We have tried to keep the overhead expenses down. I believe that you will find some criticism is made in regard to the nonpayment of bills, because some are being held up because of what we believe are unnecessary expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. When you are ready to go into it, Mr. Lamkin, although some other members of the board may have gone into it while I was absent, I would like to take up the statement that was made that of an amount of something like $116 expended only about $6 was devoted to rehabilitation.

Mr. LAMKIN. I am prepared to give you a statement of the complete expenditures of the board for rehabilitation work from the date that we began the organization to the 1st day of April which will show you that the total overhead is something less than 25 per cent of the total appropriation; that since the 1st day of last July until the 1st of April—and you told me not to go beyond April, although I can give you the balances—the total overhead is less than 20 per cent, and for the last month or two the total overhead has been less than 15 per cent of the expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. We want to go into that in detail.

Mr. LAMKIN. I am very glad to give you those figures.

There is one relation with Congress which I would like to discuss very briefly, and that is because the man's name has been brought into this hearing on one or two occasions. When I came to the central office on the 15th of September, one of the first questions that was raised was the question of whether or not Members of Congress and others were receiving prompt replies to their inquiries concerning disabled men. A man had been definitely assigned to that work. I called Mr. U. G. Smith from down in the main body of the office—we were then in Convention Hall and you gentlemen have been there—we had the balcony on which the administrative offices were located, the other offices being downstairs in a great, open floor—and gave him a room and a stenographer, and later an assistant, adjoining or practically adjoining my room, and every inquiry that came from a Member of Congress or came from an American Legion post or came from the Veterans of Foreign Wars or came from the Red Cross or came from an individual was referred to Mr. U. G.

Digitized by Google

Smith, and he was told to get a reply back to the person asking for it immediately. Now, if that is a wrong practice, I am willing to assume responsibility for it, but I believe that when a Member of Congress asks any Government agency for information, he ought to have it and have it at once. One day last week I made inquiry and found that not a case that had been referred to Mr. Smith had laid there longer than 48 hours unanswered.

Now, that does not apply solely to Members of Congress, Mr. Chairman, and I deny any statement that is made that a Congressman has to ask, in order to get a decision on a boy's case or that a Congressman gets a decision, "Yes," merely because he asks for it. I do believe that a Congressman, whose constituent has a right to ask him to follow up his case, has the right to get a reply from any department of the Government, and we are going to give it to him; but I want to emphasize the fact that we will give the information just as quickly to the boy or just as quickly to the boy's father or just as quickly to the boy's friend as we will to anyone else who makes inquiry of us.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, it is not necessary to have a "pull" in order to get action.

Mr. LAMKIN. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Some of the boys who have appeared here, in their testimony, seem to think that in order to get action there has got to be the influence of a Congressman brought to bear. I think you heard testimony of that kind.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; I heard testimony to that effect. I think it is impossible and I think it is unwise to say that you will not take any boy's case out of the regular routine if a special inquiry is made concerning it. I remember the case of Frank Hammond, who came here. He testified that Congressman Hicks became interested in his case. Well, Hammond was awarded section 3 training, but if it had gotten consideration he would have been awarded section 3 training without Congressman Hicks's influence, if you want to call it influence, as quick as with it, and I do not believe that the majority of Congressmen are bringing influence to bear. I do not think it is a question of influence. I think they want a decision rendered in the case.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to go into another matter, if I may, that is a source of considerable annoyance and of considerable misunderstanding.

I would like to discuss just as briefly as I can the law and the regulations of the board. The original rehabilitation act, section 2——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Mr. Lamkin, before you enter upon that, in connection with the necessity of having a Congressman intercede, may I ask you about a case that has come to my attention from Brownsville, Tex. I think you probably have noted it. It is the case of a man by the name of Joseph Thiesmeyer:

We thought that the case of Joseph Thiesmeyer had been finally settled and that the soldier would be permitted to take training through the Board for Vocational Education. On March 25 the soldier received an order from W. F. Doughty to report to San Antonio, for some cause which he has not yet discovered. Upon his arrival in San Antonio he went to the office of W. J. Bollen and Jourdan, in the Moore Building, these two gentlemen being the Board of Vocational Education in San Antonio.

Digitized by Google

I wish to protest to you, and I trust through you to this Vocational Board, about the treatment this soldier received. Bollen and Jourdan acted toward him as if he had been a dirty crook. Regardless of the fact that the soldier was reporting on W. F. Doughty's order, they told him Doughty had no authority to send him there; told him he had no authority and no right to take this matter up with his Congressman, or directly with Washington, and, in their entire demeanor, conducted themselves as if they were paying out of their own personal funds the money for this wounded soldier to get a gainful education, and said to him, when he left, "There is no use in your getting up on your high horse and trying to bull things—sending a wire to your Congressman in Washington will not do you any good," etc.

I referred this to you or to some one to make a report on it, and I have the letter which you sent to Mr. Garner. Your letter was written to Mr. John N. Garner, of Texas, and he has referred it to me. Do you remember that case?

Mr. LAMKIN. I do not remember the case at all, but I will be very glad to look into the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. It strikes me that there is either some misinformation down there or else two members of the board are acting very unwisely.

Mr. LAMKIN. Mr. Chairman, I think you will find there are two sides——

The CHAIRMAN. When I refer to members of the board——

Mr. LAMKIN. I think you will find there are two sides to most of these cases.

The CHAIRMAN. When I said members of the board I meant persons attached to your work.

Mr. LAMKIN. I understand that. I am getting out of my line, but I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I will be very glad to have you or any member of this committee interrupt me at any time, because I can always get back to my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. You were on that particular subject.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes. Concerning the question of discourtesy, I will say that nobody is "tied" to any of these places, and if it is shown that any man is discourteous to any disabled man we will separate him from the service; but I want to be shown.

The CHAIRMAN. That is proper, of course.

Mr. LAMKIN. And I shall be very glad to investigate that case and find out just exactly what the conditions are, but as has been stated here time and again, and as you gentlemen realize, the majority of these men are not in a normal mental condition. I do not mean they are deficient, but they have been through an experience that none of us has been through.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by a majority of these men are not in a normal mental condition?

Mr. LAMKIN. I mean the disabled men, men who suffered disability and came back from the service; they are in a nervous condition, at least strained, to say the least about it. The boys, many of them suffered "shell shock."

Mr. BURROUGHS. Assuming that is true, and I think it is true, would that not of itself impose upon the official an even greater obligation to use an exceptional amount of care?

Mr. LAMKIN. I think there is no question about that, Mr. Chairman. Again, let me remind you that when you take everybody who comes from the civil service and passes an examination making

Digitized by Google

70 per cent or more, you will not always get men who can keep their tempers, and a man who would be all right if entirely normal would magnify little things until they have a very different and disagreeable meaning.

If you have no objection, I should like to discuss, as briefly as I can, before a committee composed largely of lawyers the law.

The original vocational rehabilitation act, not the one which you have, but the original act, passed in June, 1918, read as follows:

SEC. 2. That every person who is disabled under circumstances entitling him, after discharge from the military or naval forces of the United States, to compensation under Article III of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved October 6, 1917," hereinafter referred to as 'said act,' and who, after his discharge, in the opinion of the board, is unable to carry on a gainful occupation, to resume his former occupation, or to enter upon some other occupation, or having resumed or entered upon such occupation is unable to continue the same successfully, shall be furnished by the said board, where vocational rehabilitation is feasible, such course of vocational rehabilitation as the board shall prescribe and provide.

That is at the bottom of page 3.

I would like for you to note the two requirements in section 2. The first one is that every person who is disabled under circumstances entitling him, after discharge, to compensation. That is the first requirement. The second requirement was that if in the opinion of the board he was unable to carry on some gainful occupation, to resume his former occupation, or to enter upon some other occupation, or having resumed or entered upon such occupation is unable to continue the same successfully. You can see that that would narrow the vocational retraining to a very material extent. A man must, in the first place, be entitled to compensation, and, in the second place, it says can not carry on a gainful occupation, he can not resume his former occupation or can not enter upon some other occupation, or if he has resumed or entered upon such occupation is unable to continue or carry on the same successfully. That was the original law. That was the law until the 11th of July, 1919. I do not know who is responsible, I am not trying to fix the responsibility, I think it is a great deal more important to get the job done and get it done now than to try and go back and fix the responsibility for something settled or done then. I think it was partly due to the fact at first, the advisers could "pass the buck" to the bureau and tell the disabled men to "wait until you are declared compensable." That got out to the boys. They remembered the first condition was "discharge under conditions entitling them to compensation" and the second series of requirements were lost sight of. As I understand the war-risk insurance act, it provides that a man in order to receive certain benefits for dismemberment, in order to receive any compensation at all, must be 10 per cent disabled.

Mr. DALLINGER. The law does not say so?

Mr. LAMKIN. I mean the war risk insurance act.

Mr. DALLINGER. That was a ruling of the board?

Mr. LAMKIN. I am speaking of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. I am not positive about that, but my recollection is that the law says that, but either way, it does not matter. He got no compensation until he was 10 per cent disabled. Consequently, it got out among the men, it was repeated by agents of the board, it was stated to them by agents of the Red Cross, and by representatives of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, that if you have a 10 per cent disability you are entitled to vocational training. The Army officers got it. The Army officers, surgeons, and examining boards, time after time, would say, "There is not much the matter with this boy, but if we give him 10 per cent disability he will be entitled to vocational training, let us give it to him," and they gave him 10 per cent disability and discharged him.

Digitized by Google

Mr. DALLINGER. And the board got out some literature?

Mr. LAMKIN. That is true. I do not think that it was specifically so stated in terms, but I think anybody who read that literature would say that if a man was discharged with a disability he could be put in practically any training that he wanted. I am not trying to say who was or who was not responsible, I am trying to speak of what the conditions were. The result was that as these men came out the "surveys" began to pile up, and the board could not act until the bureau had determined the compensatability. In the meantime, when the law of July 11 was passed Congress liberalized the provisions. From the reading of this law as it stands here, instead of section 2 now stating that a man must not be able to carry on a gainful occupation or must not be able to resume his former occupation or must not be able to enter upon some other occupation, or having resumed such occupation, can not carry it on. The present law, while liberalized by this committee itself, reads, on page 4:

> Or later developing a disability traceable in the opinion of the board to service with such forces, and who, in the opinion of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, is in need of vocational rehabilitation to overcome the handicap of such disability.

Thus Congress recognized that a man wounded could carry on a gainful occupation and could enter upon another occupation, but when he did he was handicapped in doing it, and provided for those people in section 2.

Mr. DALLINGER. The whole question of whether he was handicapped and whether he was entitled to training is a matter of judgment?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir. I have not any doubt that a good many times the board has erred in its judgment, but any human organization will err in its judgment.

Here are the instructions of the board which I filed the other day, Miscellaneous, 150, section 400. I should like to read that in connection with section 2 of the law.

> 400. A disabled person who meets the following conditions is entitled to vocational rehabilitation under section 2 of the law:
> (a) He must have been separated from the military or naval forces of the United States under honorable conditions since April 7, 1917.

The law says:

> Who, since April 7, 1917, has resigned or has been discharged or furloughed therefrom under honorable conditions.

So you must be separated from it under honorable conditions.

(b) He must have a disability that was incurred, increased, or aggravated while he was a member of such forces or that is traceable, in the opinion of the board, to service in such forces.

The act reads, "having a disability incurred, increased, or aggravated while a member of such forces, or later developing a disability traceable, in the opinion of the board, to service with such forces."

(c) His disability, in the opinion of the board, must be such as to cause him to be in need of vocational rehabilitation to overcome the handicap of his disability.

The language of the law is, "who, in the opinion of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, is in need of vocational rehabilitation to overcome the handicap of such disability."

(d) His physical and mental condition must be such, in the opinion of the board, as to make vocational rehabilitation feasible.

The law says:

Shall be furnished by the said board, where vocational rehabilitation is feasible, such course of vocational rehabilitation as the board shall prescribe and provide.

The law further goes on and makes this statement in section 3, which we call section 3 cases:

That the courses of vocational rehabilitation provided for under this act shall, as far as practicable and under such conditions as the board may prescribe, be made available without cost for instruction for the benefit of any person who is disabled under circumstances entitling him, after discharge from the military or naval forces of the United States, to compensation under Article III of this act and who is not included in section 2 hereof.

The difference, of course, between a man who is compensable under section 2 and may not be compensable under section 3 is, that if he is handicapped in carrying on his occupation, in the opinion of the board, he is entitled to section 2 of the training, and if he is not handicapped but is still compensable, he is entitled to section 3 training. That is a question of judgment.

Mr. ROBSION. No soldier or sailor can get training unless compensable?

Mr. LAMKIN. If he is 10 per cent disabled and is not handicapped vocationally, he is entitled under the law to section 3 training. If he is handicapped vocationally, he is entitled to section 2 training, and so on. A wood polisher who had a reduction of hearing in one of his ears, on the face of the case the man's employability was not lessened, there was no handicap from the vocational standpoint, but he was entitled and is entitled to money compensation for the damage which he has received; but under the law he is not entitled to retraining, because he can go back to his same occupation and earn exactly the same money as he did before.

Mr. ROBSION. He is not entitled to training under section 2?

Mr. LAMKIN. He is not entitled to training under section 2. Here is another situation: One man in the Army was kicked in the mouth by a Missouri mule. His upper lip was split. The Bureau of War Risk Insurance did not pay him compensation. He was, however, disabled under circumstances entitling him to compensation, and, being a professional clarionet player, he was vocationally handicapped to such an extent that vocational training was necessary and was given him. As far as his vocation was concerned, he was as badly handicapped as if he had a very serious disability. As far as his employment in the general labor market was concerned, it was not affected at all.

Digitized by Google

Take the case of a man who has an injury to one finger of his left hand, if he is a bookkeper he is entitled to compensation in money damage for the physical suffering which he has had. I am speaking of the theories of the law. As a boookkeeper he is entitled to section 3 training, which will let him take a night course, a commercial correspondence course, and which will let him become a better bookkeeper, a better acountant, but if he had an injury that even stiffened the third finger of his left hand and was a violinist by profession, he is 100 per cent vocationally handicapped.

If you ask my personal opinion, I would like to see every man who went into the service of the United States given any vocational training that he wants. If the Government can not afford that money, I should like to see every man who is awarded compensation vocationally rehabilitated, any man discharged under a 10 per cent injury.

Mr. DALLINGER. You are in favor of the Rogers bill?

Mr. LAMKIN. I am. I think the boys have a right to expect this. I think a good deal of our difficulty—I am not speaking about the board—I am speaking about the United States Government, we are all one, the United States Government—I think a great deal of our difficulty is due to the fact that the boys have been led to believe and they were satisfied that they would get vocational training from the Government. It is not the law. I do not know who is responsible for the circulation of the statement, but it was circulated by regular Government employees and the literature was sent out by a Government agency.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to go on, if I may, with the question of follow-up. It has been charged that there was no follow-up service. I do not like to say it has been charged, because my understanding is that this investigation is more to improve the service and to give the boys what they need than it is anything else. The training of these men has involved a tremendous problem that is sometimes not fully realized by persons who are not intimately connected with it. In the first place, we have to train the faculties of the institutions where the boys go. I think Mr. McMurtrie brought that to your attention when discussing it with you. He spoke of the special schools and said that other countries had established special schools. We have not in this country. We have tried, with very few exceptions, to use the existing educational institutions. It is, in the first place, cheaper; in the second place it is more permanent. It is a better thing for the country as a whole to build up the educational institutions which you have rather than to establish special schools which will be torn down after this work is over. As I told the gentleman from the vice chairman's State, Iowa, this question of rehabilitation is a challenge to the educational system and educational establishments of this country, to take these boys and fit them for the jobs. If the school system of America can not fit the boys for the jobs it needs revision, and a very material revision. We have to use the universities or the higher schools, because the men who are sent there, they are men, they are not boys any longer. If I may be pardoned this personal reference, I remember that I went to five deans of one great educational institution in order to get a boy who was not yet through his high school admitted to the university as a special student. They said to me, "We can not admit him, because he has not sufficient high-school credits."

I told them that boys who served two years overseas were mature enough to go into the institution, and apparently my statement had some effect on the five deans, because that educational institution is admitting ex-service men and is waiving the entrance requirement for men who served in the United States Army. We have had to train faculties to take hold of these men and to get into proper contact and proper relationship with them. We are trying to do it through personal touch or through our counselors and representatives. We have had to train the men. We have had to organize courses of study. I think probably Mr. Nelson, who is a farmer—I do not know whether any of the other members of the committee are farmers—but that Mr. Nelson would be very much interested in the short course, the unit course of agriculture that has been adopted and put into effect in many of the institutions of the country, particularly at the Massachusetts Agricultural Institute at Amherst, whereby these disabled men can enter at the beginning of any month if they want to get the unit course of a month's duration, and then take up another subject, and so on. I think you would be very much interested in the courses of study that have been formulated by agents of this board working in conjunction with the agricultural colleges of the United States. The agricultural colleges, of course, as you understand, are a little easier to get into than any other colleges, because they are used to handling short courses and the short courses are usually more for mature men than the others. We had to follow up these fellows by the establishment, as far as we could, of the big brother feeling among every man in the institution, the instructors, and all the people in the town.

I think when you analyze this whole question you will find one of the most difficult problems that we have to solve is the economic and social rehabilitation of these men. This aid that the Government gives them is not charity. These men must live on their income. They should not have to provide for themselves from outside sources; they must be taught to live on their income. They should not be, to use a slang phrase, "petted"; they are men, men who have served in the Army of the United States and they need assistance to get back on their own feet. We are having difficulty in some places by some well-meaning persons likely to think that they need "petting." After a man completes his training in an institution we will give him 60 days' training on the job as a follow-up to see if he can carry on.

I should like to discuss, if I may, the question of statistics a little more, Mr. Chairman. I have never regarded it as the prime duty and function of the board to gather statistics. I do not regard these statistics very highly. They do not always agree for the same dates, and I can tell you why. When a man goes into training in a district a notification that he has gone into training is sent to the central office at Washington. That notification is what we call our Form 107. As soon as that gets to the central office it goes first thing to the department that puts the fellow on the pay roll, in order to get him his training pay. After that it goes to the particular organization that puts the man's name on the card in the card index to show where he is in school, how much money he is getting, etc. Then it goes to the person who compiles the statistics of the number of men in training. That is reported to me every day. On Saturday my reports showed, I think, that we had 33,650 men in training that day. That is, that we had that many notices in from the districts. That was on the 1st of May. Should we ask on that same day the first district to report how many men they had in training on May 1 they would give us the number of men who had gone into training in that district on that date and not the number of men for whom notices had reached this office and gotten on our statistical report.

As a consequence the compilation of figures from the districts and the compilation of figures in the central office would not agree. So the statement that the statistics we give here and those given there do not agree is correct. I have nothing to do, of course, with the publication of the figures in the Vocational Summary. The old compilation, so many men surveyed, so many men contacted, etc., I think, is practically useless. The first figure that is always given is the number of registrations, which is entirely misleading and which should not be the basis of any calculation. Let me give you this example. Men were discharged, as you know, from the Eastern States, the discharge points were largely, at least, along the Atlantic coast. The result is a large number of cases passed through the Atlanta district. They were surveyed and the men were sent to hospitals in the district of which Atlanta was the center. Consequently all of those men's names were registered in the Atlanta office. The men discharged from the New York district, all of their names were registered in the New York office and the number discharged in the Boston district was registered in the Boston office. As soon as a man was discharged in the Atlanta district, if he lived in Indiana he went home, and yet papers were sent from the Atlanta district to the Cincinnati district that controls Indiana. Consequently that man's name appeared both on the Atlanta and Cincinnati rolls, and the statement has been made that there were two registrations, but at the same time it was overlooked in exactly the same statement that this included duplicates, included transfers from one district to another. It has also been a question with the district offices and conferences were held like the conference in June and the question arose when is a case a case. Efforts were made to go after the men to see whether there was anything the matter or whether they were entitled to training. The Red Cross in their commendable zeal sent in the names of every man who they heard was disabled.

We had many cases. As soon as they heard that a boy was wounded they sent in the name and in some of the districts they opened up folders on that. Some of the districts opened up folders on every man who has applied for compensation whose name they have. So the double registration. That meant really a double number of names that had been handed in by somebody to various district offices. There were duplications. Nobody denies it. Nobody ought to deny it. I do not think anybody does.

Digitized by Google

In anything that I say I do not expect to criticize Mr. Griffin or anybody else if I can avoid it. I remember that Mr. Griffin in one of the conferences insisted that of every survey that came through the New York office there must be a typewritten copy left in the New York office and in Washington. It congested the work in the office. I know what we did in the St. Louis office. If a man was transferred at Camp Dodge and lived in Denver we sent all the papers out to the Denver office and left merely a card in the case that "John Smith was discharged at Camp Dodge" and that all his papers had been sent to the Denver office. In the case of what we called a prospect, if we got a man's name, we put that in the "prospect" file and we sent the name to the Red Cross and asked them to get in touch and see if he was entitled to training and send information, or we would send out a man in the district to get in contact with him. We would not open a case on it. Some of the districts did open cases. We have so many cases that the result is frequently the districts have measured the amount of their job not by the number of men with whom they had come in contact, but by the number of cases in their files. That was one of the reasons for sending out the "eligibility squads" in December, to go through those files and to cut out the duplicates, cut out the transfers, and to cut out the folders of those men who had died—a number of the men have died since we got their names—and to cut out all cases where there was no information on which to base a case, the fact that he is entitled to anything, that he wants anything, and to report definitely the number of men who are really chargeable to the district.

I said Saturday that this was a question of development. It is a question of development. You can not do things all at once. We have been working for a month on a new report form from the districts, to consolidate all reports into one and to make one report to this office, so that we can handle the statistics in as economical a manner as possible.

I told Mr. Robsion personally the other day—which I will say to the committee as a whole—that Mr. Matthews, who left the office, was a tower of strength in the matter of statistics. Mr. Matthews left us because he was offered a place in Iowa where he was guaranteed one-half the profit from a big farm which he later declined to sell for $500 an acre, and the income he is receiving is a minimum of $5,000. He left a $4,000 place to go and take the Iowa place. Mr. Matthews reduced the number of employees in one section from three hundred and some down to two hundred and some by the time he left. We are trying to consolidate all of the records of the statistics so they will be worth something and so we will not have to consult the papers for anything more than necessary. If that was done—I have been here for the past 30 days practically all the time—right away we would abolish our report system from the districts and require them to report upon only a few items; first, how many men are there in your district, net—that is, the net number of men in your district; how many of them have been proved as eligible for training, section 2 or section 3; how many of them have you declared ineligible for training of any kind; and the difference is the pending load of definite cases.

Digitized by Google

As far as I am concerned, I do not care whether it is lack of medical examination or lack of coming in contact with the man, those cases are charged against that district as pending, and we are going to hold the officer responsible for getting them out of the way. If it is lack of contact, we will get that, and if it is lack of examination by the Public Health Service, we will pay the doctors to make the examination; but I do not believe that we ought to spend too much time in compiling statistics as to how many men we have seen, how many we have written, how many have been surveyed for medical examination, and so on; how many men are entitled to some consideration or how many have been acted on favorably and unfavorably, etc.; and then let them have an audit of their files and go after them. It is a different situation.

There is always this difficulty—that is, where you have 14 district offices, there is a tendency to create new forms and to get up new schemes and to get new information, and things of that kind. I think you had here Mr. Wadsworth to testify—a very strong, capable man from New York. I think he is responsible for some duplication of work in the New York office. I think he will agree to it. He thought that the advisers were not doing their jobs properly; that after the adviser in advisement section, in his opinion, there should be an adviser in training section. The result was that the man was handled twice in the New York office, when he should have been handled but once. When Mr. Wadsworth left the New York office, we combined the offices of advisement and training sections under one head, so that we will have but one survey made. That is one of the difficulties we have in the districts. I am merely stating it to you.

There is another matter in connection with the work concerning a man entering training, that is, we do not always realize that it takes just as much time and probably more time for a man to be told "no," that under the law he is not entitled to training, as it does to tell him "yes," that a fellow has to use a great deal more patience, a great deal more kindness with him sometimes than with the man to whom you can say, "Yes, I will send you this afternoon."

Again, I want to emphasize the fact that men with major amputations, there is no reason for them waiting an hour—I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that there are men with major amputations who have been discharged from the hospitals for 48 hours that have not been offered a course of vocational education.

Mr. ROBSION. I did not catch that last statement, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. LAMKIN. I do not believe that there is any man in this country, discharged from the hospital 48 hours, who has not been offered a course of reeducation, men with major amputations, if there is, I should like to know his name. Some are not taking training, but that is because they are unwilling for one reason or another.

Men with systemtic troubles, men who merely complain about this hurt or that or the other, which the doctors can not find, are the cause of a great deal of our trouble. It not only takes as long to tell a man "no" as "yes," but there is a large number of changes or courses. The boy does not know, the adviser guesses wrong and the boy goes into training and finds out that he can not take that kind of training, and we have to change him. I remember the instance of a boy in Philadelphia who had lost a leg and did not want but one thing, he wanted to be an automobile mechanic. He was told, "You can not go out and get under the cars, and things of that kind with your wooden leg." Well, that is the only thing he wanted and the training officer came to me and asked me what to do. I said, "Give it to him." He gave it to him. Inside of 10 days the boy came to the officer, the same fellow who gave it to him, and said, "I can not do that work. I can not handle myself." The training officer said. "I was confident you could not, but I let you try." It took the same time to change that course as it did to start him in the first place. Instructions No. 82, under date of December 9, 1919, provide that the district, without reference to the central office at all, after a man has been once entered, is authorized to change the course and place of training, first from one institution to another, or the character of institutional training, or from training in an institution to placement training, or from placement training to training in an institution, or the character of placement training which a man may be taking. In other words, the instructions practically state to the district that this man is eligible for training, you train him for the job in which he can make good, but that takes time, it takes clerks, it takes training officers, and it takes a world of patience.

I should also like to file with the committee, not for printing, because probably you would not want to print it all, a list of the educational institutions and a list of the factories and industrial establishments where we have men in training, together with the number of men in each one of these institutions.

I think that shows a very liberal policy on the part of the board. The central office, I think—we discussed this earlier in the morning—is, of course, handling the cases of men in Public Health Service hospitals, handling them direct from here. We have to handle them from here; they could not be handled by the local authorities.

Mr. Chairman, the question has been raised as to what we were doing in the hospitals, as to the advisers in the hospitals. I should like to file this with the committee for the record. It shows, as of April 1, 1920, the hospitals in the United States from which disabled men are being discharged by our districts and it shows the name of the man who is in the hospital at each one of those points. The advisers, with a few exceptions noted on the chart, are kept in the hospitals full time. At Fort McHenry they are not kept full time. The discharge officer will call our agent at Baltimore and tell him, "We will have 10 men to be discharged a week from to-morrow," and we will send out an adviser to meet those men and survey them before the time comes for their discharge.

I should like also to call your attention to instructions No. 42, which I will file with the committee, under date of October 9, 1919, I am not going to read all of it, but I should like to read a paragraph or two:

1. The Surgeon General's report of October 3 shows less than 20,000 men remaining in hospitals. As this group is discharged these cases are to be expedited so that the man eligible for training may enter training as soon as discharged or as soon thereafter as he chooses.

2. The board has ruled that all men surveyed in hospitals from now on shall be notified of the decision of the board as soon as they are discharged from the service.

3. This will necessitate making a survey and securing medical forms at least a week prior to the date of the discharged—

And so forth.

4. If the approval of the central office—

And in all of these regulations it is not only the central office in Washington, but the central office in the district—has not been received by the time the man is discharged, the district vocational officer is hereby authorized to place the man in training if in his opinion the man is entitled to training.

In other words that instruction requires the district vocational officer to act on the man's case as soon as he is discharged from the hospital.

Mr. VESTAL. What is the date of that?

Mr. LAMKIN. October 9, 1919.

Mr. VESTAL. October 9, 1919?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

The question might be asked as to why we wait until a man is discharged before notifying him. I assume that you think of that. You can not go into a hospital and see two boys lying there on adjoining beds and talk to the surgeon and have him say, "This fellow will come out of this hospital as sound as a dollar," and "That fellow will come out of the hospital crippled for the rest of his life;" you can not do it. One is given the physical rehabilitation to the extent that the hospital can give it to him and is discharged. When you undertake to go into a hospital and say you can do that, you can not. The medical authorities will stop you and properly stop you.

I was at Walter Reed the other day. Of course, as to obvious cases there is no question. A boy telephoned me just as I started up to the committee hearing. He said, "I want to see you; I will come to see you." I said, "No; I am coming out to see you." He has a double amputation case. He said to me, "I went home. You all told me that I was going to have training. They seemed to forget me at home. I know your board there did not." He is a Pittsburgh boy. "I just want to know what kind of training you will give me, how far you will go." I said, "We are going to take you all the way through until we get you onto your feet." He said, "If you stay with me three or four years I will be all right." I said, "You do not need to worry one moment." I came back to the office and I wrote to Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, "Here is a young man who has come out of the hospital. Make all arrangements he wants so that we may get him on his own feet." I sent it out to him and he took it with him. That was a perfectly obvious case. As I came out there was another one who had lost one leg and a number of inches of the other and he was considerably disturbed. He said, "I do not want to go to the Soldiers' Home or to an institution. I want to be given training." A major case. He said, "I can not take care of myself for some little while. You know the bureau will not give me an attendant." I replied, "Do not worry about that. The bureau will give you an attendant if they can under the law, and if they can not and if it is necessary we will provide the attendant." I got back and I called the director of the bureau and told him that it was a major case and he said, "We are going to look after everybody. I will put that in the hands of the chief administrative officer." I said, "This is an obvious case," and he said, "We are giving them what they need."

Mr. VESTAL. That man is still in the hospital?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. VESTAL. Not discharged?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir. We have two men at the hospital, Mr. Nall and Mr. Braham, and when I went there I found Braham talking to this boy and his brother. His brother had come back with him.

Mr. NELSON. So far, no newspaper publicity has been given to those cases?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir.

Mr. NELSON. In other words, the boy who is discharged is the one we hear of through the newspapers, and the man who is satisfied—getting what he wants—has nothing to say. As I understood you a while ago you had made no effort to see the large number of people who have been placed and not given publicity to offset those who have appeared here, that they have grievances and you thought it better to go ahead and aid the men?

Mr. LAMKIN. I think that is the policy. There is another thing. I will not tell you who the boy is, but I know one who wrote back to his mother from France:

I have seen some letters which have been published from boys over here. The first time I see my name in the newspaper you will get no more word from me.

There are a lot of boys who do not want published in the newspaper anything about their disabilities, etc., and there are a large number who do, of course. We have followed the plan of never putting a man's name in the newspaper unless he says so; to let the newspaper go and get the story if it wants it.

Mr. DALLINGER. Did you see Sergt. Dickerman?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir.

Mr. DALLINGER. The last time I was out there he wanted his training. He has been there two years. He lost one leg—the right leg, and the left one half way, and he has been operated on 10 times trying to save that.

Mr. LAMKIN. Do you know what he wants?

Mr. DALLINGER. He wants to go to the Stratton Commercial School in Boston.

Mr. LAMKIN. Can not he start his correspondence work or elementary work?

Mr. DALLINGER. He was discharged a week ago.

Mr. LAMKIN. We have several men at Walter Reed who are starting their elementary work now.

Mr. VESTAL. Before discharge the board has nothing to do with the elementary work?

Mr. LAMKIN. Except by arrangement with the Army; that is, with the Surgeon General's office. We have some boys who are taking training in the law schools of the city. I do not suppose he will object to telling his name, one a young man named Barlow, around this building. You may know him. He started in his training before he left the building. I think he was with Representative Mason. I have seen him around the hotel. He came to me and said:

I have given up my position over at the House Office Building. I do not get enough exercise. I want to go on with my course out here and take my training and my pay which amounts to $120, is sufficient for myself, my mother, and grandmother. I want to finish up my law course; devote all of my time to it.

He started before he got out of the Army.

Mr. TOWNER. The committee will now adjourn until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

(Thereupon, the committee took a recess until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee reassembled at 2 o'clock p. m., Hon. Simeon D. Fess (chairman) presiding.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please come to order. Mr. Lamkin, you may resume your testimony if you are ready.

Mr. LAMKIN. I was talking this morning, Mr. Chairman, when we discontinued, as to the matter of meeting these men who have got out of the hospitals. This chart, a copy of which I will hand to each of the members of the committee—or, rather, a drawing—shows the discharges from the hospitals.

(The chart referred to faces this page.)

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed with your statement.

Mr. LAMKIN. This black is discharges to October 6, 1917, when the Bureau of War Risk Insurance act was passed. There are 4,700 men discharged before that act was passed who were not eligible for compensation until December 24, 1919, when the Sweet bill was passed because the war-risk law provided that they should be discharged after the 4th of October, 1917. They were not eligible for training until after the 11th of July, 1919, when the "divorce bill" was passed.

The CHAIRMAN. However, they were subject to or were eligible under the war-risk insurance act, were they not?

Mr. LAMKIN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought our law was retroactive and went back to before it was passed.

Mr. LAMKIN. It did not go back before the 6th of October, 1917.

The CHAIRMAN. That is when the bill passed?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought that we covered that, that we made it retroactive to include all that were discharged.

Mr. LAMKIN. It had to be in line of duty. Let me get this straight. They had to be in line of duty.

The CHAIRMAN. You may go ahead with your statement.

Mr. LAMKIN. The group of men discharged between April and October, 1917, were not eligible until the Sweet bill was passed on December 24, 1919. If in that I am wrong it is just a misunderstanding. I think in the law of the 25th of June, 1918, the war-risk insurance act was amended to provide for all cases, whether in line of duty or not, and these were discharged before that amendment, and at the time the Federal Board act was passed the rehabilitation act was passed, June 27, 1918.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. LAMKIN. This shows that on July 11, 1919, when the divorce law was passed, as we call it, there were these [indicating], comparatively few, the ones which have been discharged from the hospitals since July 11, 1919. That is just for information, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a very interesting chart and rather graphic.

Mr. LAMKIN. There is one question, Mr. Chairman, which was brought up the other day in some of the testimony. I think you were here when the statement was made concerning a congressional dinner held about the 16th of December. Three disabled soldiers were called on at that meeting, as I remember, and discussed the work of the board. Shortly afterwards I prepared a statement concerning those three men to hand to any Member of Congress that might inquire. It has not been the purpose of the board, in has not been my purpose as chief of the division, to reply to these men and to these charges except to persons who were interested, and this memorandum was not distributed. I would not bring it up in the hearing if it had not already been brought up. But I would like to make this statement in regard to the three men at that dinner of December 16:

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION,
Washington, January 13, 1920.

Memorandum:

On the 16th of December, 1919, a dinner was given in honor of the American Legion commanders' conference at the Capitol. During the course of the speaking, which followed the dinner, certain statements were made concerning the work of the Federal Board for Vocational Education. A few criticisms were made of the work being done. The board does not desire to enter into any controversies, particularly with our disabled soldiers and sailors, for whose economic restoration the Rehabilitation Division of the Federal Board exists. However, it is felt that Congress is entitled to know the facts about what Congress iself is doing, through the instrumentality of the Federal board, to retrain the disabled men who spoke at the Capitol dinner.

There were three disabled soldiers who criticized this board. Their remarks were reported stenographically. The first was Corpl. J. E. Bute, the relevant portion of whose statement was as follows:

"Thirteen months have passed by and only in the last three months have officials done anything to try and get in touch with the men who are entitled to it (referring to vocational training). * * * I am going to give you an illustration of one who is in the hospital at the present time. * * * You men did not know he was out there at the hospital, did you? Well, he is there, and several more that I know personally, but your survey officer has never been to see them; and I canvassed one ward last Sunday and found 24 men who have never been surveyed as to what they were going to do."

The facts in relation to the foregoing remarks are as follows:

The earliest survey made at Walter Reed by a representative of the Federal board was made October 29, 1918. Some surveys of men discharged from Walter Reed were made at the Washington office, 606 F Street NW. prior to this date. The work of advisement at Walter Reed has been carried on continuously since with one, two, or more people employed by the board as advisers. At the present time there are two vocational advisers at Walter Reed giving full time to this work. No man can receive his discharge until he has been "surveyed" by a vocational adviser of the board.

That is an agreement we have with the Army that they must present that to the Army officers before they can get out.

But there are now in that hospital some 1,600 patients, many of whom will be there for months and possibly a year or more to come. It is often manifestly unwise to attempt to work out the details of a man's future vocational training until he has arrived within two or three weeks of the time for his discharge. Approximately 100 patients are discharged from Walter Reed Hospital each week. It is, therefore, quite probable, as well as proper, that out of some 1,600 patients there might be possibly several hundred who, while knowing their privileges under the vocational rehabilitation act, in a general way, have not yet been surveyed in exhaustive detail by an adviser of the board.

The second disabled man who spoke was Alvin B. Becker, who said: "I had quite an unfortunate experience in the vocational training. I was located last summer at Hospital No. 3, Colonia, N. J., and made application for vocational training. The captain up there told me it would take about six weeks. Well, I figured I would be discharged the 1st of August, but through another operation I am not out yet, and I am going to be discharged to-morrow. But this is a good case. Now, that six weeks would have been out the 1st of August if I did not have a second operation. I got a letter about the 5th or 6th of August from New York, 467 Fifth Avenue, stating, 'Please call at this office, as we desire some more information regarding your application.' Now, that shows, as the Senator from Utah says, that there are too many fingers in the pie, otherwise too many employees."

Senator SUTHERAND. What did the vocational training people do for you?

Mr. BECKER. No results; that is, the last I heard of it. Of course, I have not been over to Fifth Avenue, because I am not yet out of the hospital. I am not discharged yet. If I had been discharged the 1st of August * * * I would have had to wait maybe 6 or 10 weeks until the order went through.

The facts in this case are as follows:

Alvin Becker was recommended for discharge by the authorities at General Hospital No. 3, Rahway, N. J., in June, 1919. It was assumed that the discharge would be approved at Army Headquarters sometime in July. Thereupon the Federal Board's Vocational Adviser interviewed and surveyed Mr. Becker in the latter part of June and reported Becker's probable discharge to our New York office for further and definite training arrangements, inasmuch as Mr. Becker's home was in the city of Brooklyn. Our New York office promptly wrote the man at his home address (No. 9 Glaser Street, Brooklyn) asking him to call there in order that they might "finish making arrangements for this training." To this letter he did not reply, nor had our New York office any way of knowing that at the last moment the hospital authorities decided to remand Mr. Becker to the Walter Reed Hospital for another operation. Therefore, our New York district vocational officer wrote him again on October 10, without response or explanation from the man. Further letters were sent to him on November 10, December 3, and December 10. No reply nor acknowledgment was received to any of these requests of the Federal Board. In the meantime Mr. Becker was again recommended for discharge after his last operation at Walter Reed. Our vocational adviser stationed at Walter Reed immediately saw Mr. Becker and learning that the original survey was now six months old, obtained on Tuesday, December 9, 1919 (exactly one week before Becker made his statement at the Capitol to Senator Sutherland), a complete resurvey signed by Becker himself. This report was forwarded to our New York office on December 16, just prior to Becker's discharge. He was written by the adviser, reminding him to call on the board in New York as soon as he should return home to Brooklyn; and New York again, on December 19, not having heard from the man, sent a letter requesting to see him at his earliest convenience. All district offices are, and have been since October 2, 1919, authorized to place men with major amputations in training immediately and without reference to central office. Mr. Becker could have been placed in training on the very day he reported to our New York office, if he had desired; and without question would have been so placed. Our vocational adviser at Walter Reed took a personal interest in Mr. Becker and saw him on the day he was discharged (Dec. 17), and learned that he had been offered a position upon discharge and did not, therefore, wish to avail himself of training and support from the Government.

And if the committee wants it, we can have a photostatic copy of his survey made.

The third and last man to refer to vocational training was Sergt. Matthews. He said:

"There is a clause in this vocational education which says: 'Four years is the limit of time.' * * * I have been out of school two years. What college can I enter without a year's preparation? * * * Now, to get a college education with a year's preparation would be five years. The clause says you have only four years to do it in. What can we do?"

The facts are as follows:

The law itself places no limit of time on the length of training which may be given. But since the responsibility of the Federal Board is not to furnish education as such, but is to restore handicapped service men to gainful employment through the medium of suitable training, and since, therefore, the board must be able to see a definite accomplishment of its duties in the replacement of these men, it has become necessary to set some time limit as a working goal. The Federal Board has, after a most careful weighing of all considerations, placed a tentative maximum limit of four years upon training which will be approved. As to Sergt. Matthews, a shorter course, a slight change in ultimate vocation, private tutoring, or some other means, could undoubtedly be found to solve his difficulty and will be, when his time for discharge arrives.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any assurances that he received these communications that had been sent to him at numerous times?

Mr. LAMKIN. We do not know that he received those first ones, but they were not returned to the board. All the communications were sent out with the board's return address on them. I think a great many of these boys do not get the communications at all. This probably was done later at the hospital and they did not get it, but the vocational adviser did see him on the 9th here and made another survey of him. We have got that survey, but somebody had given the boy a job, and he had a job and consequently he did not want that vocational training. I asked Mr. Nall about that case and he said he knew nothing about the dinner at the Capitol and never heard about it, but that he saw the man on December 17, and the man told him he did not want training.

As I said, I did not submit that to Congress because I did not want to enter into a controversy, and I do not care to be put into a position of entering into a controversy with any disabled men. But it was brought up at the hearing and I thought you should know those facts.

I think, sometimes, we do not understand, Mr. Chairman, and that all of us fail to realize that training must be feasible for these men. That is a very serious problem and that is one that, you have often emphasized, requires a great deal of close cooperation. There will be a small group of these men who will be socially unemployable, even after all is done. There is a larger group of cases that are mentally in need of institutional treatment, mental cases as we call them, as you know, for whom training is not feasible, and may never be feasible. There was a large percentage of men troubled mentally who went into the service, as you may say, on the border line, and the shock that came was such as to completely upset them mentally, and it will require years of institutional treatment to restore them. That treatment can be given only in the hospitals under the direction of the Public Health Service. You may be interested in knowing that we have one of the best psychiatrists in the country attached to our medical staff now, and we are working with the Public Health Service to go into these mental hospitals and give any vocational training to these men that they say may be given, and here, again, it is the physician that must have the last word and all the training must be given under the physician's care.

Training is not feasible for a man with active tuberculosis, although the boys sometimes do not understand, but if I should announce or if you should announce that we are sending a man with active tuberculosis to any university in the country or to any college in the country, it would put up a bar to the admission of such men to that college or university because the other men would not go there. The training must, therefore, be feasible.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask as to your relationship with the colleges. Can you put any one in that the college is not willing to accept? What is the contract? Does the Government exercise any authority over the institution, or is it purely a contractual relation?

Mr. LAMKIN. Just a contractual relation.

The CHAIRMAN. So that a student who is not acceptable to the college authorities, no matter what the urgency, would not be accepted?

Mr. LAMKIN. He would not be accepted. We have found this, Mr. Chairman, that the colleges as a whole, or as a rule, will make any adjustments that are necessary if they can be paid the expenses of such adjustment, and we are paying the expenses. Some of the colleges have hard-and-fast entrance requirements. You must not send a boy to a university unless he can meet these entrance requirements. I think that is largely due to the fact that they have not the faculty, and they are not prepared to put in new courses.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you entered upon that in your testimony at all?

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. No; not to any extent.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to ask two or three questions along that line.

Mr. LAMKIN. I will be very glad to answer, if I can.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any evidence that boys have been accepted in colleges who are not doing the work that the college would require; that there is any dissatisfaction on the part of the college authority?

Mr. LAMKIN. Not at present, Mr. Chairman. The last man who I have talked to in regard to that was President Aley, of the University of Maine, whom you know very well.

The CHAIRMAN. I know him very well.

Mr. LAMKIN. Dr. Aley said to me, we had some difficulty originally, and that is smoothed over now, and the men we have there now are satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there many colleges that have modified their entrance requirements to meet the emergency cases?

Mr. LAMKIN. More west of the Alleghanies than east of the Alleghanies. President Hill, of the University of Missouri, told me: We will take any of your men that you can send us; and we will expect you, of course, to pay the cost of training. I think they are asking at the University of Missouri $15 per man per month. Quite a number of State educational institutions have so much money appropriated by their legislatures. Provision is made that every dollar that is taken in for tuition must go back to the State treasury. When that money goes back to the State treasury, it can not be used then for the natural increase in the faculty and the increase for equipment that is to be put in the institutions for us to handle our boys. In those cases we are paying the instructors when they are taken care of.

The CHAIRMAN. Those instructors are not under the board; they are under the control of the faculty?

Mr. LAMKIN. Under the control of the faculty and being paid by the board because if we paid the tuition it would have to go into the State treasury and would not be appropriated for one or two years. The Alabama legislature meets only once in four years. So, in that case we have to make arrangements for them. We have 200 or 300, I think, at the agricultural college at Starkville, Mississippi. We are paying tuition for them. The college at Ames, Iowa, took the boys as long as their money lasted. For instance, the Iowa legislature made an appropriation to pay additional expenses such as the class fees of all ex-service men who were in the war. They took our boys on the same terms as others, and when that money was exhausted they said if we take any more men, you must employ the teachers. The University of Missouri said we will put in new equipment and take in any men provided you pay us enough pay for the teachers. That is the arrangement we have with those institutions.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you recall any dissatisfaction as to the character of the work the boys were doing in a southern college?

Mr. LAMKIN. You are speaking of Louisiana State University?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. LAMKIN. I can give you information as to Louisiana State University.

The CHAIRMAN. A member of our committeee had some information, I think, directly, and then there was some one testified here also with reference to it. There was some dissatisfaction.

Mr. LAMKIN. My recollection is that Mr. Munroe submitted a list of men who were——

Mr. MUNROE (interposing). I did, sir, in the record.

Mr. LAMKIN. A list of men who were in training in the Louisiana State University.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not ask you to repeat it.

Mr. LAMKIN. Here is a supplementary statement, an additional statement in regard to it.

An article appeared in the press, written by a former member of the faculty of the college of agriculture, who was at the institution for only a short time just about the time these new men were arriving and was not fully informed of the policy of the board nor of the work in the district nor of the work which these men were planning to do in the University of Louisiana.

I might add that the information that we have is that the man who wrote that letter is an employee on the staff of a New York newspaper.

The CHAIRMAN. I will not ask you to go over that. Not having been here, I will read the testimony of Mr. Munroe.

Mr. LAMKIN. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that the schools of the country, as a whole, are adapting their courses to these men. But there is another thing that we are likely to get a wrong impression about, and that is that the majority of these men are not the college grade, the majority of them are less than college grade men.

The CHAIRMAN. That led me to ask you about the modification of entrance requirements.

Mr. LAMKIN. You have to send these men to an institution where they can go to school with men and not with boys, and, therefore, you have to ask the institution to modify their requirements, and they are doing that. Take the Massachusetts College of Agriculture, as I said this morning—its courses for our boys. As far as we can, we are trying to send boys who want auto mechanics to State institutions where they can get better surroundings than they have in the cities where they have these automobile schools. On the other hand, you can not send city boys out to some little country town. You take a chance that they will not go and they will not be satisfied when they do get there.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you as to the discrimination between educating the man and rehabilitating him under the requirements of the law. You mentioned that a moment ago, but what I am getting at is whether under this law we are entering upon general education.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think we can not enter upon general education under this law. The policy of the board is that any training which they give the man must lead to a definite vocation. On the other hand, the board recognizes the fact that the illiterate, or the man of low-grade education is much more readily employable if he knows English, and he is a much better citizen if he knows something about civics and the history of his country and things of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. So if that sort of education is a prerequisite for the vocation, don't you aim to give it?

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. We give it. We give it for as long a period as is necessary. Our experience has been that the boys learn more rapidly and keep up their interest better when they go right along with the trade instructions.

For instance, if we have every day English and civics and four or five hours a day shop instructions so that they can correlate their English instruction with the shop, I think it is better instead of taking a man 26 or 28 years of age, who has not been to school, probably, since he was 10 years old, and put him down to learning English and history and civics and arithmetic all the day long.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not recall whether the law fixes the limit upon the time it takes for training. What rule do you pursue which will permit you to send one man 10 months and another man two years and another man four years? I am wondering whether the four years is the limit.

Mr. LAMKIN. We have not undertaken to start any man in a course that lasts longer than four years.

The CHAIRMAN. That is within the discretion of the board?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes; that is within the discretion of the board. Speaking personally, and I think I can answer the same thing for the board, let me put it this way. We think that we ought to give the man what he is capable of doing and doing well.

The CHAIRMAN. You are getting into a big field there.

Mr. LAMKIN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. You will say that he is capable of doing or is not capable of doing this, and he will think that he is capable?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, who is going to be the judge?

Mr. LAMKIN. That is a pretty hard question to answer.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been shown before the committee here that the boys are dissatisfied, and a good many people think that they themselves ought to be the judge of what they could do.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes. I think the boy's preference as to his occupation ought to be, I have said, as high as 90 per cent. But on the other hand the Government, through the Federal board, is acting in loco parentis for a good many of these boys and wants to encourage them. A man will aim higher than he can reach, and we feel it is more an injury to the boy than if we told him in the first place, "You ought to take one year intensive course or a year and a half intensive course and not try to the more extensive ones.

The CHAIRMAN. How frequently do you have occurrences like this? A boy has started in the work and after a certain time it is found that he is not adapted to it and is taken out of that and put into something else. Is that frequent?

Mr. LAMKIN. Very frequently; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How much latitude do you exercise in that? Is there any limit on it?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose a boy started in a thing and he does not succeed, you take him out and start him in something else and he does not succeed, and take him out start with something else still, are you persistent about it?

Mr. LAMKIN. You mean the training, to limit the number of chances he can have?

Digitized by Google

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. LAMKIN. We put no limit on it. We would do this, Mr. Chairman. I think if the boy had a very minor disability who came in and wanted to change from one course to another and we felt that he was not trying particularly hard, we might say to him, "You make good in this; we believe you can make good in this," and hold him to his work. But with the man who makes an honest effort, we are going to rehabilitate him if there is any line in which he can be rehabilitated.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have any other matter that you wanted to present in your examination in chief or in your direct?

Mr. LAMKIN. You gentlemen will not disturb me by asking questions.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not want to open up fields that you have been over.

Mr. LAMKIN. I would say this, that some people act as if they thought vocational training was a reward for overseas service, and a reward for bravery upon the battle field. That is not the law. Some complaints are made as to those men that gave good service and good account of themselves in the armies, people saying they ought to be trained because of that; but that is not the law. I remember one vocational adviser always wrote on every advisement he made, that this man is a good soldier. If you train every good soldier in the American Army, we would train the whole Army. That is not the law. Those things you should think about when we are discussing the whole question of vocational rehabilitation.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand, Mr. Lamkin, that we are holding strictly to the literal interpretation where the law says if he is unable to enter upon a gainful occupation and resume his prior work or take up some new work—there are three lines there in regard to it, as I recall it.

Mr. LAMKIN. That is the original law, Mr. Chairman; that is not the present law.

The CHAIRMAN. The present law is broader than that.

Mr. LAMKIN. The present law is broader; yes. I went over that in the testimony this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. I remember that is an amendment.

Mr. LAMKIN. If we had hewn to the letter of the former law, I think your former estimates of between 15,000 and 20,000 men entitled to training would be about correct. But I would not begin to say that even one-third of the men who were approved for training could not reenter the same occupation. But they are handicapped in entering it.

The CHAIRMAN. Would it be interrupting you to ask first about how many people you think will be eligible to training and about how long it is likely to take to finish the work?

Mr. LAMKIN. That depends on whether the law stands as it is or whether it is revised. Assuming that it stands as it is, I should say probably 85,000 would be eligible to section 2 of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The 100,000 would be about 33 per cent of all?

Mr. LAMKIN. Of all who were discharged with disability.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what I mean.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How does that rank with what Canada has done? Canada, I think, would be the most advanced of all the countries.

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. I think Canada had 600,000 men discharged with disability, and they have had 45,000 recommendations in Ottawa and have approved 39,000 of them.

Mr. ROBSION. That official dispatch we had the other day showed 43,000 in training.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think the official dispatch, Mr. Chairman, included not only the disability training but included those minors who enlisted, less than 18 years of age, and who will be retrained by the Government, because their training was interrupted. I am ready to file with the committee a certified copy of the official report sent to us by the Canadian Government, which shows that on the 31st day of March, 1919, they had received in the disability ratings 45,557 recommendations at Ottawa, which is the central office there, and that they have approved—37,693 courses—and that 3,845 men had begun training. They have been at this job practically two years longer than we have. I think when this committee gets ready to do it, that they can show that the United States of America is doing more for its disabled men than any other country in the world. The figures show they also have 12,600 main courses recommended for the minors, under 18 years of age, making a total of 58,157 recommendations at Ottawa.

The CHAIRMAN. I think we should prefer to let you go ahead and make your consecutive statement—that is, that questions would lead you afield from your work.

Mr. LAMKIN. I want to do the will of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. When you have covered the field which you desire, when you are through, I want some one who has been here all the time while you have been here to take the examination in chief, since I have not been here to do it, so that we will get all the facts and have a thorough examination, that we may know the real status of the situation.

Mr. LAMKIN. I am very glad to answer in any way that it pleases the committee.

Mr. LAMKIN. The question has been raised, Mr. Chairman, as to personal touch with these men. I think that the board realizes that, and the people who are in the work realize the necessity for the personal touch just as much as any member of the committee could realize it. We are making every attempt to get and keep in personal touch with the boys. I think, too, you realize that we have to do what we can to hold overhead expenses to the minimum, and in doing that, in order to keep from having to send men around over the country and paying traveling expenses, we write a number of letters. I have seen some of these letters presented to the committee that are rubber stamped. I think that is not a good plan. I think that there should be no rubber-stamped letters sent out. So far as we know we are sending none out from the central office. We give that much of a personal touch anyway by having a girl read the mail and sign the name in ink to the letters. I think it is worth it, and I believe we should follow it in the districts.

The CHAIRMAN. Isn't it true that as a general rule the routine work in the War Department is done by rubber stamp?

Mr. LAMKIN. I think it is.

The CHAIRMAN. I think in the War Department the routine work is done that way. I don't think the War Risk Insurance Bureau is doing that so much, and I don't think that anything I have received from the Federal Board has been signed that way, but it is a very common thing, as I now recall, to receive rubbed-stamp signed letters from the War Department on purely routine work.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think that is true, but some of the boys told us at St. Louis when I was there, "You people are the first people that treated men like a man since I went into the Army." And I think we have got to treat these boys like men, and there is a personal touch that comes from a written signature that you will never get from a stamped signature in the world.

The CHAIRMAN. I agree with you that that ought to be done where it can be done, but I recall that if I have a letter from the War Department the letter is written by a stenographer and the name of the party is signed by the stenographer and then over the name is the rubber stamp of the signature.

Mr. LAMKIN. Well, we type the signature in, but a number of letters go out from the districts with a typed name in, and then the rubber stamp is over the typed name. Then, of course, it is pretty hard to write a letter that carries just exactly what you mean.

The CHAIRMAN. A boy who is disabled, who is looking for some recognition, would resent receiving a letter that was not signed.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think so; and I think we have to be very careful in the framing of the letter to him. It is an art that everybody has not acquired.

I think I have discussed briefly the medical care of men in training. Instruction No. 37 which has been filed with you covers that. In brief it provides as follows: That the man must have immediate medical care when he needs it; if it is a recurrence of his disability incurred in the service, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance will pay for it; if it is not a recurrence of his war disability, the Federal Board will pay for it, on the ground that it is necessary that the man keep in training. We have notified the counselors to keep in touch with these boys and see that they get medical attention immediately. The letter to the men, circular letter No. 615, which I will not take time to read—it is filed here—is a letter to each man in which the statement is definitely made to him that the medical examinations which we are asking for from time to time are for the purpose of keeping him in training, not of taking him out. There are some disabilities for which no further medical examination is necessary—amputation cases, and things of that kind. Systemic disabilities are those for which medical examination is necessary from time to time in order that the man's health may be restored.

The CHAIRMAN. While you are on the examination question, you were here when different witnesses testified to interminable examinations that they had been called upon for?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you gone into that?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the committee, I am sure, would like to know why that was.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think there have been too many examinations, Mr. Chairman. I think there have been too many examinations of the men.

Digitized by Google

The CHAIRMAN. It appeared that way to the committee. I have been wondering whether there was any ground for it.

Mr. LAMKIN. We are trying to cut down those examinations as much as we can. I think there are no doctors on the committee, are there? The doctor, you know, has to have pretty complete evidence and pretty recent evidence before he is willing to act on it, but all of our instructions are to the effect that examinations—that the examination that we have must be accepted. Now, there is this: I think you should remember, that the boy does not distinguish between the examination which is taken for the bureau and the examination which may be required by the board, and the bureau requires continual examinations or follow-up examinations, to see his present physical condition from time to time. The board has not required it, except to see whether or not he is getting any better or whether or not the training is such that he can carry it on.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, from the testimony from these boys, it would seem that the order always went from the board up there.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes; I think that is true. I think too many of them were made. I haven't any doubt about it that too many of them were made. I think examinations were in the folders that the men ought to have acted on.

Mr. ROBSION. If the chairman will permit me there, were those men paid at so much per examination or by the day or by the month?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir; they were sent to the Public Health examiners, who were paid a salary. The Public Health examiners receive so much—well, they are commissioned as captains or majors or lieutenant colonels, or whatever they are, and they get so much salary.

Mr. ROBSION. Wasn't there an arrangement in the New York office whereby the doctors there got so much per examination?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; in the New York office the contract provided that a doctor should receive $3 per examination for not to exceed 66 examinations per month, or a maximum of $200 a month.

Mr. ROBSION. That is where these extra examinations were had that have been complained of before the committee, weren't they?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ROBSION. In the New York office?

Mr. LAMKIN. I think that is true in the New York office. But, Mr. Chairman, the bill as it was rendered was for 66 examinations, which ran to $200 a month, but those doctors made, I should say, 600 examinations in the course of the month.

The CHAIRMAN. But they could not charge for more than 66?

Mr. LAMKIN. They could not charge for more than 66. That has been a cause of friction, because the appropriation bill says that these men shall not be paid at a rate in excess of so much. Now, in rendering the bill, instead of having them come down and take the civil-service examination for assistant medical officer, as they would have had to do, and as they would not have done, we got the doctors and kept them at work and paid them on a contract for not to exceed 66 examinations per month, but they were to make all examinations sent to them. So it does not make any difference how much the men were examined; they did not get but $200 per month.

In connection with this question of medical examination, Mr. Chairman, I would like to read two or three letters which are instructions concerning the weight which shall be given to the doctor's decision in the matter of determining eligibility. Here is a note dated October 23 from the chief of the division. The question is raised as to whether or not the central-office case board should accept the decision of the district medical officers, the fellow out in the field, or whether they should themselves pass on the question of degree of disability, and here is my reply:

The chief is of the opinion that the best judge of the man's disability is the doctor who made the examination, and the farther removed from the man the person who judges his case happens to be the less liklihood there is of a just determination. So far as possible district offices should be sustained in all of their decisions, and while the decision should be checked up, the check should be more to determine the efficiency of the work of the district office and of the district officers than to act again on the same matter that has been before them.

It is therefore held that the opinion of the district medical officer in regard to a man's disability should be accepted by central-office case boards; that cases should be reviewed by physicians in the central office, and that the district medical officer should be notified of their errors; that they should be accepted in reaching just conclusions, but that their action should be sustained. If they can not reach correct conclusions after reasonable amount of direction and instruction a new district medical officer should be found.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the ruling now?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir: and it has been the ruling of the office at least since the 23d of October.

On December 13 a letter was written out calling attention to paragraph 4 of instructions 47:

In making rulings on eligibility for training, the representatives of central office will consult with the district medical officer or his representatives and will accept their opinion, except in cases of doubt where a previous ruling of the central office medical section contradicts the present ruling of the district medical officer or his assistants. All such doubtful cases will be forwarded to central office for a ruling with complete medical information.

I don't know whether I had better read this letter until Judge Towner is here or not, but he will probably see it in the record. He asked about it this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Judge Towner is detained on the floor of the House because he has a bill over there.

Mr. LAMKIN. You understand I am not questioning Judge Towner at all, but he was interested in this question as to whether or not a man when he got well should be removed from training. That is the point, in a few words, that he raised, whether or not we should penalize a fellow for getting well.

There was one case that came up from New York in regard to a man named Gallagher who was approved for one year of a three-year course in law, and it was found at the end of the first year that he had overcome his disability; that is, it was probably temporary, gassing or something of that kind, and he had overcome it. On the 17th of March I answered the New York office as follows:

Replying to your letter of March 13, regarding the above-named man, your letter brought the case to the personal attention of the chief for the first time.

I find no definite or formal approval of his course by central office in the folder here. I do find, however, a copy of a letter from Dr. Chandler, chief of the division, evidently approving his course under date of March 26, 1919. The form 115 signed by Gallagher definitely fixes the course at three years.

I hold to the position that when the man was approved under Section II training for a definite course that the Federal Board should carry out its approval, and therefore, you are justified in extending for the second year the course in the law school.

Digitized by Google

Had he been told at the beginning of his course that he would be approved for one year under Section II and subsequent training under Section III, we could with propriety adhere to that promise. On the other hand, there is every evidence to show that he was definitely offered a course looking forward to three years and central office will approve your action in extending it accordingly.

Very truly, yours,

UEL W. LAMKIN,
Chief, Division of Rehabilitation.

On March 8 I wrote the following letter to the acting district vocational officer, District No. 2, New York City:

Replying to your inquiry as to whether or not you can be definite and specific in telling men how much training they can have, central office has taken the position to which it adheres, that the American people through their Congress expect such an amount of training to be given to each man as is necessary to overcome the handicap of his disability.

In a few instances only a year's training under section 2 has been awarded subject to examination at the end of that year to determine whether or not the man's training was necessary. Those very few cases have been definitely notified at the time.

Let me explain that just a minute. Doctors do not always agree. Frequently they say—one doctor says: "This man has tuberculosis," another man says he hasn't; one says, "This fellow has been gassed and therefore has a disability"; the other man says, "Yes, he has been gassed, but he hasn't any disability." I remember Dr. Skinner, who was chief medical officer at St. Louis—by the way, a very close friend of Congressman Good—I didn't know it till after he was appointed, but he saw Congressman Good—and I should have put that in the record this morning—and Congressman Good said to him that Congress expected to appropriate all the money necessary to put this work over.

It is pretty hard to get a "gas" case by Dr. Skinner, because he was on the front lines in France; he was gassed himself, and he knows that inside of a few months' time he got all right. He thinks these other boys will get all right. How frequently we have said to these men, "All right, we don't know what your condition is, but we will approve you for a year's training, and we will see at the end of that year whether you should have more training or not; whether you are really disabled or not." There are other fellows who have said, "Well, I have got just a minor disability," as it were—a major handicap, it is true—"if I could get by a year, I could finish up myself." So, to those men we have said, "All right, we will approve you for one year on section 2 training. You get compensation. After that you can finish it up for section 3. Of course, if you are disabled to such an extent that you can not at the end of that time go on, we will carry you further under section 2." But we have definitely notified those men at the time they began their training. [Reading:]

Other men have been awarded one year's training under section 2 and additional training under section 3 and these have been notified.

In cases where men have been awarded one year of a longer course under section 2 it is the expectation of central office that the entire course will be given under section 2 provided the man makes reasonable progress.

No definite training is awarded for a period of longer than one year because of the fact that no appropriations are made beyond the fiscal year ending June 30. Our budget, now before the Appropriations Committees of Congress, carries estimated appropriations for the year ending June, 1921. But there is no doubt that Congress will appropriate all the money that is necessary to continue training until men eligible and in training have completed their work.

Digitized by Google

It is also impossible to say that a man is approved for a period of four years without knowing whether or not he is able to profit by the course in which he has been placed.

In reply, therefore, to your question, men who have been approved for one year of a two-year course, or one year of a three-year course, or one year of a four-year course, should understand that it is the expectation of the Federal Board to carry them through to the completion of that course, provided they make satisfactory progress.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a ruling that I was not aware of that if this fellow enters for three years you only approve him for one year.

Mr. LAMKIN. At a time.

The CHAIRMAN. And make him show his ability at the end of that year before you give him the promise that there will be another approval of another year.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think you will agree that is a reasonable regulation.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is right, absolutely right. I think it would be very unwise to say to this man, "We are going to give you four years, no matter what happens. We will enter you upon the course for four years with the approval of one year, dependent upon what you can do whether we will carry you on the next year and the next year." I think that would be fair to the man and fair to the Government.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, it rather strikes me as going pretty far to give this training to a boy after the first year if he has completely recovered from his disability.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a question that was raised a while ago.

Mr. VESTAL. Shouldn't the regulation be that this boy is approved for a three-year course, a year at a time, provided that at the end of the year he has made satisfactory progress and still has the disability?

The CHAIRMAN. The board seems to have taken the view that you ought not to penalize a man for getting well. If he gets well, you shut him off.

Mr. VESTAL. I see the point. I was just wondering about that.

The CHAIRMAN. That is pretty strong.

Mr. VESTAL. It is pretty strong; yes.

Mr. LAMKIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe that if you gentlemen will sit down and go through these regulations and get the viewpoint, these several viewpoints that have come in the administration, that you will find the board has been extremely liberal.

The CHAIRMAN. About how many, if you can tell, have been entered for four years—I mean entered upon the course that would take him four years to finish?

Mr. LAMKIN. The estimate which I gave in reply to an inquiry from Congressman Rogers which he submitted here was that 75 out of a thousand would take four years.

The CHAIRMAN. If there were 100,000, that would be 7,500.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. For four years.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What proportion of that number would be on the basis that the Government is educating them?

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. I am speaking only of Section II—training men.

The CHAIRMAN. But yo uhave entered some in law courses, haven't you?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How do you identify that with vocational training?

Mr. LAMKIN. We assumed that law was a vocation.

The CHAIRMAN. That strikes me that it is a profession.

Mr. LAMKIN. There are some lawyers that are making a mighty good living.

The CHAIRMAN. Are ther many entered in the law?

Mr. LAMKIN. I think I can give you that. I am not very enthusiastic over entering people in law courses, Mr. Chairman. They have to starve to death too long after they come out.

Mr. VESTAL. I was going to say that it has always been more of a profession than a vocation with me. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAMKIN. I understand that there is some opposition to increasing the membership of the House of Representatives.

Five hundred and forty-five were reported on the 28th of February as having been entered in courses in law out of 28,074—that were reported on that date, you understand. There is this other situation, though, Mr. Chairman, that we must think about, and that is that training in law is almost of as much value to a man that is going into a mercantile establishment or into a banking house or into a trust company as it is to a man that is going to practice law.

The CHAIRMAN. I admit that. I can see also that if a young man has been taken out of law school where he had carried on his course, and was sent to the Army, he ought to be permitted to go on with his course.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think that is the general disposition.

Mr. VESTAL. That argument, Mr. Chairman, you remember, was made before the House when this bill was first passed.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; that seems to me that is perfectly rational.

Mr. LAMKIN. We speak sometimes about the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. The director does not have the human problems of determining whether or not this fellow is making good in the course and whether or not he ought to be carried over to some other course. He does not have those problems to meet.

Now, there are a number of men, Mr. Chairman, who we have entered in courses in "receiving stations," as we call them—you understand what I mean by receiving stations, a try-out school. When we get a boy that we don't know what to do with, and he don't know; he has no occupation and has never been trained for anything, we put him in this receiving station and try him out on a course or two to see what he can do, giving him at the same time instruction in English, and the question has been raised as to whether or not we ought to give these men any more training. Suppose we try them out for 60 days and find out that they are getting in good physical condition so that they would not necessarily need further training; our reply to that is this:

In reply to your inquiry as to men who are placed in receiving stations previous to the establishment of their eligibility for training, who are now coming up for rerating, you are authorized to extend the period of training for these men not to exceed one year from date of their entering training, so that they will profit by the training which they have received.

In the opinion of the chief, these men were deemed eligible when placed in receiving-station status and were placed there by the action of the district vocational officer; therefore, such extension should be allowed as would enable them to profit by the training offered them.

In other words, those men, of course, are low-grade men—I mean low grade educationally; I don't mean any other way. They are low grade educationally, and you put them in a receiving station and you keep them there on some English work and try-out work for 60 or 90 days, and the board believes that it is acting within the law and that it is a good investment for the Government to give those fellows a year—not to exceed a year's training—in order to fit them definitely for some work which they can do.

Mr. VESTAL. You find out, as I understand, by this try-out of 60 days what the boy can best do?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. VESTAL. Then, you propose for the remainder of the year to train him in that particular line?

Mr. LAMKIN. In that particular line; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. There seems to be quite a disparity in numbers between those who have been approved and those who are entered, and there is a query in the public mind why there should be so many that have been approved that are not yet entered in training.

Mr. LAMKIN. There are a good many answers to that. The Canadian experience shows that 22 per cent of the men approved never did enter training. A number of these men who have been approved are in no physical condition to enter training; another large number of men are indifferent as to going in; they don't see any necessity for it; they don't see where it is going to lead them; they don't go.

There is another large percentage who are making money now under present industrial conditions, where they can go out and make a lot of money. There is one establishment in this country I know whose authorities made the statement that they would give any returned soldier a job that came, and if he could not stand up they would let him sit down; if he could not sit down, he could lie down, and they would give him a job at $6 a day.

Mr. ROBSION. What firm is that?

Mr. LAMKIN. Henry Ford. Now, if he goes up there to an establishment of that kind, say, in the city of Detroit, the automobile industry—all the automobile industries are paying high wages for men if they can even turn a bolt.

The CHAIRMAN. I am afraid Henry's heart is getting ahead of his head there. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAMKIN. I am not passing on that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. VESTAL. He is trying to atone. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAMKIN. Now, there are other conditions, industrial conditions everywhere. You take it in the oil fields. A man doesn't have to be entirely a well man to make quite little money in the oil fields. There are some other districts, as I say, where the men are not interested in training and you can't get them in.

The CHAIRMAN. Are we to assume from that statement that there will be a good many that will never enter training?

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. I think so. At one time, along about the 1st of January, we had reached 73 per cent of the men approved were in training. That dropped down then until we got back to 50 per cent. I doubt if we will ever run much above 60 per cent of men approved for training who will be in training, unless there is an industrial depression, and when the industrial depression comes, if the Darrow bill is passed and a boy can get $100 a month plus an attendance allowance for going to school, he will go.

Mr. VESTAL. Are we to understand also from your statement, Mr. Lamkin, that all these boys who have registered for training, that really want training, are getting training?

Mr. LAMKIN. All who have been approved for training and who want it are getting it; not all who have been registered. We are going to clear this whole registration, but we have not done it yet.

Mr. VESTAL. Now, let me ask you another question. Are we to understand that all the boys that have been registered, that have asked for training, have been approved?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir.

Mr. VESTAL. How many will you say that have asked for training have not yet been approved?

Mr. LAMKIN. Our figures of the 15th of April show that there are about 200,000 registrations. Now, what I mean by "registration" is that we have that many names under consideration. It does not mean that they have applied. The Bureau of War Risk Insurance law, you understand, requires a man to file an application for compensation; it requires him to take the initiative. The Federal Board law does not—the rehabilitation act does not. Of those 200,000 names that we have, about 58,000 of them were approved for section 2 training; 36,000 were approved for section 3 training; 51,000 had been found to be ineligible and the cases closed.

Mr. VESTAL. Now, will you let me have those figures again? How many for section 2 training?

Mr. LAMKIN. Fifty-eight thousand.

Mr. VESTAL. And section 3?

Mr. LAMKIN. Thirty-six thousand.

Mr. VESTAL. And how many disapproved?

Mr. LAMKIN. Closed, disapproved, 51,000. That leaves 55,000 pending.

Mr. VESTAL. I want to get this in my mind. Do I understand that this 55,000 have asked to be approved?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir; not necessarily. They are names which we have of men who have been discharged with disability.

Mr. VESTAL. Now, is it the purpose of the board to get to this 55,000 as quickly as possible, to find out whether or not they want training?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. VESTAL. That is the problem?

Mr. LAMKIN. That is a problem now. In other words, I said yesterday that it was gradual development. Along about the 1st of March we asked the Bureau of War Risk Insurance to run us off a list of men to whom they were paying compensation. We have sent those out to the districts with this instruction: this man has been discharged from the Army under honorable conditions with a disability for which he is being paid compensation. He is entitled to section 3 training if he wants it; get his medical record from the Public Health, or any other records that you can get, and find out whether or not he is entitled to section 2. If he is, offer that to him and clear up this load. Now, this shows that we have acted on 145,000 cases. The 15th of September we had acted on 32,500.

The CHAIRMAN. One other question, Mr. Lamkin, about those not entering who had been approved. Is anyone now denied training because we have not the facilities?

Mr. LAMKIN. Not now, I think. There are some cases where a man prefers to enter training at the beginning of a semester, the beginning of a school term, and those men defer on their own accord. On the other hand, it was mentioned here the other day—I expect to get to that part of the testimony, but it is well to put it in now—we have a contract with Temple University at Philadelphia, as you know, and the contract reads, not as Mr. Reid says, that we will guarantee them 1,000 students, but our contract provides that they will take up to 1,000 students. Now, if a boy says, "I want to start to school to-day for university work or college work," he can take any kind of course he wants to take at Temple if he is willing to go until his regular session of school which he wants to attend is open for him.

The CHAIRMAN. Can he enter any time?

Mr. LAMKIN. He can enter any time. We can arrange for him to enter any time.

As far as agricultural schools are concerned, we can enter those boys any time in the year, but they prefer them to enter on the first of every month in some agricultural schools.

For trade and industrial schools we can get the boy some kind of training. We can not get him into the training that he wants in some of these better trades and industrial schools at this time, but a number of these fellows say, "I would rather defer training; I would rather wait until the first of the year—the first semester—in order to go in."

Mr. VESTAL. Maybe I did not make myself clear—what I wanted to find out was, there has been a lot of testimony here about boys having to wait six months or a year after they had applied for training before the cases were acted upon; now, the point I want to get at is this: Is there any soldier that has asked for training, who has come in and asked for training that has been put off from day to day and not approved or his case not acted upon?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir; the cases are acted upon. It may be that they are not approved.

Mr. VESTAL. Well, that is what I mean, acted upon.

Mr. LAMPKIN. We are acting on them, and there are some cases that we can not say "yes" and can not say "no" until there is some other definite information which is necessary from a legal standpoint to get, and we are going to get that just as quick as we can. But these boys who come in day after day are the boys who have been told "no"; that they are not entitled under the law to section 2 training, and they want section 2 training, and as I said this morning they got the impression that they are entitled to section 2 training, and they are still going after it.

Mr. VESTAL. Would you say that that states the fact in practically all of these cases where there has been a delay; that it has been over the question of whether they should have section 2 or section 3 training?

Mr. LAMKIN. I think so, since the middle of July.

Mr. VESTAL. The middle of last July?

Mr. LAMPKIN. Yes, sir. Prior to that time they were delayed on account of the Bureau of War Risk. But understand I am not in the attitude of criticizing the Bureau of War Risk; I think we were the only English-speaking country, Mr. Chairman, that discharged our soldiers prior to the time the question of compensation and disability vocational training was determined. The other English-speaking countries kept the soldiers on the pay rolls until they determined this question. England, I think, gave them four checks which they could cash at any local post office, and they used that—kept right on with their Army pay until "pensions" and training were determined. And a great many of these cases of complaint are cases of economics where they want economic relief rather than vocational rehabilitation. I know one man that came here who is drawing, as I understand, $157.50 a month. He quit his training and complained of the board.

This is an educational problem, Mr. Chairman. I think I said this morning, and I would like to repeat when you are here, when I went to Cleveland last February, to a meeting of the National Education Association, I stated then to the chairman of the educational council that I thought rehabilitation challenged the educational interests of the country, because if the school system of America can not train men for jobs then the school system of America needs some reorganization. And yet, in spite of that, we have not employed all schoolteachers. Testimony was given here that we are employing all school teachers, but that testimony is based upon a wrong assumption of facts. We had on the 1st of April, 67 men employed in the districts. I don't mean clerks; I mean staff members. Of those, 285 were teachers, before they went either into military service or into the service of the board, and 383 were not teachers before they went in. And yet the training process, I don't care whether it is in a school or whether it is in a shop, the training process is an educational process, and the man who is supervising the work has to know something about the gradual educational development of the man who is being trained, and he has to know when you put a man in a shop whether or not that man is on the operation and getting training from the operation, or whether he is on an operation and producing for the employer.

A question was raised right along the same line about which you were speaking as to discontinuances. It has been stated that a large percentage of our men were discontinuing training.

The CHAIRMAN. Ten per cent. That was not very large.

Mr. LAMKIN. Well, 10 per cent. The Canadian figures for about the 1st of March, I think it was, showed that 9.4 per cent of men who had started training in Canada discontinued. At the same time our figures showed that 9.2 per cent of our men had discontinued training. The winter is over; spring is here, and probably a little larger per cent of our men are discontinuing—probably 10 per cent now. We checked up 2,277 of them, and 44 per cent was due to physical condition—44 per cent of the discontinuances.

Digitized by Google

Mr. VESTAL. What do you mean by that? That they have overcome their disability?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir; that they got sick again and had to go back to the hospital or go home. Twenty-one per cent was due to lack of interest; 2 per cent were dissatisfied; 2 per cent were discontinued by the board because of nonattendance.

The CHAIRMAN. How did you arrive at that estimate?

Mr. LAMKIN. We pulled 2,277 cases from our files here when the statement was made, and we wanted to find out why they were discontinued and took records that had been sent in to this office—the "107-B" form, as they call it—they send it in and state why this man has discontinued. We have followed him up and gotten in contact with him and found out exactly why he is out.

Mr. BURROUGHS. What is the total number of cases you examined in that way?

Mr. LAMKIN. Two thousand two hundred and seventy-seven. That is two-thirds of those who are out, approximately. Six per cent were those who had been approved and said they went, but never got to the school at all—never got to the place of training.

Mr. VESTAL. That were approved?

Mr. LAMKIN. That were approved and said they would go, and notified us that they had gone; and we ran them down and found out that they didn't get there at all—the fellow didn't show up.

Six per cent quit to accept employment not as the result of training. Now, get the distinction there. Here is a fellow who gets a job——

Mr. ROBSION (interposing). What was that figure?

Mr. LAMKIN. Six per cent quit to accept employment which was not the result of training—some other employment than that for which they were trained.

Mr. VESTAL. That is, some boy was in training, and somebody offered him a job, and he quit to get the money?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; he quit to get the money.

Three per cent were discontinued on account of their own misconduct. You understand, this is not 3 per cent of all those who went into training, but 3 per cent of those who discontinued.

Mr. BURROUGHS. That is the percentage on the basis of the per cent which you have given?

Mr. LAMKIN Yes, sir. In other words, there were 84 cases discontinued on account of their own misconduct out of some 34,000. You understand, 34,000 means 13 universities with 2,500 men apiece. You would think a university that has 2,500 men is a right good school, yet inside of a little over a year and a half this Government has practically established and maintained 13 of those universities, and of that, only 84 men have been dropped out because of misconduct.

The CHAIRMAN. That probably is a very much smaller per cent than those who do drop out of colleges.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. VESTAL. I was thinking that myself, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LAMKIN. Five per cent discontinued for natural reasons which they did not tell. One per cent died, and 5 per cent were later found not legally eligible.

Here is the situation that the board is in: We have to have in this folder enough evidence to pass a Treasury requirement for the payment of money. I now remember one or two of these fellows we had to take out of training because they were not legally eligible. I do not remember the man's name, but I remember one whom we had to take out of training in district No. 1—the Boston district. He had lost a hand, but we found that he had been dishonorably discharged. He went into the Boston office with a hand off and said he had been discharged from the Navy, and the Boston office put him in training, as they ought to have done. We ran him down, and when we verified his record we found that he had a court-martial record in the Navy; that he was loading a ship somewhere and found a dynamite bomb in the cargo, and he was told to throw it overboard, but instead of throwing it overboard he hit it with a hammer and it blew his hand off, and they dishonorably discharged him. It is not the question as to whether or not that boy ought to have been saved if we could save him, but we can not spend Government money on him because he was dishonorably discharged from the service.

The CHAIRMAN. You could not spend it on him if you knew; it would be better not to know it.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think that is true.

Now, that gives the reasons for the discontinuances.

You asked me this morning, Mr. Chairman—I am ready to discuss that now, if you want—you said this morning you wanted to know something about expenditures. Mr. Munroe on yesterday, I think, filed with the committee a statement of expenditures for the month of March. I would like to make this statement about payments of the boys in training. We are sending their checks out to the boys twice a month. We mail them from this office to the several district offices, who in turn send them on over to the boys. Since the 1st of January the first half month's pay has gone out to the Boston office not later than the 12th of the month.

Mr. BRAND. May I ask a question right there? Why do you send it to the district offices instead of sending it direct to the boys?

Mr. LAMKIN. Well, sir, I went into that yesterday.

Mr. BRAND. Well, never mind, then.

Mr. LAMKIN. It won't take but a minute, though, to say that again. The district office has authority to change a man's training from one institution to another—one place of training to another; the district office knows the man's last address; we do not. There are a large number of these men who are in training.

The next thing is, this boy may have borrowed money to start his first two weeks, either from the Elks or from the Red Cross. The district office knows that; we do not; and one of the first things which the boy ought to be taught is to pay his debts, and if he has borrowed $25 with the understanding that he is going to pay it back, he will pay it back sometimes if it comes through the local office and through the counselor, who will say to him, "Now, you owe the Elks $25; pay them $10 out of this check," and the boy is glad to do it.

Now, the reason we don't put disbursing officers in the districts and disburse from the districts is because of the overhead expense.

Digitized by Google

We can get out 35,000 checks here with practically the same machinery and with less than the proportionate part of the machinery it would take to get them out in 14 districts; and the second reason is that we haven't got the men and we can't get the men at $2,400 who know Government red tape regulations concerning the payment of money sufficiently well to intrust this work to 14 districts.

The last half of the month's checks have never gone out of here later than the 27th to the Boston office, and it is similar with other offices. I think that there has been, since the 1st of January, not a single time when the checks have been mailed for the first half of the month as late as the 15th, or for the last half of the month any later than the 29th—yes; one time they were mailed on the 30th to three districts. That shows that we are getting the money out to the boys in training.

Now, there is a question raised as to dependency claims. When the dependency claim is made and approved that delays sometimes for two or three days the payment of that man's check, but as soon as a man goes into training we put him on the roll at $80, and then we pass on his dependency claim when it is filed later. It is either do that or let him wait for all of his money until the dependency claim is filed and approved. It is better to put him on the roll for what we know we can pay him. Now, our law is different from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance law in this: That we have to pay all of our money to the man; we can't pay any of it to his dependents. The bureau pays a certain amount to the man and a certain amount to the dependents, but this law as written provides that a man without dependents shall receive $80 a month and a man with dependents shall receive $100 a month plus certain dependency allowances. So our checks have to be made direct to the man. No one else can collect them.

Our expenditures for the month of April were $3,984,699.90. I can not tell you just how much of that went for each purpose, because it had not been segregated. This is taken as a balance from our disbursing officer's books, and it takes three or four days to get it segregated into the various items in the auditor's books. We have left on the 1st day of May $6,197,441.74, and that will last us through the month of May, but will not last us through June; and Mr. Good has been told and has notified us that the deficiency appropriation bill will come out along about the 15th of May. I think he told us it would be reported out about then.

The CHAIRMAN. Your expense in May was over $3,000,000. Is that a monthly expense?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes—not quite $4,000,000—$3,984,699.90. That was during the month of April.

The CHAIRMAN. And next year the appropriation is $90,000,000. Is that to be regarded as a year's appropriation?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir. We based that on the estimate of an average of 48,550 men in training per month during the entire fiscal year. It is believed that during the first six months of the next fiscal year an average of 52,000 men will be pursuing courses. Our estimate made last October was 30,000 men in training the last three months. We have run over in every month, in every month since October we have run over.

Digitized by Google

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask whether your estimates for the $90,000,000 included the Darrow bill?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir; they did not include the Darrow bill. These statements that I shall file will show that in March, 1920, the overhead was something less than 14 per cent. That is not a fair month because, again, you have to understand the figures or they will not mean anything.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you got that statement so segregated that members of the committee can understand it?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; it will be; but I am just putting this explanation in that March is not a fair month because the last pay roll for the month of February for the soldiers was charged against the books on March 1, so it appears that the pay roll for the soldiers for March was bigger than it should be. But our expenditures since the organization of the rehabilitation division, or overhead, are less than 25 per cent, and since the 1st of July they are less than 20 per cent.

Now, this statement you will be interested in, I am sure, that on the last pay roll adjustment the average per half month to every man in training was $51.08, of all of these fellows who are being paid. In other words, it is running now—that pay roll would have run $102.16 per man per month for maintenance. That is a little higher than the average, because if a man went into training, for instance, the 1st of January and he had a dependent wife but he made no claim for his dependent wife, he is put on the pay roll at $80 a month; then he puts in his claim later for a dependent wife and it comes through, and that gives him $115 a month, or a difference of $35 a month paid back to the time he went into training, and he will get then on this pay roll an adjustment probably of $105 or $125, which will raise the average. But the soldiers are being paid now about $100 per man per month.

Mr. Chairman, the question has been brought up several times about the salary limitations, and I would dislike to make this statement—I don't want to burden the record, but here is a letter dated April 26 from Harold Vaughn, a representative in the Pihliadelphia office, one of the best men we have, sending in his resignation and stating:

I have an opportunity to enter commercial life, at the same time to build up my health, and I have accepted it.

Here is a letter, dated April 26, from George W. Weaver, who is superintendent of training, supervisory training, in the Philadelphia office, saying:

I have recently been appointed director of the Johnson Manual Training School, Scranton, Pa., and in so far as it offers more permanent employment, is directly in line with my past experience and preparation, offers great possibilities and a very substantial increase in salary. I feel that there was only one decision that I could make, much as I regretted it.

We were paying Mr. Weaver $3,500; they pay him his home and $5,500 a year.

Here is a letter under date of April 22, stating:

After conferring with you in Washington last week I have given a great deal of thought and consideration to the offer of a position which is at present staring me in the face. It seems, after everything is taken into consideration, it will be best for me to sever my connection with the Federal Board and accept this offer, which is one of greater remuneration and one which offers an opportunity for continuous employment.

That is signed by Charles W. Sylvester, who has been district vocational officer at Chicago ever since the board started its work.

Mr. Hamilton, superintendent of advisement and training, notifies me that Mr. L. O. Cummings, supervisor of advisement and training district No. 4, Baltimore, Md., is leaving the service to accept a position in the department of education, Harvard University. He says:

Mr. Cummings is not withdrawing because of a higher salary, but to accept a position of permanency leading to a $5,000 salary, and one which, at the same time, will permit him to complete his work for his doctor's degree.

He leaves the 1st of June.

Mr. Sibley, of the New Orleans office, writes under date of April 24—none of these, Mr. Chairman, are solicited letters; they are just as I picked them up coming across my desk, in order that you might know the conditions we are facing to-day. He says:

Referring to your letter of April 21, beg to say that I believe you have covered the situation adequately in stating the difficulties under which competent men may be employed in the training and placement sections. While formerly it was possible to secure good men at salaries of $2,400 per annum, or less, in the training sections, it is becoming increasingly more difficult each month, as most of the schools are recognizing the value of competent service in the teaching profession and are raising salaries accordingly.

For the placement section, however, the requirements are so unreasonable as set forth by the Civil Service Commission that it is very difficult to induce competent men to apply at the salaries listed. While the South has a reputation of paying less salaries and wages than other sections of the country, we have not found it possible to secure competent men possessing the necessary qualifications in the placement section at the salaries listed.

Here is a copy of a note from Mr. E. L. Shirrell, to Mr. Ricciardi, district vocational officer in San Francisco. Mr. Shirrell is training officer there:

At your suggestion I am placing in writing what I told you previously. One of the business schools here in San Francisco made me an offer to take over the management and guarantee $3,600 per year with the additional money to be gained from commission in tuition. You realize this is a considerable temptation, particularly after a man has spent two years in service at a considerable financial sacrifice.

After lengthy consideration I decided to remain with the board. I frankly state that my reasons for doing so were that about 25 per cent of the men with whom I come in contact are men from my own regiment and division and my interest in them is mostly personal, as it is to the other men, and I feel it a moral obligation to remain and see their course of training on its way. It is decidedly a question as to how much the United States Government expects its employees to sacrifice in a financial way in order to do the work of the Government.

This is from W. F. Shaw, field organizer, who went to the Chicago office recently and wrote me under date of April 8, as follows:

District No. 8—

That is Chicago—

is experiencing unusual difficulty in holding men in the service, due to competition met outside. In addition to the resignation of E. W. Marcellus, the following staff members have recently resigned or are soon to go:

E. L. Hayward, doing work in the training section with extensions and changes of courses, gone.

Harry F. White, Detroit branch office, has accepted $3,600 salary plus expenses and left the service.

E. H. Randolph, placement section, has gone into commercial work.

Digitized by Google

R. L. Coville, training section, now on indefinite leave without pay, but will not return.

V. V. Phelps did not return from leave, and has been requested to hand in his resignation.

George Salter, placement section, has quit.

George Deveneau is considering a position with the Oklahoma City Chamber of Commerce and may leave the service soon.

L. W. Wahlstrom is considering another position.

The day before he had wired me as follows:

E. W. Marcellus assistant to Sylvester leaving service to-day to accept higher salary elsewhere.

That was the 7th of April. On the 8th of April he writes me:

Centralia and Rockford, Ill., have been approved as locations for branch offices. The office at Centralia should have been opened three or four months ago in view of the number of men in Southern Illinois who can be handled from that office. However, neither office has been opened, due to the fact that district No. 8 has no men to place in charge at either office. Mr. Sylvester states that he has two men in training for these positions, but he can not send them from the Chicago office until he has men qualified to replace them in Chicago.

The point involved seems to center about the matter of getting additional personnel. If central office has anyone in sight, it would be well to send help to district No. 8.

C. E. Partch, of St. Louis, writes me under date of April 12:

Supplementing our telegram of this date relative to the number of men employed in this office who were formerly school-teachers and those who were not prior to their employment with the board, and asking for names and number of men who had resigned since July 11 for the reason that their salaries were inadequate.

The question had been raised in a hearing and I wired to ask him how many men employed were formerly school-teachers and how many were not. [Reading:]

I wish to advise you that Mr. McEachron is leaving us some time between now and May 1, although his resignation is not actually in yet, and that Mr. Nelson and Mr. Head are considering offers in other lines where they will receive a substantial increase in salary.

Very truly, yours,

C. E. PARTCH,
District Vocational Officer.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Lamkin, if the item of salary was not mentioned there, I would be led to think that those persons employed may be dissatisfied and demand an explanation of why they were leaving. It would appear that the work is disintegrating, and could it be attributed to the fact that it was due to dissatisfaction of these men?

Mr. LAMKIN. No; I think all of these state they are leaving because of lack of salary. He states that—

Mr. Nelson and Mr. Head are considering offers in other lines where they will receive a substantial increase in salary.

Then, here is the postscript:

Mr. Ball just left the office. He is considering going into business for himself just because he can not live in St. Louis on $2,400. He has a wife and two children.

The CHAIRMAN. That general breaking up there in Chicago is due to low salaries?

Mr. LAMKIN. Due to salary limitations.

Here is a letter from a man named Rogers, who I do not know, dated Boston, Mass., April 21, 1920, and addressed to the Civil Service Commission, attention Mr. Lamkin. I don't know why he addressed it to the Civil Service Commission, my attention. He says:

Your night letter of April 20 is at hand. I beg to advise you that since taking the examination for position on the Federal Vocational Board, that I have made other connection with a prominent business house and feel that a move in the Government work would be very disadvantageous, both from a financial and business standpoint.

Thanking you for the appointment, I am,

Respectfully yours,

CHARLES H. ROGERS.

The CHAIRMAN. So you can definitely make the statement that these people leaving have gone on account of salary?

Mr. LAMKIN. The district offices report 148 men in the districts have resigned since the 11th of July because of salary limitations, and it is just a question of holding the better men. I have made no canvass of the central office.

The CHAIRMAN. That would indicate that you had pretty good men, because they were being picked up by other institutions.

Mr. LAMKIN. Mr. Marcellus, assistant at Chicago, whom we are paying $3,500, starts out at $4,500. Mr. Sylvester, district vocational officer at Chicago, starts out at $5,500 with a promise of $6,000 within six months.

Mr. VESTAL. May I ask what was Mr. Sylvester's business before he went into this work?

Mr. LAMKIN. I think he was a teacher, as I recollect. I am not sure about that, but I think Mr. Sylvester was a teacher. But he said to me, "I am a young man; I don't ever expect to go back into the schoolroom again; I am getting out into business and here is an opportunity, and I feel that I have made a financial sacrifice as long as I should."

Mr. VESTAL. I think he is a very capable man from what I know of him.

Mr. LAMKIN. I know the men in the central office here, some of them are here at sacrifices, and they can not afford to stay.

Now, the question was raised, too, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the payment of accounts.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Lamkin, before you leave that, do you think it is necessary for Congress to make a rerating of those salaries in order to get effective work?

Mr. LAMKIN. I think it is. I think there can be no question about it, Mr. Chairman. I think you had better have one man and pay him $4,800 if he is the right man, than to have two $2,400 men. I think we had better have one $4,000 man handling these boys than two $2,000 men.

Mr. ROBSION. That is predicted upon the present condition of things.

Mr. LAMKIN. What do you mean?

Mr. ROBSION. In the way of expenses and everything, living expenses and everything else.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes; certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. They are likely to continue for some time at least.

Mr. LAMKIN. I told Mr. Good at the last meeting of the appropriations committee that I am one person that would like to make a record in Government service, and I am sure the board would like to make a record of doing a big job and keeping the expenses down as much as we can, but the economical way to keep expenses down is to get competent people to do the work.

Mr. BURROUGHS. To what extent, Mr. Lamkin, in case the board had authority to pay salaries up to $4,000, we will say, where you now have a limitation of $2,400, to what extent would it be your judgment that there should be a reorganization, and to what extent; would you simply increase the salaries of the men you already have from $2,400 to $4,000 and keep right on with the same men?

Mr. LAMKIN. There are a number of these men whom I would not increase the salaries at all, Mr. Burroughs. I think as far as the administrative officers of the board are concerned the salary limitations have been rather a good thing to hide behind sometimes. We could shift the responsibility onto Congress when we didn't want to increase a man's salary, which we have done in some instances. We have said, "No; we can't increase your salary, because we have to use that salary which we have for some one else in a more important position."

But I feel that you ought to intrust your administrative officers with power to pay salaries and hold them to strict accountability.

The CHAIRMAN. It is very unsafe, Mr. Lamkin, to make lump-sum appropriations and leave the salary open.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think that is true.

The CHAIRMAN. You must recognize that.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think that is true.

The CHAIRMAN. Especially in governmental lines.

Mr. LAMKIN. I am not trying to solve all these problems, Mr. Chairman; I am trying to state them.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I asked the question because it is going to face us—this salary question.

Mr. LAMKIN. It is facing us all the time, and it is just a question of holding these men that we have or going out and getting others and training them, and when developed to be really serviceable to lose them. This is temporary work and men are not going into temporary work at the same salaries that they would be willing to go into other work. The war is over. Although this is war work, people are not recognizing it as war work.

Now, if you want to put it into the record, Mr. Chairman, I can give you a list as of April 1 of every voucher that has been submitted to this office, the amount of it, the date it got here, and why it had not been paid, and I can do the same thing for the 1st of May.

The CHAIRMAN. Would the members of the committee think that would be necessary?

Mr. LAMKIN. You would probably want this: On the 1st day of April there were 4,259 vouchers in this office not paid; 74 per cent of them came into the office during the month of March.

Mr. ROBSION. What do they aggregate?

Mr. LAMKIN. $405,842.23. Now when I lived in Missouri that was a lot of money; when I have lived here it is a lot of money, but that represents approximately two weeks' work.

Digitized by Google

The CHAIRMAN. And you are doing nearly $4,000,000 a month work?

Mr. LAMKIN. $4,000,000 a month, $150,000 a day on the average. I will give you the figures.

The CHAIRMAN. I think if you make a summary it would be sufficient, rather than put all of those in.

Mr. LAMKIN. I will make this statement, Mr. Chairman, that we are nearer up with our bills than any Government organization in Washington that is handling that much money.

One of these vouchers has been in this office, lasted over from last July. It was not paid because the claimant, an employee of the board, went back to a certain town—had gone back and forth three or four times, and we held it to find out why he went back. He was right; he had moved his place of residence from one town over about 25 or 30 miles to another town so as to be in the center of the district. He went back there, charged no expenses while he was there; he saw soldiers; he submitted a definite statement as to the exact amount of work which he did there and the soldiers whom he saw, and showed that it was on Government business, but we held it up until he did show it was on Government business.

The CHAIRMAN. Are we to interpret the statement you have made as to the payment of bills that any of the unpaid bills that have hung over for any length of time are in dispute?

Mr. LAMKIN. There is some question—they are not meeting Government regulations; I would not say they are "in dispute."

The CHAIRMAN. It is not a matter of negligence?

Mr. LAMKIN. Not a matter of negligence.

Mr. BURROUGHS. You heard what Mr. Noyes testified to?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. About those nine professional schools up in New York?

Mr. LAMKIN. He did not—Mr. Noyes did not visit them, did he, Mr. Burroughs?

Mr. BURROUGHS. No; he says:

One of the men in the follow-up section told me two weeks ago—

This testimony was given on April 13—that would be about April 1—that he just had taken a trip through New York State. He visited nine professional schools in that State, and not one of those schools had been paid for the tuition of any man in those schools.

Mr. LAMKIN. I have stated that this is a matter of development. I would like to say this in the nature of a reply to Mr. Noyes's statement: The auditing and disbursing sections were serving two divisions of the board. There was in a way a misunderstanding as to whether or not they were directly responsible to the chiefs of the divisions or directly responsible to the standing committee and the board. I think that has been smoothed out. I think we have that arranged satisfactorily. In order to get all the accounts paid I wrote a letter to every place where we had a man in training on the 15th of January and asked them to submit every account which they had to us for payment, and they came in. The schools had not billed us, had not made their vouchers, and sent them in, and they began coming in the latter part of January and the 1st of February. On the 1st of February we moved from Convention Hall to the place where we now are. The instructions were given to Mr. Dolan and Mr. Quillin, the disbursing officer and auditor, to pay the soldiers first, to let other people wait until we got the soldiers paid. In the month of February, if you will remember, there were two holidays; we lost about four days when we could not touch a thing on account of moving; it was a short month and the influenza struck us.

The consequence was that about the 1st of March we probably had more vouchers on hand in this office than had ever been in here before, and like any business organization will do when they get behind, we got our people to work over hours and to work nights; and now, at the 1st of May, I think there are fewer vouchers in the office than have ever been there, and I have no doubt that a good many of these schools who had rendered their vouchers along from the 15th of January to the 1st of February and did not get a return on it inside of 30 days, complained. But even then that statement is a hearsay statement of Mr. Noyes and he doesn't give a specific instance.

Mr. Hartog was down here and testified. Recently in this list of bills here I have seen some accounts for Mr. Hartog and the Columbia bookstore that are unpaid, and they are unpaid because there is no purchase authority submitted with them, which the Treasury regulations require. The boys had gone over there and bought this material; Mr. Hartog had sold it to them. We will no doubt pay it; we will no doubt have to pay it; we no doubt ought to pay it; don't put it "have to pay it" but "ought to pay it." But we can't pay it until it is in proper shape to pass the Treasury auditors. Our disbursing officer is under bond, and if he pays an account that will not be passed by the Treasury auditor, either it will have to come out of his bond or we will have to come back to Congress and get a special act authorizing payment of the claim.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean by that, if you would order that paid, the comptroller would disallow it?

Mr. LAMKIN. He would disallow it; and if he had paid it and the comptroller had disallowed it, it would either be taken out of the disbursing officer's bond or there would have to be an act of Congress to relieve him.

Now, Mr. Quillen told me on last Friday night, the 30th of April: "I have 1,197 vouchers in the auditing office to-night." And he had handled 2,300 and some odd during the week. "In other words," I said, "in your accounting section here you have a half week's work?" He says, "I can clean it up in three days."

Now, if we get the bills in shape we can get them cleaned up and be on a 30-day basis, and if we pay our bills in 30 days—if a Government institution pays its bills in 30 days, it is doing better than the average business institution.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Has there been any time since you became chief of this division when you have not had funds sufficient to have paid all your bills?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir.

Mr. BURROUGHS. If the proper vouchers had been made?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir; if they had been properly vouchered and if our people had been properly trained to handle them.

The CHAIRMAN. I think this is true; I think the disbursing officer did not realize the size of this job; he did not train his men—did not train his force to take care of it.

Mr. LAMKIN. They are trained now. We are in shape now to handle it.

The CHAIRMAN. I think, Mr. Lamkin, I can say that there was not a man in or out of Congress that knew the size of this job when it started. I had as much to do with starting it as anyone, and I had no conception of the size of it.

Mr. TOWNER. And I might add that no one else had an idea as to the size of the job. All the testimony that was given us by the experts that came from Canada and those that had made the estimates in the United States underestimated it not only in large proportion but absolutely had no conception of the size of the job.

Mr. LAMKIN. I would like to make this personal statement, if you do not object: The board, of course, is acting through administrative officers. I came here the 15th of September, and within 30 days from the time I came here the director, Dr. Prosser, these two Canadian experts who were in the board, Dr. Miller and Mr. Kidner, Dr. H. L. Smith, the chief of the division, and Mr. George Greener, who was the field organizer, and another administrative officer—in other words, the five chief administrative officers of this division—went out of the service, and the chief had to learn the job and had to get some sort of idea of it. I did not know what "a million dollars" was.

Mr. VESTAL. Maybe you were a school-teacher before you came?

Mr. LAMKIN. I was "just a school-teacher."

Our financial report, which shows every dollar of expenditure by the board between the 1st day of January and the 31st day of March, has been submitted to both Houses of Congress, so if you want to know what bills were paid between the 1st of February and the 1st of April you can have the clerk copy them. And this was what was left on the 1st of April, and I would like to file that with you, not for the record but to see that it is there if any of you need it [indicating papers].

The CHAIRMAN. Now, what else have you there, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. LAMKIN. I am practically done with that part of it. I have made an outline here—still a school-teacher.

Mr. VESTAL. I only asked that question because you had stated you did not know what a million dollars was.

Mr. LAMKIN. I have two more things which I thought I would trace up in detail.

The CHAIRMAN. How long would it take you?

Mr. LAMKIN. It depends on how many questions you would ask. It will take me an hour or so.

The CHAIRMAN. The members of the committee would like to respond to a roll call now, and we will stand adjourned until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. BRAND. Before we adjourn, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I have been absent since last Friday a week on account of illness in my family.

(Whereupon, at 4.10 o'clock p. m., the committee adjourned until 10 o'clock a. m., May 4, 1920.)

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Tuesday, May 4, 1920.

The committee met at 10 o'clock a. m., Hon. Simeon D. Fess (chairman) presiding.

TESTIMONY OF MR. UEL W. LAMKIN, CHIEF, DIVISION OF REHABILITATION, FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION—Resumed.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Lamkin, we are ready to resume your testimony if you are ready.

Mr. LAMKIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like, if I may, to make one correction in a statement I made yesterday. I stated that the overhead for March was something less than 14 per cent. When I read my notes yesterday I divided the overhead expense by the direct expense to the man instead of dividing it by the total expense, so that the overhead for March is something less than 12 per cent, 11 per cent and a fraction, instead of 13 per cent and a fraction. My attention was called to that after I left the stand yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The reason I asked the question as to the proportion of the funds that go to rehabilitation and the proportion to overhead was because when we had the Darrow bill before us a member of the American Legion appeared and made a statement giving a proportion that seemed to be entirely out of order. I did not know anything about the facts in the case but it is a matter that ought to be made perfectly clear.

Mr. LAMKIN. If that statement were true, Mr. Chairman, the proportion was entirely out of order, and I do not want it to be understood that I think that gentleman—I do not know who he was—was making any attempt to distort or discolor. He had not made sufficient investigation to find out. I think this is true, however, that up to the time the men went into training; that is, when our men were out in the hospitals and when the organization was under way, and before the schools opened in September, the overhead or administrative expense was bound to be out of proportion to the amount that was spent in tuition and on the men.

There are two statements I would like to file here——

The CHAIRMAN. Before you enter upon that, Mr. Lamkin, the overhead charge in the organization will likely be very heavy and the same danger will be true when you come to lesson the work. As you approach the end of the work the work is going to grow less and it is a concern of mine and the committee, I am sure, and I know of Congress, as to whether the overhead charge will proportionately lesson with the lessening of the work; in other words, when you have got the work nearly done, will your overhead be as much as it is now.

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. The overhead expenses for follow-up work, of course, will not diminish as long as the load remains the same, but the overhead for clerical expense will diminish and should diminish.

The CHAIRMAN. That, of course, is not a problem now.

Mr. LAMKIN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. But it will be a problem later.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes; it will be a problem later.

Since the 1st of July, 1919, to the 31st of March, 1920, out of the appropriations for rehabilitation for the year, we have spent for salaries for central office, $966,415.04; salaries in the field, $2,169,175.01, and we mean by the field, out in the district offices; travel for agents and employees, $42,658.80; subsistence while traveling for agents and employees, $98,826.77; station expense, $2,747.67. This means for stamps and for delivery of express packages and for freight hauling and little items and things of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that so itemized that we can see the details of it? The travel expense seems to be rather large.

Mr. LAMKIN. Forty-two thousand dollars, for all the travel for all the men from the 1st of July to the 1st of March? The complaint has been that we have not reached the boys personally.

The CHAIRMAN. I know that is the complaint.

Mr. LAMKIN. Of course, some people do not understand as well as you and Mr. Robsion and I do, who live out in the middle West, and further, the magnificent distances that some of our men have to travel. For instance, take the Minneapolis office; the distance from Minneapolis to the northwestern part of its district is as far as it is from Minneapolis to Maine, or from Minneapolis to New Orleans, and when a man goes out to Bozeman to follow up the boys in training in the agricultural college in Bozeman, Mont., he has to travel further than when he goes from here to Minneapolis. So travel expense, particularly when you get west of the Mississippi River, mounts up very high, but this is itemized as travel (transportation).

Furniture and office equipment, $101,384.57; printing, stationery, and office supplies, $117,909.79; rent, heat, light, electricity, etc., $106,879.63; telegraph, telephone, $13,038.84; freight, express, drayage, $9,801.39; miscellaneous supplies and services, $21,443.20; total, administrative expenses, $3,650,280.71.

Direct expense of disabled men: Allowance (maintenance pay), $14,267,533.59; tuition, $956,744.89; travel for disabled men, $130,099.76; subsistence, $36,278.61; books and training supplies, $216,670.37; medical attention and supplies, $69,382.14; miscellaneous, $12,968.41; total, direct expense, $15,689,677.77; a grand total of all expenses of $19,339,958.48.

The CHAIRMAN. That is from July to April.

Mr. LAMKIN. From July to April; from which must be subtracted $5,974.85, which leaves our net total expenditures, $19,333,983.63.

I might explain this item, "less certificates of deposit"; they are canceled checks that have been sent out as payments and the boy has gone out of training, or is an overpayment of some kind. Perhaps, he has gone over to the bureau pay roll and the check is returned to us, and they have not yet been segregated into the various accounts in the auditing department, although they are back in the disbursing office.

Digitized by Google

Statement of total expenditures incurred since July 1, 1919, paid from appropriations "Vocational rehabilitation" and "Vocational rehabilitation, 1920," as of Mar. 31, 1920, as shown by books of account in auditing and accounting section.

Administrative expense:
Salaries (central office)	$966,415.04
Salaries (field)	2,169,175.01
Travel (transportation)	42,658.80
Subsistence (and incidental travel expenses)	98,826.77
Station expense	2,747.67
Furniture and office equipment	101,384.57
Printing, stationery, and office supplies	117,909.79
Rent, heat, light, electricity, etc. (service)	106,879.63
Telegraph, telephone	13,038.84
Freight, express, drayage	9,801.39
Miscellaneous supplies and services	21,443.20
Total		$3,650,280.71
Direct expense of disabled men:
Allowance (maintenance pay)	14,267,533.59
Tuition	956,744.89
Travel	130,099.76
Subsistence	36,278.61
Books and training supplies	216,670.37
Medical attention and supplies	69,382.14
Miscellaneous	12,968.41
Total		15,689,677.77
Grand total, all expenses		19,339,958.48
Less certificates of deposit (refunds and recoveries)		5,974.85
Net total expenditures		19,333,983.63

Now, since the organization of the work, there has been spent all told, $14,267,533.59 for training pay for men in training.

The CHAIRMAN. $14,000,000?

Mr. LAMKIN. $14,000,000. That is the entire amount that has been spent for training pay. You understand that none of that training pay was paid by us prior to the 11th of July. For tuition, $1,160,693.03; travel and subsistence, $662,350.11; books and supplies, $299,020.92, making a total of $16,389,597.65. That goes back, of course, beyond the first of the last fiscal year. That is the entire expenditure for rehabilitation work for men, $16,389,597.65.

Salary and wage, $4,232,730.81; travel and subsistence, $300,611.37 (that is travel and subsistence); printing and stationery, $262,110.76; rent, repair, and equitment, $175,243.51; supplies and equipment, $297,142.18; communication, $32,401.55; miscellaneous emergency, $137,880.52, total, $21,827,718.35, from which must be subtracted canceled checks not included, $8,859.99, leaving the total expenditures to April 1, 1920, $21,818,858.36. That is to the 1st of April and shows that the overhead for the entire time is something less than 25 per cent. The overhead since the 1st of July is less than 20 per cent, and the overhead for the month of March, which as I stated yesterday is not a fair month because there were heavy expenditures to the men, was less than 12 per cent. The overhead is running less than 14 per cent at the present time.

Statement of expenditures of Federal Board for Vocational Education March, 1920.

Training pay	$14,267,533.59
Tuition	1,160,093.03
Travel and subsistence	662,350.11
Books and supplies	299,020.92
Total	16,389,597.65
Salary and wage	4,232,730.81
Travel and subsistence	300,611.37
Printing and stationery	262,110.76
Rent, repair, and equipment	175,243.51
Supplies and equipment	297,142.18
Communication	32,401.55
Miscellaneous emergency	137,880.52
Total	21,827,718.35
Canceled checks not included	8,859.99
Total expenditures to Apr. 1, 1920	21,818,858.36

The CHAIRMAN. Can we assume that the overhead in proportion will be growing less?

Mr. LAMKIN. Down to a certain rather irreducible minimum; yes. The overhead will not increase, of course. The men dropping out of training will cut down proportionately the overhead expense, particularly, as I say, of clerical help. There is another thing: Mr. Good suggested that as we got onto the job better we could cut the overhead expense down. We are cutting down the paper work, which takes clerks, and the increases which are coming because of the increased number of men who are going into training.

Mr. TOWNER. But you have continually reduced the proportion or percentage of overhead.

Mr. LAMKIN. Materially so.

I would like to file this letter, Mr. Chairman, on another matter. I am rather cleaning up one or two things this morning, if I may. The question has been raised about the New York lease and the prices which we are paying as a rental. I would like to file this letter, which shows what prices are being paid by other parties in the same building.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no objection to that.

Mr. LAMKIN. This shows that the Government, on a short-time lease, is not paying as much as other people in the same building are paying. I think Mr. Clark in his testimony covered that, but I think there is some information you need to know.

(The letter referred to follows:)

NEW YORK, March 11, 1920.

FEDERAL BOARD OF VOCATIONAL EDUCATION,
469 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

(Attention of Mr. William A. Clark.)

SIRS: We are giving you below, as per your request, prices of the rentals of the various floors in the National Association Building:

Fifth floor: $4 to $4.50, one small space renting at $3; approximately 6,200 square feet to be rented at an average of $3.80 per square foot.

Sixth floor: $4 to $5 per square foot; one small space renting at $3.

Digitized by Google

Seventh floor: $3.30 to $4.45 per square foot; one small space renting at $3.
Eighth floor: $4 to $5 per square foot; one small space renting at $3.
Ninth floor: $4 to $5 per square foot.
Tenth floor: $4.25 to $5 per square foot.
Eleventh floor: $4.25 to $5 per square foot; one small space to be leased at $6 per foot.
Twelfth floor: Entire floor leased at $4 per square foot to one tenant.
Fourteenth floor: $5 to $6 per square foot.
Fifteenth floor: $5 to $6.15 per square foot.
Sixteenth floor: $5 to $6.15 per square foot.
Seventeenth floor: $5 to $6.50 per square foot.
Eighteenth floor: To be rented at $6 per square foot.
Nineteenth floor: $4 per square foot; space to be leased at $6.50 per square foot.
Twentieth floor: To be leased in its entirety at $5 per square foot.
Twenty-first floor: To be used by the National Association Building Corporation.
Twenty-second floor: To be rented in its entirety at $5 per square foot.
Trusting the above information is what you require, we remain,
Yours, very truly,

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION BUILDING CORPORATION,
JAMES T. LEE, President.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to ask you in connection with that matter whether your experience would justify you in making an answer to the question of whether a Government contract is a difficult one to make?

Mr. LAMKIN. It is a very difficult one to make.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have the basis of that difficulty?

Mr. LAMKIN. I think there are three general bases. In the first place, regardless of what you put into a lease, the Government can cancel its contract on 30 days' notice. The second thing is that appropriations run only to the end of the fiscal year, and office space is greatly in demand at the present time. Consequently, agents want to rent their buildings for long terms at the present high rentals. They do not want short-time leases at the present high rentals. In the third place, there is always more or less difficulty in collecting your money from the Government. It has to be made out in a certain voucher form and the rent is never paid in advance You have to pay them at the end of the month instead of the beginning of the month. You have to voucher it and swear to it every month and send it in through the Treasury Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Are all of our bills paid in that way?

Mr. LAMKIN. All Government bills?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir. We have gotten to this arrangement with our rentals, that we are paying them merely at the end of the month now on a voucher which we make and submit.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the contract also for the payment of tuition for the boys who are studying?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That seems to have been a source of difficulty at Columbia?

Mr. LAMKIN. We are having difficulty with the schools in that regard, Mr. Chairman, because if the boy is not in school, for instance, during the entire term, the Government will pay for the time that he is in.

The CHAIRMAN. But does not pay at the end of the time for his tuition?

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I have been a school officer and a college officer nearly all my life and we always required payment in advance.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes; and if the boy left of his own free will and accord you made no refund.

The CHAIRMAN. No; he forfeited it.

Mr. LAMKIN. The Government pays for the service it gets. Now, there is one thing which I spoke about to Mr. Danielson when he was here, I called him off and said to him, "You have made the statement that you can not get your payment for your fees and you can not get any statement as to whether or not these fees can be paid. We have now gotten a ruling from the Comptroller of the Treasury that these can be paid when due, so that as far as the fees are concerned, the laboratory fees or library fees, or anything of that kind, we can pay the fee when the bill for it is submitted, but we can not pay his tuition until the end of the month."

The CHAIRMAN. Can the committee draw the conclusion then that difficulty at Columbia would be a difficulty anywhere that the Government is dealing with students or with a university?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes; that is a difficulty but we are overcoming it.

The CHAIRMAN. In what way?

Mr. LAMKIN. We are overcoming it by having them submit their bills at the end of every month and getting them paid, but we can not pay tuition in advance.

The CHAIRMAN. So that the tuition which is usually collected for the year would be paid by the Government in monthly payments?

Mr. LAMKIN. Monthly payments or quarterly payments or semiannual payments or annual payments at the end of the period for which the man is entered.

The CHAIRMAN. I can see how a college would be more or less disturbed in their bookkeeping if that is the order of procedure.

Mr. LAMKIN. If there is anyway to get around it I would like to find it out.

The CHAIRMAN. You understand I am not finding fault with the board but am speaking of the contracts which the Government makes.

Mr. LAMKIN. I am not approching this investigation with the idea that the committee is finding fault, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. No; we are trying to get at all the facts.

Mr. LAMKIN (continuing). But trying to get the facts and clear them up.

Mr. TOWNER. Still, if the schools felt under any obligation as patriotic citizens toward the soldiers, it occurs to me that they ought not to make so much difficulty about a proposition of that kind.

Mr. LAMKIN. We have no difficulty as far as that is concerned. The difficulty is when the payments are delayed in getting to them, and as the chairman has pointed out with reference to the books of the school. The registrar has to change his method of bookkeeping in order to submit his accounts, and it is causing confusion both to them and to us.

I might add a fourth reason why a Government contract is not desirable for a man who is renting property or renting office space, and that is, if they have any complaint or any claim they have to prosecute it through the Court of Claims.

Digitized by Google

The CHAIRMAN. And that means delay always.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes: and an adjustment can not be obtained in their own locality; so for those reasons a Government contract is not desirable.

The question has been raised once or twice as to further decentralization of the work of the board into even smaller districts. I think that as far as contract with the men is concerned, I will agree. This statement may be of interest in that connection:

The cases of all men in training from New Jersey, from North Dakota, and from the fourth, fifth, and seventeenth congressional districts in Texas were analyzed to see if the men were in training in their own congressional districts or elsewhere.

You will notice we have taken some in the East, some in the Northwest, and some in the South.

In the 19 districts analyzed there were 639 men in training. One hundred and seventy-two of these men, or 27 per cent, were in training in their own congressional districts and 467 men, or 73 per cent, were in training elsewhere.

I think, therefore, that as far as the purpose of contract is concerned with the man, a smaller district even than we have now, with our 100 branch offices, might be desirable.

The CHAIRMAN. If you will permit me there, Mr. Lamkin, the statement was made here, and you heard it, that the New York office was soliciting men to come into that district. There was one man from Texas on the witness stand who left the impression with the committee that the New York office was bringing men from places that might be less expensive into a place which is the most expensive, and the committee would be glad to know about that.

Mr. LAMKIN. We shall file a photostatic copy of the record that was made at that time, which shows that the man wanted to go to New York because he said he had made some influential friends in the city and could get along better in the city than he could in Texas, and he was in such bad physical condition that the man who met him was willing for him to do anything that he wanted to do.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, if that copy would satisfy the committee on that particular case, what about the general rule?

Mr. LAMKIN. The general rule is to train the man in his home district if the training can be secured there, and if the training can not be secured there, to send him anywhere the training necessary can be secured.

The CHAIRMAN. The question has been suggested as to how far the request or the desire of the soldier himself is respected as to where he is to be trained.

Mr. LAMKIN. A reasonable request, Mr. Chairman, is respected.

The CHAIRMAN. What would be a reasonable request?

Mr. LAMKIN. I think I can answer that best by illustration, can I not?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. LAMKIN. There was a boy in Colorado who wanted to go to the Ohio State University. He was at first refused because, they said, he could get the same training in Colorado that he could get in

Digitized by Google

Ohio. When he said, however, that he had spent two years in the Ohio State University, had completed his sophomore year and wanted to go on in his junior course, he was sent to the Ohio State University because we believed he could do better work in that institution where he had had two years than he could by remaining in Colorado.

The CHAIRMAN. I admire your decision.

Mr. LAMKIN. Another boy, who probably had never been to any institution at all, and who lived in Colorado, and who was expected to live in Colorado and remain in Colorado would, of course, be sent to the institution in Colorado, regardless of his preference in wanting to go somewhere else.

As I said yesterday in discussing the question of the tubercular man, he always wants to go somewhere else than where he is. He wants to go to the "end of the rainbow over yonder," and those boys, some of them, we have sent across the continent in order that they might get the training which would be of benefit to them and which they wanted to have. Another boy we sent not long ago to California from one of the middle western States because, after the war began, his father and mother had moved to California, and he said that when he got out there, he wanted to live out there. So we respected his wishes in that respect, but as a general thing we tell the boy to stay in his home locality as far as he can.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the question of what has been done in other countries has been raised. I think it is about time that the people of this country were understanding that we are doing more in the way of vocational rehabilitation in American and in the United States than any other country in the world has done.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee would be very glad to have the comparison, because that really would be a basis upon which it can judge how well this work has been done.

Mr. LAMKIN. In France no person receives training who is less than 60 per cent disabled, and a 60 per cent disability is only given to cases of major amputations.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that training governmental?

Mr. LAMKIN. You mean given by the Government?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How are the funds supplied?

Mr. LAMKIN. I can not answer the question that was asked the other day, as to how much the appropriations were by these various countries.

The CHAIRMAN. I wish, Mr. Lamkin, if you could give us that information, you would do so. I have seen it stated in foreign dispatches in the press that France is not doing rehabilitation governmentally; that it is voluntary; and that is in doubt in my mind. It seems to me that that is a mistake, although I have seen it in the press several times.

Mr. LAMKIN. I will answer that partially. A day or two ago, I think Mr. Robsion asked Mr. Munroe, when he was on the stand, regarding the amount of appropriations in other countries. We have the appropriation in Canada, which I will give you when I get to that, which came in a wire in response to our wire, from Mr. Parkinson, who is in charge of the soldiers' civil reestablishment, and with whom we have reasonably close reciprocal relations. We can not get the information from the other countries except by going through the State Department for it, and we are going through the State Department to get you that information to file it.

A man in training in France, while he is in the hospital and not yet discharged, receives the pay of his rank and his family receives the separation allotment just as if he were in active service. Men on convalescent leave who are receiving training at the training centers receive 34 cents a day for subsistence, of which 24 cents must be paid to the training center for maintenance.

Mr. ROBSION. That is, the French soldier in training receives not more than 34 cents to maintain himself?

Mr. LAMKIN. To maintain himself; yes.

Mr. ROBSION. And he must pay 24 cents of that to the institution that is giving him the training?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir. They regard training in France as merely giving the man the artificial appliances and a few months of training, during which time the Government maintains him as a totally disabled soldier.

The CHAIRMAN. The early part of the work of France seemed to be more of a spectacular nature in that it dealt with the cases of legless men and armless men.

Mr. LAMKIN. I am sure you would be surprised, and it would be an intense gratification to you, if you would know the way in which the legless men in America, the average dismembered men in America, declines to have a picture taken of his disability. For instance, not long ago, one of the weekly motion-picture film people said, "I want to see what is being done in these schools for the boys," and when they went out to see them the boy with an arm off would hide his artificial hand, and they said, "It is not spectacular enough for us to make a film of it."

The CHAIRMAN. You will be interested to know that I had a letter some months ago from the president of one of the universities in which he filed a very severe protest against allowing the film people to go into the school and take a picture of these boys. He was very bitter about it.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think he is right about it. For that reason, as I said, we have never published the names of the boys without their own consent or unless the boy wanted it himself.

The provisions in Italy are much the same as those in France. The training is given in hospital centers.

On the 12th to the 17th of October, 1919, there was held in Rome an interallied conference on the retraining of disabled men. Prof. Giovanni Loriga made the following statement:

There are in Italy 74,620 cripples—

And you will notice he uses the word "cripples" as distinguished from the word "disabled."

In Italy there are 74,620 cripples, of which number 30,304 are crippled in the inferior members, and 44,316 in the superior. However, 19,652 of the former are only slightly crippled, and 27,536 of the latter. There are 27,432 men who are seriously crippled.

The data relative to reconstruction are less precise. Nevertheless, we can affirm that not over 14,009 men have entered these schools, and these are in a great measure disabled in the inferior members. Reconstructed men who have left the school, however, are not 6,000 in number; the remaining 8,000 have not yet completed their reconstruction. Of the 6,000 who have left the school only 4,000 have been reconstructed for manual labor; the others have merely improved their education and have sought office positions.

That is page 871 of this interallied conference report.

The CHAIRMAN. What date is that?

Mr. LAMKIN. October 12 to 17, 1919.

Statistics prove: First, that only a small number of war-maimed soldiers and cripples (7½ per cent) entered in the schools of reeducation; second, that more than half of them have gone out without having completed its reeducation; third, that among reeducated soldiers only one-third has learned a a manual trade; fourth, that the greatest number of them was maimed or crippled of the inferior limbs.

Of course, the English-speaking countries are the countries which have done the most in the way of reconstruction and rehabilitation.

The vocational-training scheme which is outlined for England, which we have heard discussed here—I think the statement was made here that there were 600,000 men or 900,000 pensioners in England. They were called pensioners. Up to April, 1919, only 15,000 men had received training or were in training.

Mr. ROBSION. Up to what date?

Mr. LAMKIN. April, 1919. You see, England has been at it two or three years longer than we have.

A report of the House of Commons, 247, dated December 23, 1919, being the second special report from the select committee on pensions, gives the following statement:

We have heard a considerable amount of evidence as regards the present arrangements for treatment and training, both of officers and men. Both are subjects presenting great difficulties, and if the select committee is reappointed when Parliament meets, we propose to call further evidence.

But we desire to draw attention without delay to the very serious state of affairs due to the want of proper accommodation for training, particularly of noncommissioned officers and men.

You understand, of course, the English system distinguishes between the officers and the men.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Lamkin, right there, in order to get some light on the matter, we do not discriminate between the officers and the men.

Mr. LAMKIN. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. But there are some officers who are not eligible; can you explain why that is?

Mr. LAMKIN. They are on the retired list, as I understand it, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. They are men in the Regular Army who are on the retired list?

Mr. LAMKIN. And are not discharged.

The CHAIRMAN. And therefore are in the pay of the Army?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; we can give them what we call section 6 training, which is simply the same as our section 3 training and provides books and supplies, but we can not pay them from two Government sources, and as long as they are retired Army officers on three-fourths or half pay we can not pay them.

The CHAIRMAN. That explains it.

Mr. LAMKIN (reading):

The representatives of the labor ministry, in their evidence, stated that there were some 13,000 men only actually in training, that 20,000 more were on the waiting list, and that there were some 40,000 more ready to come forward and train if vacancies for training were advertised. In other words, that there was a clear deficiency of training facilities for some 60,000.

It is admitted that the great difficulty is the provision of satisfactory, large work shops or premises in which to carry on training.

The ministry have schemes in hand which should provide shortly 8,000 more places, but this is but a small way toward the 30,000 places which is the minimum the ministry consider necessary to meet the urgent need.

The principal difficulty is that while the need is very urgent, and the pressure of manufacturers and private enterprises to acquire or erect factories and buy premises is very great, the acquisition or erection of such buildings through the ordinary operations of board of works and treasury methods is slow. When negotiations are commenced for the purchase of a suitable factory, evidence showed that it was often snapped up by a private purchaser while the papers were still circulating through the Government departments.

We consider the matter so urgent, and the irritation being caused by the delay to provide proper training accommodations so serious, that we recommend as an urgency matter and till, say, some 10,000 or 15,000 more places are provided, that the labor ministry be empowered to select proper buildings, and that full authority be given to an expert in land acquisition, known to and trusted by the Government, to negotiate and complete the transactions forthwith; provided, he were satisfied that the building was satisfactory and the price not unreasonable, and certified accordingly.

Mr. ROBSION. Have you read the amount of money the British Government appropriated?

Mr. LAMKIN. I have not, Mr. Robsion. As I said, we will have to get that information through the State Department, and we are trying to get it now.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you know how much they pay these soldiers?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; I will file that.

The CHAIRMAN. Our investigation has been somewhat interrupted by conflicting meetings of committees, which seems to be inevitable. The work of the Rules Committee is pretty important and, in order to always insure a quorum, they want the members there. I therefore will have to leave the committee now, and Judge Towner will preside; and you may go ahead, Mr. Lamkin, with your testimony. I want to make this statement because the persistent absence of members from the committee is deteriorating to the men who are testifying as well as to the committee, but it is the consequence of a conflict of work.

Mr. LAMKIN. The amount of pension, Mr. Chairman, payable to the disabled soldiers in England varies with the rank held in the service. The monthly pension of a single man totally disabled, calculated at the rate of exchange of $4.86, is as follows: A warrant officer, class 1, $63.26; noncommissioned officer, class 1, $56.23; noncommissioned officer, class 2, $52.72; noncommissioned officer, class 3, $49.21; noncommissioned officer, class 4, $45.69; private, class 5, $42.17.

When a man is in training in England he draws that money. While he is in training in the United States, if he is a single man, a private, or officer he draws $80. The English system gives $42.17 if he is a private and up to $63.26 if he is a warrant officer.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. What do you mean by a warrant officer?

Mr. LAMKIN. He is a regimental sergeant major or something of that type. You understand that in addition to the disabled training which is given in England certain training is given to minors and to officers.

I would like to submit a page from Reconstruction Problems No. 12 on the Resettlement of Officers.

Mr. TOWNER. You said "minors and officers," did you mean that?

Mr. LAMKIN. Minors, men who went into the service prior to the time they were 18 years of age. Let me give that straight. There is a training given to officers, and, as they call it, to men of "exceptional educational" promise. These local committees have authority to go out and pick men whom they regard as of exceptional educational promise and train them, as well as the officers, and I think this statement will throw some light on that attitude:

RESETTLEMENT OF OFFICERS.

I. Army.—In this pamphlet the term "officer" will be employed throughout in wider than the purely technical sense. It will apply in principle equally to the commissioned ranks of the army and air forces and to "other ranks" of similar educational qualifications (other than those remaining in the service who can obtain all the information they need through their adjutant and from such books as the Pay Warrant, Kings Regulations, etc.). It will apply also in many cases in a secondary degree to civilians of like qualifications for the authorities are approaching the problem in a broad spirit, envisaging it as an affair of the State as well as the nobility.

In other words, England is making a distinction in the training she is giving the man between officers and the nobility, and the private and the person who are not of the nobility.

Mr. TOWNER. What arrangements are made for the support of their dependents?

Mr. LAMKIN. That is given in this statement here, Mr. Towner. A man with a wife in England gets $52.71, a wife and one child, $60.62; wife and two children, $68.53; wife and three children, $76.44.

Mr. TOWNER. Is the same proportion maintained with officers as with men?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; the same proportion is maintained with officers as with men. I will insert, if you would like to have me do so, a comparison between the pay to disabled soldiers in England and in the United States.

Mr. TOWNER. I think it would be very valuable.

Mr. LAMKIN. But I will revise this statement, if you think it well, because at the time this was made the value of the pound was $3.78, and I think we had better revise it on the basis of our usual conception of a pound as $4.86, had we not?

Mr. TOWNER. You might give the par value and then the present depreciated value.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think we had better make it par value, and I will submit this statement then with the par value of the pound and also the depreciated value.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; you might also give the depreciated value.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes; I will submit that later, if allowed.

Comparison between pensions paid in England and training pay in the United States at present and when the Darrow bill (H. R. 12266) becomes a law.

	England.		United States.
	Exchange at par, $4.86.	Exchange on May 6, 1920, $3.845.	Present rate.	Under Darrow bill.
Single man	$42.17	$33.31	$80.00	$100.00
Man with wife	52.71	41.64	115.00	135.00
Man with wife and 1 child	60.62	47.89	125.00	145.00
Man with wife and 2 children	68.53	54.14	132.50	152.50
Man with wife and 3 children	76.44	60.39	137.50	157.50
Widower with 1 child	52.71	41.64	105.00	125.00
Widower with 2 children	60.62	47.89	112.50	132.50
Widower with 3 children	68.53	54.14	120.00	140.00

Now, Mr. Chairman, something was said, in which I know you will be interested, as to whether or not this work is carried on in England by purely voluntary assistance.

On February 1, 1920, the total permanent and temporary staff (male and female) of the post office, pensions ministry, labor ministry, inland revenue, munitions ministry, admiralty, customs and excise, war office, board of trade, food ministry, ministry of agriculture and fisheries, air ministry, and other departments (which include 90 per cent of the Government staffs) was as follows:

Total employees	383,183
Ex-service:
Disabled	32,708
Others	83,762
Total ex-service	[1] 116,470

On February 1, 1920, the staff of the pensions ministry was as follows:

Total	21,643
Ex-service:
Disabled	2,530
Others	4,456
Total ex-service	[2] 6,986

Now, you must remember that the pensions ministry does the work which is being done by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the Public Health Service, the Pension Bureau, and the Federal Board for Vocational Education in this country, and I think the total employees in these four departments will be around 18,000 in the United States.

Mr. TOWNER. Is there any way of ascertaining to what extent these allowances and this personnel are supplemented from private sources?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir; I do not know of any way in which we can ascertain that. You can not ascertain that in America. The men who are in training get favors and discounts and contributions and things of that kind from societies all over America. Sometimes it is wise and sometimes it is not wise, and I know of no way by which we can find out the supplementary allowances in England.

Mr. TOWNER. Is it assumed now that the work of rehabilitation of the soldiers in England is a governmental function?

[1] Or 30 per cent.

[2] Or 32 per cent.

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. That is hardly so in France.

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir; that is hardly true in France, but it is in England. The length of course, of course, is nothing like as long as in the United States. It is about eight months, I think, in England. They give a few of the longer courses.

As far as the Canadian establishment is concerned, I will submit certified copies of the Canadian report under date of March 31, 1920.

Mr. TOWNER. It appears, as you have it in your hand, to be quite extensive.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think we had better just file this, if you will, Mr. Chairman, and I will read the significant figures from it.

Mr. TOWNER. Perhaps that will do. I think we ought to have the figures in the record, but I thought perhaps you might eliminate those that were not particularly material.

Mr. LAMKIN. There are two kinds of training, as you understand, in Canada; one is for the minors under 18 years of age whose schooling was interrupted by their service and whose schooling is continued after they return. The Canadian system provides that these men shall be put in training in the several Provinces and reported to Ottawa. The action of the Province is approved until it is disapproved by their central office—Ottawa. There are no refunds called for from the soldier in training. He is paid for the time he is in training, but when the action of the provincial office is disapproved, the man is immediately taken off the pay roll and dismissed from training. Of these minors, men under 18 years of age——

Mr. TOWNER. Does that mean, if you will pardon the interruption, those who enlisted under 18 years of age?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. And classed as enlisted minors?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. But whose age now, of course, is considerably above 18 years.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. That is what I understood.

Mr. LAMKIN. Recommendations received at Ottawa total 12,600; courses approved, 11,809; courses commenced, 10,824.

Now, the second class is compesed of their disabled men. Recommendations for training of disabled men, which corresponds with our rehabilitation work, received at Ottawa, 45,557; courses approved, 37,693; courses commenced, 33,845.

Mr. TOWNER. Would the number of 45,000 correspond to our registrations?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir; that would more nearly correspond to our 58,000 approved courses.

Mr. TOWNER. I thought there was a figure of 36,000——

Mr. LAMKIN. No; we have nothing that compares exactly with those two figures of 37,693 and 45,557. The district or Province in Canada makes the recommendation to Ottawa that these men's courses shall be approved.

Mr. ROBSION. That corresponds to the district office in the United States.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes; that means that the district office has recommended that 45,000 cases shall be approved.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. And 37,693 represents the number that the central office at Ottawa approved.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes. In this country we are approving, at least for a year, everything that the district office sends in. We are not turning down the district office on any of these approvals at this time, so that we have no figures to correspond to those two. The third figure which is given is the number of courses commenced, notified as commenced, 33,845. That corresponds to our 37,926 that come to this office as having been begun. There are a good many men in the country who have begun training but the notifications have not yet reached this office.

Mr. TOWNER. But it should be considered that the Canadians had only about 500,000 men in the service and also it should be considered that they had four more years of service than the American soldiers?

Mr. LAMKIN. I think it should be further considered, Mr. Chairman, that in the early part of the war the Canadians were thrown into some very diffcult situations and they lost very heavily, their casualty percentage was very high.

Mr. TOWNER. That is very true.

Mr. LAMKIN. And they actually began their work of rehabilitation approximately two years before America began her work or rehabilitation.

Mr. TOWNER. My recollection is the statement was made that 10,000 soldiers had been invalided, many of them sent back to Canada, before there was an rehabilitation?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; just as a large number of our men were discharged from the hospitals before we could reach them. I think we should remember, too, Mr. Chairman, that when we are figuring on our approval of courses, those who have been approved under section 2 training with pay, 58,000, and also should consider the 36,000 men approved under section 3, which makes 94,000 men we have approved to correspond with the approval of 45,000 men in Canada.

A question which you are interested in, I know, is about the payments to men in training in Canada. A single man with no dependents in Canada, a man living away from home, gets $60 a month. The United States pays every man in training $80. They have two kinds of training, one is the kind that we call inside schools, and one outside schools. The inside schools are maintained by the Government in borrowed or rented buildings in which the teachers are employed by the soldiers' civil reestablishment. The equipment is supplied by the Government. The outside schools are the ordinary business colleges, universities, etc., and the third way in which men are trained is in industrial establishments. The 1st of March 36 per cent of the men were being trained in the inside or Government schools, 16 per cent in outside schools, and 46 per cent in industrial establishments.

Mr. ROBSION. You did not give what the married men get.

Mr. LAMKIN. I will file this whole table, if you care to have it, in the record. It is a short table. A married man with a wife in Canada in training gets $85 a month, and in the United States he gets $115 a month.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. But under the Darrow bill?

Mr. LAMKIN. Under the Darrow bill he gets $125.

Mr. ROBSION. $135.

Mr. LAMKIN. $135, excuse me: but he now gets $115 against $85 in Canada. A man with a wife and one child gets $95 in Canada and $125 in the United States.

Mr. ROBSION. In view of the Darrow bill becoming a law should you not give the comparisons with that?

Mr. TOWNER. At least give it as under the provisions of the proposed Darrow law; which, if it passes, will allow a comparison to be made all along the line.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Schedule of payments to men in training in Canada and in the United States as they are at present and as they will be when the Darrow bill (H. R. 12266) becomes a law.

Class of case.	Canada, to men living away from home.	United States, to all men in training.
		Present rate.	Rate under Darrow bill.
Single man, with no dependents	$60.00	$80.00	$100.00
Single man, with dependent parent	85.00	110.00	130.00
Single man, with dependent parent and 1 brother or sister	95.00	115.00	135.00

Mr. Parkinson wired us yesterday—Mr. Parkinson is the head of the soldiers' civil reestablishment in Canada—that to date they had appropriated for vocational retraining in Canada $22,500,000, and for other phases of the soldiers' reestablishment, $38,000,000, making a total of $60,500,000. You understand that it is very hard to segregate these appropriations because the one establishment in Canada maintains the Government schools, the teachers, the hospitals, the cost of treatment and training at the same time. For the next fiscal year ending March, 1921, the appropriation is for vocational retraining $13,500,000, and for other phases of the work $20,500,000.

making a total of $34,000,000. Canada is also limiting the time that the men have when they can take advantage of the provisions of the law. The old provision was that they must make application for training within three months from the 1st of September, 1919, or within three months from retirement and discharge from the naval or military forces, whichever was later. That has been revised, so that they now must make application within three months from the publication of an announcement by the department of soldiers' civil reestablishment or within three months from the 1st day of November, 1919, whichever is the earlier; provided they are still in the service, they may make application later. In other words, Canada is now getting ready to close this work.

We have been having some newspaper comment. I might say that the civil reestablishment department in Canada is not entirely free from some newspaper comment. The Toronto Globe, after its annual report of December, 1919, made the following comment:

No one will be disposed to disparage the work of the D. S. C. R. It is rendering an indispensable service, particularly in the refitting or training of returned soldiers for civil occupations according to their capabilities and aptitudes. But the department is greatly overmanned. It had at the end of the year in all branches 8,121 employees, a number surely disproportionate to the number of patients, especially as 11,223 of the latter were receiving their instruction in factories. It is no excuse for this topheavy state of affairs that 3,766 members of the staff served in France, and another 744 in England and Canada.

I am reading that, Mr. Chairman, to give you an idea as to the number of employees in Canada and the proportion of ex-service men.

Mr. Chairman, unless you have something else to ask, I should like to take up some of the testimony which has been presented to the committee and discuss some of that briefly.

I think you are interested in the suggestions made by Mr. McMurtrie. As I read them, there were eight which he made. First, that there should be sufficient money appropriated. I stated yesterday that I agreed with him and that I had no doubt sufficient money would be appropriated. His second criticism was in regard to the organization. I believe that if Mr. McMurtrie had given attention to the present condition of the organization in America that he has given to the organization in other countries, he would not have made that criticism. He suggested that it be decentralized so that it would not be necessary to submit recommendations to Washington for action. That is the present practice.

H speaks of the fact that—

With delegation of authority should go grant of funds. Each local office should have a fund to meet immediate requirements, making expenditures, obtaining vouchers, and forwarding these to Washington with a complete accounting, so that the local fund could be reimbursed.

That, of course, will require legislation. That is not the way the Government of the United States spends its money. The American Red Cross does follow that practice, but, of course, the American Red Cross is not a governmental organization.

The third suggestion he made was in regard to the caliber of the personnel. I think we all agree.

Digitized by Google

The fourth suggestion was as to the method of work, that we needed the personal touch, rather than letter writing. I think we will agree.

The fifth suggestion was in regard to special schools being established, and is a question on which there may be very reasonable ground for disagreement. It is a question of whether or not this country wants to use existing educational facilities or to establish special schools at the cost of millions of dollars for the training of disabled men; in other words, for a work that will last at the best for three or four years. There have been special schools organized for this work, such as the one which was mentioned by Mr. Reid in his testimony the other day, the one at Pittsburgh organized by Mr. Boland, the Allegheny Vocational School, which we recognize as a temporary organization. He has leave of absence from the Pittsburgh school system to run it. It seems as though we were between two fires: if we do arrange for a special school we are criticized, and if we do not arrange for a special school we get criticized.

I think it would be well to have charge of the one at Fort McHenry as is presented to Congress in the Kahn bill, which has not yet been acted upon. I can understand the hesitancy that Members of Congress have in turning over property. The board prefers, I am sure, if an arrangement could be made with the War Department, to keep it and maintain control over it; I am sure that the board would welcome some solution that would not require them to maintain the administration of a school, because our job is big enough without having to go into the administrative details of a large educational institution.

We agree that in a great many cases the teachers in the schools have not become familiar with the problem of a handicapped man. As I stated yesterday, our problem is to train the faculties as well as to train the men.

The sixth suggestion which Mr. McMurtrie made was with regard to the field work, personal advice regarding plans for the future. I think we are agreed upon that. We are not in complete accord as to the length of the courses. Mr. McMurtrie's suggestion was that there should be very short intensive courses for the men. He says:

> It is a great mistake, for example, to have men take easy courses a couple of years in length, for they become lazy and get into the habit of depending on the Government for their support.

I think that is very true. We should take great pains to keep from pauperizing the men. While I think that we should require them to make satisfactory progress, on the other hand a man who is disabled as some of the boys who came before this committee, should not be crowded through a course too fast. There is another thing; that is, a large number of men have been out of school for a good many years and it takes some time for them to get settled back to their normal condition, settled back to their normal habits of study.

Mr. TOWNER. The practicability of intensive training would depend very largely upon the Government schools, because under the plan now followed when students are placed in existing schools they have to first do this in accord with the methods already in existence as to length of courses, studies, and so forth. I personally think the board is doing exactly the right thing. While there might be exceptions, as you state, I think that to attempt to build up for temporary purposes vocational and rehabilitation schools would be very unwise and would result in still further delays in taking care of the soldiers.

Mr. LAMKIN. We feel that.

Mr. Chairman, there is one other thing that I should like to bring to your attention, and that is this. There is no greater duty or responsibility on the board than that of fitting men back as quickly as possible into normal conditions. A man can go back into normal conditions a great deal better along with other men than he can segregated with a group of men all of whom were disabled. There should be some disabled men with him. It would be unwise to send a disabled man to a university where he could not keep in touch with others that had like experiences. I think it would be unwise to segregate him everywhere in special classes.

The eighth statement that he made was in regard to the effective program of public education of the people of the country regarding their attitude toward disabled men. We agree with him thoroughly.

I can not agree, however, with the statement, which can not be borne out by the facts, and which tends to create in the minds of the general public a distrust not of the Federal board but of the Government itself, anything to create in the minds of the disabled men a distrust for the Government. I can not believe that is the right kind of public education. I think the country is playing with fire when they allow it to be done.

In regard to the question of discourtesy in the New York office and other offices, I should like to just cite these pages from the record: Testimony of Mr. Lysons, page 305; Maj. Henderson, page 463; Mr. Wadsworth, page 523; Dr. Buckler, pages 639 to 649; Mr. Ives, page 692; Mr. Meyer, page 671; Mr. Noyes, page 718; and Mr. Reid, page 906.

I can not believe that all of those gentlemen were prejudiced in favor of the board. I think you will find that the employees of the New York office who testified spoke of the difficulty in the financial section only, but in other parts of the office they did not have the trouble. You will have to understand that the financial section of the New York office is dealing with the handling of the Elks' fund loan, with the Red Cross loan fund, and is charged with the collection, as far as possible, of this money. I have no doubt that sometimes the chief clerk of the office has spoken quickly to some of those men who have tried his patience. I think, however, that there is no man in the New York office who has more friends among the boys that know him than the chief clerk. The fact is, I think that Mr. Meyer, Mr. Noyes, and Mr. Ives have probably gotten in contact with men who had difficulty, a few men, rather than with the many who had satisfactory arrangements with the chief clerk's section.

In regard to Mrs. Jacobs's testimony, I do not propose, unless you require me, to be drawn into any controversy with Mrs. Jacobs or any one else. Her letter, in which she referred to three men, was written in October. It was filed with the American Legion investigator, Mr. John A. Wilbur, before the meeting of the American Legion in Minneapolis in November. She mentioned on the witness stand here three men, as I recall. She named a Mr. Ward. I think she meant Mr. Ford. There was a Mr. Ward in the office as executive manager of the office up to the 1st of July. He resigned to accept a position paying him $6,000. Mr. Ford—I asked Dr. Fess to subpœna him. I am informed that he is not in condition to be called before this committee. He is a disabled soldier. He has been in the service of the board. He has had to take sick leave several times on account of his disability. The last time I saw him he was in a very poor physical condition.

The other two people to whom Mrs. Jacobs referred, Mr. Wertz, I think it is Wirt, he is no longer in the service of the board. The third person is Mr. Whitney. Mr. Noyes was asked and Mr. Noyes said that he was high tempered and possibly said some things he wished he had not said. He has not been for several months in the advisement section of the New York office. He is doing a valuable piece of work with the people in planning courses for the men in training. As soon as I heard of the letter of Mrs. Jacobs in October I took it immediately to Mr. Farwell and asked him whether or not there was anyone in the office who had been discourteous to the boys. He told me that there never had been any complaint except about two men, and one of those was at fault and was separated from the service, and the other man was not at fault, but in order that the seeming discourtesy might not appear again he was given other work which did not bring him in contact with the men at all. I think that man his since resigned from the service. I know that the first man was not retained. As I stated yesterday, I think every district vocational officer will not need any prodding from the central office. If there is any man who is not in sympathy with the men, I mean sympathy like you mean it, if he is not trying to get into the heart of the problems of these men he will be separated from the service as quickly as it is known. On the other hand, we must understand, as Kipling puts it, the Army life does not make "plaster saints" out of the boys; they are just a cross-section of the American people, and there are some of them who are trying, a very small percentage, who are trying to get what they can from the Government and to appear in training without actually doing the training work.

Maj. Henderson made some suggestions in regard to cooperation with the Army with which we agree, in regard to sending out literature in sufficient quantities. That is a question of administration. We want to send out literature in sufficient quantities, although the work is fairly well known. You understand the conditions of the printing problem in this country and the effort that is being made on the part of the Government to reduce printing costs. Maj. Henderson also suggested, and I think also others have suggested, that a man with 10 per cent disability should be given training; he suggested the establishment of certain Government schools, commented on low salaries, and that there should be a coordination of the three departments dealing with disabled men.

Mr. Wadsworth's testimony is very similar to that of Maj. Henderson's and of Mr. McMurtrie's as to constructive suggestions. Mr. Wadsworth, I want you to remember, was not in the New York office after the 1st of October and the question of procedure since that time was not discussed by him. The criticisms which he made on the procedure were based, as he said, on his knowledge of what was done prior to his resignation from the service.

There is one question which I should like for you gentlemen to understand and that is in regard to the statement that we "tickled" the mental cases and tuberculosis cases for 90 days. Our official letter of instructions on December 11 reads as follows:

Digitized by Google

It is the opinion of this office that the case folder of each man discharged from the Army with tuberculosis should show an examination made by an expert on tuberculosis and that the policy in regard to each individual case should be based on the result of that examination. For instance, if the examination shows that the man is an advanced active case and there is no possibility of arrest in the period of six months, that case should be tickled for six months. If, on the other hand, a man has practically recovered, his case should be tickled for one month. In every case, while the man is in the hospital, an effort should be made to obtain a certified copy of his discharge and proof of the relation of his disability to the military service in order that his case may be complete and final action taken as soon as the disease is apparently arrested. Instruction No. 20 governs in dealing with all tuberculosis cases. It is suggested that you immediately take steps to procure the necessary specialist's report on all cases in your files. Reports older than 30 days should not be accepted as evidence of the present condition of a tuberculosis case.

That is following the suggestion made by the National Anti-Tuberculosis Association.

In dealing with mental cases a very similar policy should govern. It is, of course, impossible to reach any decision on a mental case unless a psychiatric examination is on file. On the basis of this examination it should be possible to tell at the present time whether or not the man is in need of training to overcome the handicap of his disability. If the man is not in need of training the case should be stopped right then and there and no further action taken. If, however, the man is in need of training, and training at the present time is not feasible, the case should be tickled ahead until such time as training probably will be feasible. The length of the tickle must be dictated again by the psychiatric examination.

The cases in your files which the eligibility squad marked as "Sick 90" should be tickled for the date of probable recovery as shown by the complete medical examination.

A few cases in your files were labeled "d 90," meaning "not yet discharged." A letter should be obtained from these men stating the probable date of their discharge and the case tickled ahead for that date. In the meantime every effort should be used to complete this case prior to the man's discharge, so that he may enter training the day he is discharged if he so desires.

I do not know what your experience has been with banks, but if I have a note they tickle it ahead for the date that it is due and make me pay it when it is due. That is the procedure followed in the districts, to tickle the case ahead of the time that the man will probably be ready for attention, instead of letting them go. I think there is an instruction on that matter. Instructions No. 28, dated the 25th of September, read as follows:

There are certain classes of cases on which some of the District Vocational Officers have requested authority to close, which in the judgment of the central office it is better to tickle ahead in the files for a period, say, of 90 days, at which time, if there has been no change in the man's condition, they can be again advanced. These cases include dementia precox, epilepsy, and some cases of paralysis. It is the judgment of central office that while training for men suffering from such disabilities is not feasible at the time they are under such consideration, still, it is better to tickle the cases ahead than to consider them closed, thus losing sight of these men altogether.

There are also some cases of major disabilities, such as loss of limb, who have indicated that for the present they do not desire training; nevertheless it is more or less obvious that they will require some training probably in the very near future, hence their cases should not be closed, but tickled ahead. It must be remembered, too, that any case which is considered closed may be reopened at any time by the man or by a District Vocational Officer.

That was sent on the 25th of September and shows that the tickling ahead was for the purpose of keeping the case alive and calling it to the attention of the officer rather than closing it or depriving the man of any of the privileges to which he might be entitled under the law.

You have called here, gentlemen, some employees of the board, Messers. Meyer, Noyes, Ives, and Reid. I think you will find that in some respects at least they were testifying concerning things about which they were not fully informed. I think the committee made no definite requirement that they should qualify as experts as knowing the things about which they were talking. I do not care to discuss the testimony of anyone except Mr. Reid, and I will discuss that after I take up the testimony of the soldiers, if you care for me to do so.

Mr. Chairman, I have here some information concerning each of the 14 soldiers whom you called to testify, and I want to go over those cases with the committee and file copies of the official records with you. Whether you want me to resume now or this afternoon is just for you.

I should like to have you understand that I am approaching this matter of the soldiers' testimony with no wish except to show the official records in the cases. I am not going to try to justify delays nor to excuse any lack of prompt attention.

The first soldier whom you called was Mr. Kalish. Mr. Kalish was surveyed on the 14th of April, 1919. On the 24th of May, 1919—these are certified copies of the records—the district was notified that he had not yet been awarded compensation, and awaiting compensation to be awarded. After the "divorce law" was passed on the 11th of July, the district was notified on July 18, seven days later, that he was not entitled to training under section 2.

On the 2d of August, Mr. Griffin, the district officer, wrote Mr. Kalish asking him to come in to the New York office and stating that he had received word from Washington on his case. On the 5th of August Mr. Kalish replied:

Kindly send me transportation return mail.

On the 8th of August transportation was sent him. We have no reason to believe that he was not told on the 8th of August when he reported that he was not entitled to training under section 2. From that time on his complaint has been that he was not in training with maintenance pay.

The discharge papers which are presented state that the disability is one-tenth at present for old job, less than one-tenth for new.

On the 5th of January, after an appeal was sent to this office, the district officer at New York was sent this letter:

This office has received a Med D on the case of the above-named man—

Med D is the form showing the medical examination.

Which has been referred to the chief medical officer who states as follows: "There is nothing to substantiate the examiner's opinion that this man can not return to his former occupation or that he has a major handicap. My rating is negligible.

Mr. ROBSION. Is that a doctor?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; that is a lieutenant colonel in the Public Health Service.

The case of Arthur P. Thomas. You saw the man's physical condition here. These letters are copies of the correspondence which we had with that man from the time we first got in contact with him until the present time. It shows that he asked for a course in the Columbia University in journalism, that it was approved, that the School of Journalism did not open until September and that he was sent to Elmira to the Meeker Business Institute until the Columbia University course was available. There was some delays as to Mr. Thomas's payments. The delays were caused by there being two Arthur Thomases, one Arthur D. Thomas and one Arthur P. Thomas. I have here a statement as to the dates on which money was paid to Arthur P. Thomas, the voucher number for most of them. That shows that he was paid down to the 1st day of March, 1920.

When the case was first drawn to my attention I referred all the folder to our chief medical officer here. You remember, it was stated that he did not receive medical attention.

Case Arthur P. Thomas, Troop C, Sixth Cavalry, Elmira, N. Y.

Per your request the medical status of Arthur P. Thomas, as shown by file No. 2-234, is submitted:

(a) Arthur P. Thomas, formerly Sixth Cavalry, United States Army, has a major permanent physical disability due to service.

(b) Action by the medical section, F. B. V. E., to have X-ray examination begun September 3, 1919, when request was made that D. V. O. District No. 2 have such examination made.

(c) October 29, 1919, another request was sent again, requesting an X-ray examination, calling attention to letter of September 3, 1919—

That is the Public Health Service.

(d) November 6, 1919, District No. 2 through their surgeon requested the Public Health Service to make X-ray examination.

(e) X-ray examination and report made by Dr. B. C. Darling, New York, November 19, 1919.

(f) January 2, 1920, Dr. W. C. McDonald refers man to Dr. Merriam for spinal brace—

Doctor McDonald is the officer in the New York office and Dr. Merriam is the district medical officer.

On account of the man "complaining of considerable pain."

(g) January 2, 1920, Thomas referred in person to Dr. F. C. Smith, United States Public Health Service for such appliances as is necessary for correction of condition.

(h) January 16, 1920, man referred in person to Dr. Smith for operation. Referred to Flower Hospital for operation January 19, 1920.

(i) District medical officer requested he be excused from training for one month for operation.

(2) This case, to say the least, is a very unusual one. The man according to the files has the following history briefly:

He suffered a compression fracture of the body of the second lumbar vertebra March, 1917, spent two years in military hospitals; two months in Post Graduate Hospital, New York, and six months at marine hospital, Buffalo; and three weeks marine hospital, Staten Island. Was operated, had bone inlay operation on spine, bone obtained from left tibia. Letter from man February 25 shows his discharged from marine hospital and convalescing. Letter from him March 17, 1919, states that he is in such physical condition he can begin training at the "earliest possible convenience."

3. There is nothing in the file to show that the man did not have the operation as soon as indicated. The man was in training and there is nothing to show that he was having symptoms until January 2, 1920, when he evidently was examined by Dr. McDonald. There was no scientific reason for subjecting the man to another operation on the X-ray findings without some definite subjective or objective symptoms, or both, for it is expected that many of these cases will have more or less symptoms, thus, a serious injury combined with the necessary operations. The X-ray findings of November 19, 1919, only indicate an old fracture of one vertebrâ with a bone inlay which has a "suggestion" of a break at the lower end. This examination was made to see just what the condition of the spine was after almost a year, which should be done in all cases. The files show that a brace was recommended when symptoms first began January 2, 1920. Then January 16, 1920, it was found that an operation was necessary. He was referred to the United States Public Health Service, who sent him to the hospital January 17 and he was operated on January 24, 1920.

The statement has been made that Mr. Lary made an appointment with him and did not keep it. Lary is the assistant district vocational officer in New York. I file his affidavit dated March 30. There is no question as to the veracity of Mr. Thomas—I am not questioning that in the least.

Mr. ROBSION. Give the substance of the affidavit.

Mr. LAMKIN. The substance of this affidavit is that Mr. Lary called at the hospital and was informed that Mr. Thomas's ward was under quarantine, and he could not visit him at that time. Mr. Thomas stated that he was down in the reception room. Mr. Lary's statement is that:

I had planned to call on Tuesday, March 16, but found it impossible to get away from the office. I called the hospital at 4.30, but Mr. Thomas was unable to come to the phone. I did call the next day, but was informed that the ward in which Mr. Thomas was stationed was quarantined, and it would be impossible for me to see him.

Whether or not Mr. Lary asked for the right ward or whether or not the hospital authorities gave him the correct information, I do not know. This is the affidavit of Mr. Lary.

Criticism has been made that Mr. Thomas was taken off the training pay roll. There is no intention, Mr. Chairman, of being niggardly in the question of sick leave for these men in training. After the Sweet bill was passed, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance gave a man $80 a month for total disability and, in addition, they gave him his hospitalization. The money comes from the same source as for the vocational education, viz, the United States Government. The difference is, he is under the control of the bureau during the time that he is in the hospital. He gets his hospitalization, which is his maintenance, in addition to the $80 a month, out of which he has to pay his maintenance; while under the Federal Board we are giving the boys the most liberal sick leave that is necessary or desirable. There is no intention to cut it off, but there is a desire not to let the boys remain out of school 30 days or 60 days and then come back and say, "I was sick," in order to be kept on the training pay roll. If he is sick he should be under the control of the bureau and cared for by it and paid by it.

Mr. Thomas was told down here, the last thing, that he could have any training as long as it was necessary to train him. After he testified here I had one or two talks with him, and I assured him that we expected to see him through and that he would remain on the pay roll of the bureau until he could go back to Columbia University.

and we agreed to give him a correspondence course, or anything of that kind which we thought he might need.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Lamkin, we can not finish another case, and the hearing will be adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

(Thereupon the committee took a recess until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee reassembled, pursuant to recess, after 2 o'clock p. m.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please come to order. You may resume your testimony, Mr. Lamkin.

Mr. LAMKIN. Before noon, Mr. Chairman, I was filing for the record some of the official records of the board concerning the 14 disabled men who testified here.

The third man who testified here, Mr. Chairman, was Mr. Lind, Theodore Lind. I think you will remember him as a man whose occupation before he went into service was a wood polisher and he received a disability which resulted in the reduction of hearing in one of his ears. The contact and survey of this man were made June 21, 1919, while the man was a patient at General Hospital 41. His disability record shows that it consists of chronic otitis media. His former occupation was a wood polisher in a tobacco pipe factory, salary given at $18 a week. He was engaged in that industry for eight months and had no other occupation. His occupational preference was given as stenographer and typewriter. His second preference was surveying. Under the man's preference it stated his deafness does not seem serious enough to prevent. The reason for preference is given as because the man does not wish to return to his old occupation.

The case was submitted to the central office on July 7, 1919. On August 22, 1919, the district office was notified that this man was not eligible for training under the provisions of section 2. That is another case in which these letters will show that the question was as to whether or not the man was entitled to section 2 or section 3 training. As I said once before in my testimony, I am not claiming that the board has always been right or that our decisions have been always right. They are a matter of judgment and any executive officer must act on what he considers the evidence to be worth which has been submitted. The medical examination which is given here which the doctor reports is that of a partial loss of hearing in the left ear. Patient gives history of having been gassed while in the service, and there was a discharge from the left ear and a loss of hearing in this ear. The doctor rates the disability as minor, signed by Spencer A. Kirkland, M. D., dated September 18, 1919. He has been offered training under the provisions of section 3. Dr. M. D. Edgerton surveyed him and states that he had a minor permanent handicap, with this statement:

When I first tested this man he claimed he could not hear very loud voice at 1 inch with left ear. When confronted with his record he finally repeated ordinary voice at 2 feet, with left ear. In my opinion the disability is due to service. It is permanent. The vocational handicap is minor. Training is feasible. Follow-up here is necessary.

This is indorsed by W. C. MacDonald, M. D.

Digitized by Google

The minor handicap was not regarded as entitling him to training with maintenance pay.

(Statements submitted for the record in reference to the case of Theodore Lind are as follows:)

JULY 28, 1919.

From: Chief, Division of Rehabilitation.
To: District Vocational Office No. 2, city of New York.
Subject: Lind, Theodore, private, Battery D, 319th Field Artillery.

1. Receipt is acknowledged of your surveys and recommendations for training to be furnished the above-named man. The evidence submitted has been very carefully reviewed by this office, but it is not possible to give an immediate decision, because of the incomplete evidence which has been submitted concerning the man's disability. In order to discover the exact nature of the disability for which this man was discharged from the service, a request has been made for extracts from the official records.

2. If you have in your possession a copy of Form 17 A. G. O., Form 135-3 A. G. O., Form 395-1 A. G. O., or Form M (Navy), or extracts from these documents, please submit the copy or extract to this office immediately.

3. If copies or extracts from the above-named official records are not in your possession, or if those records are not such as to furnish a basis for the opinion of your district medical officer in regard to the man's present physical condition, please submit a report on the proper medical blanks furnished by this office.

H. L. SMITH,
Chief, Division of Rehabilitation.

I certify this to be a true copy.

[SEAL.] MARYE E. LARKIN,
Notary Public.

My commission expires February 13, 1925.

AUGUST 22, 1919.

From: Chief, Division of Rehabilitation.
To: District vocational officer, district No. 2.
Re: Lind, Theodore, Private, Battery D, Three hundred and nineteenth Field Artillery.

DEAR SIR: Please refer to the case of the above-named man, about whom we wrote you on July 28.

The Army records state his disability as:

Report of board of medical officers: "Otitis media, chronic; supurative left ear. Soldier states that he had no ear trouble prior to enlistment. He has a history of having had occasional earache (left) from July 18, 1918, onward. The present condition, however, appears to have arisen suddenly December 28, 1918, while in hospital following operation for hemorrhoids. He stated that mastoid operation was done January 4, 1918, at Base Hospital No. 49. Admitted United States Army General Hospital No. 41, Staten Island, N. Y., June 2, 1919, with purulent discharge from left ear, which discharge at present is absent. He shows a small scar behind the left mastoid prominence, but no loss of bony substance. We are unable to determine the type of operation which was performed in this region. His hearing in right ear 20/20, left ear 40/20. Maximum improvement has been obtained. Ten per cent disabled. In line of duty, yes; degree of disability, 10 per cent, based on present condition."

In view of his disability, as stated on your surveys, medical board, together with the Army statement, it does not appear that the man has a section No. 2 case for training under the law, as he can return to his former occupation without any decrease in earning capacity due to disability.

Please reconsider, with a view to offering the man training under the provisions of section No. 3, provided he is awarded compensation by the bureau.

MEDICAL-VOCATIONAL EXAMINATION.

INSTRUCTIONS.

[In filling out this form use pen and ink or the typewrtier.]

1. Read carefully in connection with latest regulations. The original of this record will be filed in the central office and a copy kept in the district office.
2. The object of this examination is to show on one form, as far as possible, whether (a) the man is physically and functionally able to return to his former occupation;

Digitized by Google

whether (b) the man is physically and functionally able at this time to enter upon the training course; and (c) whether he can carry on in the occupation for which training is recommended, after the training is completed.

3. This form will be filled out by the district medical officer after an examination of the man or his records. The applicant may be ordered to the district office for vocational advisement if a medical report indicates a physical handicap to overcome which training appears to be necessary.

4. In all cases, if available, attach copies of service Forms M. (Navy), 17, 135–3, 395–1 (A. G.), and any B. W. R. I. forms.

5. Applicants presenting themselves at a district office will be examined there free of charge by the district medical officer or his assistants.

PART I.

1. (a) Name, Lind, Theodore.
   Age, 22 yrs.; race, white.
   (b) Rank, rating, or organization, pvt., Co. B, 319 Field Artillery. Principal duty in service, soldier.

   (e) Occupation suggested by vocational adviser, surveyor (mechanical).
   (f) Nature of training course, ———.
2. (A) Was the applicant treated for an illness or injury while in service for which he claimed no disability and which was not noted on discharge? No.
   (B) Does the applicant claim that he had an illness or injury while in service for which he was not treated in hospital or in dispensary? No.
   (C) Does the applicant claim that he was inducted into the service with a disability unnoted by the medical examiners? No.
   (D) Has the applicant developed any disability traceable to service since his discharge therefrom? No.
   (The following answers may apply to either A, B, C, or D, above:)
   (1) If so, how was this illness or injury incurred? ———.
   (2) Describe it fully and give name of hospital or dispensary in which he was treated and, if possible, dates of admission and discharge. ———.
   (3) Describe the relation, if any, it has to the present disability ———
   (4) In your judgment, is his statement credible? Yes. Is an affidavit advisable from the man concerning A, B, C, or D? No.
   (5) Was this present disability, in your opinion, incurred in, increased, or aggravated by reason of his service? State which: Incurred in.
3. Abstracts of specialists' examinations (when such examinations are necessary).

(To be filled out by the D. M. O. from reports by specialists or district office examinations; the original copies of the special examiners to be attached.)

4. The vocational-medical data.

(To be filled out by the D. M. O., in consultation when necessary with the vocational adviser or by other medical examiner, if the latter feels competent to answer any or all queries.

   (a) Is the candidate's physical condition, as the result of his disability, such that he can not realize his full capabilities in—
   His former occupation? Yes.
   The new occupation suggested? No.
   (b) Will the disability of the applicant handicap him in his competition with the normal worker in the occupation suggested? No. If so, state the manner in which his disability will be a handicap ———.
   Just what can he not do with the disabled part? Not do any work which necessitates keen hearing.
   (c) Will candidate's disability increase his liability to hazards in the occupation suggested? No.
   If so, state the hazards and the precautions to be observed. ———.
   (d) Will the candidate's condition demand any special consideration from his employer, such as shorter hours, periods of rest, light work, special type of work or machine, etc.? No.
   If so, what? ———.
5. Abstract or summary of all data by D. M. O. (Reconcile or decide on discrepancies and give personal opinion.)

DECEMBER, 22, 1919.

Mr. THEODORE LIND,
175 St. James Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: Your application for training through the Federal Board for Vocational Education has received careful consideration, and the decision has been made that your disability does not constitute a vocational handicap. We are, therefore, not permitted to offer you training under section 2 of the act, which carries $80 a month maintenance allowance.

We note, however, that you have applied to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance for compensation. In case this compensation is granted, you will be eligible for a course of training without compensation, as provided in section 3 of the act. That is, you may choose one of the following courses:

1. At any approved school "day course," with tuition and cost of books only.
2. A course in any approved evening school, with tuition and cost of books only.
3. Any approved correspondence course, with tuition and cost of books.

Please advise this office whether or not compensation has been granted you by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and also whether you desire to take advantage of any one of above-mentioned opportunities.

If you should have any additional evidence of your disability not yet submitted to this office which might constitute a claim for section 2 training, we shall be glad to consider it.

This office is open during usual business hours, 9 a. m. to 5 p. m., and also from 7 to 9 o'clock on Wednesday evenings.

Very truly yours,

S. E. FARWELL,
District Vocational Officer.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR FILLING OUT THIS REPORT.

1 to 4. To be filled out in the district office.
5. Give a brief military history of the claimant's disability, sufficient to connect his disability with his military service.
6. In recording the man's complaint, give symptoms as stated by him; do not give a diagnosis.
7. (a) In recording the results of a physical examination, do not give a diagnosis; give the physical signs as you find them.
(b) In cases of wounds give location of scars and also a description of the injury to the underlying structures with the resulting deformity, limitation of motion, or disturbed function.
(c) When the applicant complains of dyspnea on exertion as a sequela of gassing, heart disease, or bronchial asthma, note his pulse and respiration before, just after, and two minutes after exercise, which should consist of hopping 25 times on each foot.
(d) If, in addition to the disability due to service, the man has any other impairment, describe it fully, and state whether it is related in any way to his service.
8. Use the nomenclature of the United States Public Health Service.
18. A claimant is considered to have a major handicap when his disability would constitute a real handicap in his former occupation, such as to affect employability or earning power. A minor handicap involves some inconvenience but does not interfere in any real way with earning power or employability in the former occupation. A negligible handicap involves an inconvenience that can be disregarded in considering employability or earning power.

Digitized by Google

Men without a vocation, i. e., students, and those who have not worked at one occupation more than one year and are under 21 years of age, should have their handicap considered in light of the general labor market.

19. Training is feasible when the mental and physical conditions permit and when the suggested occupation is not incompatible with his disability.

Civilian physicians making this report at the request of the board will mail it directly to the district office of the Federal Board, using the inclosed envelope, which requires no postage. B. W. R. I. examiners will mail it to the district supervisor.

The Federal Board for Vocational Education will pay a fee for this report in the following cases:

(a) If the report is made by a civilian physician, at the board's request.

(b) If the report is made by a B. W. R. I. examiner who is employed on a fee basis.

Make out your bill in duplicate and attach both copies to this report.

(This form will be mimeographed at the district, using paper of same weight and color as Med. B. if available.)

MARCH 10, 1920.

Mr. THEODORE LIND,
175 St. James Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

DEAR MR. LIND: We suppose you have applied to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance for compensation. In case this compensation is granted, you will be eligible for a course of training under section 3 of the act; that is, you may choose one of the following courses:

(a) Any approved correspondence course
(b) Any approved evening school.
(c) Any approved course in day instruction.
(d) Any approved part-time instruction in any approved course.

If you are not financially able to accept training in an all-day course, you are urged to notify us to that effect, so that we may, if possible, assist in locating you in some suitable position which would be of such financial assistance that would enable you to accept training in an all-day course.

In taking one of these courses under section 3, our board will pay for your tuition, books, training equipment, and transportation only.

Should you decide that you can not accept training under section 3, will you please give us your reasons for refusing training? Under what conditions do you consider that section 3 training would be acceptable to you?

Please advise this office whether compensation has been granted you by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and also whether you desire to take advantage of any one of the above-mentioned opportunities.

Yours, very truly,

WILLIAM A. CLARK,
Acting District Vocational Officer.

I certify this to be a true copy.

The next man was Gilbert E. Wright. The pink sheet here [indicating] is a form of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, which shows that the man is drawing insurance at $57.50 a month and compensation of $100 per month, beginning May 17, 1919, which is approved on the 4th of September. The original award was made on the 23d of July, 1919. He was examined on the 20th of May. On the 4th of August a letter was addressed to the bureau by the board asking that the bureau arrange such treatment as the man might need. He was a man who had trouble with his heart. On August 6 there is a letter from the D. V. O. at New York to the supervisor of the after-care department of the American Red Cross, which, in reply to his letter, stated that the board had reached the conclusion that the general commercial course covering bookkeeping, correspondence, and general business practice would be a benefit to Mr. Wright. On August 7, 1919, the district office sent to this central office his recommendation. On August 21, 1919, it was approved by central office for a usual commercial course at the Merchants and Bankers School for a year. On August 25, Mr. Wright was notified of the approval of his course. On September 2, Mr. Wright wrote to the New York office stating he had begun a course in general commercial subjects at the Merchants and Bankers School on September 3, 1919. On September 30, Mr. Wright wrote to the New York office saying he did not desire to continue his training.

I do not desire a commercial course or any other form of training at this time, because of my physical condition. I find that I am unable to concentrate. I should like to reserve the right to have my case reopened should my physical condition become such as to enable me to resume training.

The complaint that Mr. Wright had was that he was not given training as a radio operator but that a man by the name of Bertsch who it was claimed had "100 per cent heart trouble" was given radio operating. I think you remember these circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the committee remembers.

Mr. LAMKIN. Here are the two photostatic copies of the two surveys of the cases of these two men. Mr. Wright at the time of enlistment was a fireman. His principal civil employment, he said, was a fireman. His other occupation was chaffeur. He also had been a clothing clerk for a month and a half, as I read it, and a police officer for a few months. His occupation while in military service was a chauffeur. His occupational preference is radio operator, reasons, "On account of his liking for things electrical and the course appealed to him." Second preference is marked commercial. This is signed by Mr. Wright. The course in the Merchants and Bankers School is recommended, and the American Red Cross writes on the 6th of August to Dr. Merriam, as follows:

AMERICAN RED CROSS, HOME SERVICE SECTION,
New York City, August 6, 1919.

Dr. MERRIAM,
Federal Board, New York City, N. Y.

MY DEAR DR. MERRIAM: The bearer of this letter, Gilbert Wright, is the man whom we have had two telephone conversations about concerning clerical employment.

This man says that he will get in touch with his friends who suggested an executive position to him, and report back to either you or me on this matter to-day or to-morrow.

In case you do not recall the case immediately, Mr. Wright is the one who has chronic heart trouble.

Thanking you particularly for your cooperation, and assistance in this case, we remain,

Very truly, yours,

JOHN D. WANSOR,

MEDICAL-VOCATIONAL EXAMINATION—FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION—DIVISION OF REHABILITATION.

INSTRUCTIONS.

The object of this examnation is to determine whether (a) the man is physically or mentally (or both) able to enter upon the training course and (b) whether the man can carry on in the occupation for which training is recommended, after the training is completed.

This record is for file in the central office in Washington; a copy will be kept in the district office. Paragraph 8, Form 502-3 may be disregarded.

This form must be carefully filled out. Complications and changes will be reported immediately by memorandum and entered on original and copy under "Progress" (par. 4 (q)), as soon as received.

Sections 1, 2, and 3 are to be filled out by district office before handing to district medical officer.

Sections 4 to 15 are to be filled out (1) by D. M. O. either by examination of the man and his records, or (2) by a special medical examiner who examines the man himself.

It is the duty of the D. V. O. to determine, with the advice of the D. M. O., whether the available medical reports are sufficient to enable the D. M. O. to make a medical-vocational diagnosis on the reverse of this form, or if a special medical examination of the man is necessary.

To: Mr. John D. Wansor, supervisor, after-care department, A. R. C., 353 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

Re: Gilbert Wright.

DEAR MR. WANSOR: Our Mr. Meyer, in our training department, has conferred with Mr. Gilbert Wright, and they have reached the conclusion that a general commercial course covering bookkeeping, credits, correspondence, and general business practice would be of benefit to Mr. Wright, as forming a basis upon which to build in seeking employment where his disability would not particularly hamper him. We will arrange to have this training course outlined so that he will, for the time being, have short hours of study each day.

2. We will notify him as soon as our Washington office has approved this course, so that he may start in training.

3. Thanking you for your interest in this man, we remain,

Very truly, yours,

DIGEST OF CASE AND RECOMMENDATION.

D. V. O. 2-15466. AUGUST 7, 1919.

1. Personal data. Wright, Gilbert, 604 Ninth Avenue, New York; age, 33; white; dependents, none.

2. Education. Seventh grade.

3. Occupation. Fireman, 8 months; fireman in railroad, 3 years; chauffeur, 5 years; clerk, 1½ years; police officer, 8 months.

4. Disability. Valvular heart disease (aortic insufficiency); tachycardia, 50 per cent (Med. B.); compensation claim filed May 22, 1919.

5. Occupational disability. This man's heart condition is such that he is absolutely prohibited from work which requires any physical strain or which might excite him in any way. He worked in the past at heavy manual labor, except for one and a half years when he worked as clerk and bookkeeper in the clothing line.

6. The course of training recommended. General commercial course to fit him to do advanced clerical work of a light nature; the course to be so arranged that for the first few months, at least, he will not continue over two or three hours a day at study.

7. The need for the course. Man has been doing general work but has never had any technical training. He can not do any of his former heavy work and before he can take work in which his disability will not be hindered, he needs the training outlined. Our medical advisor directs that this man be put under training for no more than two or three hours each day at the beginning.

8. Future placement. He can be placed at some light work in the clerical line after training.

9. Summary. To be trained at Merchants' and Bankers' Business School, New York, for one year.

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION,
Washington, August 21, 1919.

From: Chief, Division of Rehabilitation.
To: District vocational officer No. 2, New York City.
Subject: Wright, Gilbert, private, Seven hundred and fifth Motor Transport Company, 604 Ninth Avenue, New York City.

1. I am directed to state that the recommendation that this man be given a course in general commercial subjects at Merchants and Bankers' School is approved for a period of one year. At the end of this period if further training is deemed necessary or advisable, recommendation to that effect should be submitted.

2. You are authorized to place this man in training immediately, submitting Form 107-Rev. (2) within three days of the date the man enters upon his training course. Statements in regard to dependents should accompany Form 107-Rev. (2), if available. If statements in regard to dependents have not been executed at the time the man enters his training course, the same should be forwarded as soon thereafter as possible. If, for any reason, you are unable to enter this man in training within one month of the receipt of this approval, you should write this office, setting forth the reasons for the delay.

3. The authority to enter this man in training is given with the understanding that you have prima facie evidence showing that he has been discharged from the service of the United States under honorable conditions. We are endeavoring to establish the fact that this man was discharged under honorable conditions by means of a search of available records at the War or Navy Departments or the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. If we fail to establish this fact prior to the receipt of Form 107-Rev. (2), you will be promptly notified and will be asked to furnish a certified extract from this man's certificate of discharge for our files.

Here is the case of John S. Bertsch, who is the other man who has heart trouble. There is some difference in their heart disability, just what, the doctors know but I do not. At the time of enlistment he was an inspector of auto-motor parts for a part of a year. For two years he had been in the electrical construction power house with the General Electric Co. For two and a half years before that he had been with the Seneca Iron & Steel Corporation, and for half a year before that he had been with the Electric Construction Co., working on inside work. The occupation during his convalescence was wireless operating at Oswego Hospital. The occupational preference was radio training. The reasons had been, studying this in the hospital and also acting as operator in the service. The second preference is switchboard operator, etc.

The man was placed in training and was sent out not as a wireless operator on a ship but on a ship with a wireless operator. At the completion of his training, recommendation was made that he be given a land job.

The CHAIRMAN. In the case of Bertsch, his preparation was more adapted to following up radio work than in the case of Wright?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. It is very apparent.

Mr. LAMKIN. That was the reason why Bertsch was told "yes" and Wright was told "no."

The CHAIRMAN. They both suffer from the same disability?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes; a similar disability, but their industrial life was different. As I say, there was some difference in their disability. Just what it is, it takes a doctor to determine.

(The papers in the case of John S. Bertsch are as follows:)

Bertsch desires to be trained at Marconi Institute, New York City, or at some other school competent to give thorough training; is anxious to get into training as soon as discharged from Buffalo General Hospital, probably about July 20. This man ought to be trained and set to work at once, as he is becoming a chronic hospital boarder, but if started back to active life would become self-supporting, I believe.

T. C. KNIGHT, V. A.

The next man who testified was Dan Edwards. I said there is not a man who has come before the committee whose physical condition is as bad as Dan Edwards's physical condition is.

The CHAIRMAN. As I recall, he is drawing something like $157.

Mr. LAMKIN. No: he is drawing $128.75 now. This man was surveyed January 31, 1917, by Mr. U. G. Smith. He gives Waco, Tex., as his home address. One of the men whom I have asked you to call is this same U. G. Smith.

Digitized by Google

The CHAIRMAN. He is in the city?

Mr. LAMKIN. He is in the city. He has a boy overseas now in the "grave registration" service who was overseas during the entire war. He is a man 55 years old and you can tell he is about 55 because he is named "Ulysses Grant." This man was surveyed January 31, 1919. The survey shows that he was a barber five years prior to his enlistment in the Army. While convalescing in the hospital he took a commercial course. The preference given was concurred in by the advisor and later he was recommended for a business course at the Packard Commercial School in New York City, to prepare him for the occupation of an accountant. The New York office received a letter from him dated Bruceville, Tex., February 26, and of that I am filing a certified copy.

On March 13, 1919, he wired the New York office referring to his letter and asking for transportation with which to pay his fare to New York. The Dallas office wrote him on March 14 addressing the letter to Waco, Tex., shown in the survey to be the home address of the man, inquiring as to his health and requesting that he take up the matter of training with them. On March 15—the man had wired to them on the 13th—on March 15, the New York office wrote inclosing a copy of the telegram received from Edwards in which it was indicated that Edwards wanted to take a course in Columbia University and advising the Dallas office that in view of the man's education and his commercial experience that he should be advised to take a preparatory education in Texas which he could get there just as well as in New York. A certified copy is submitted. On March 15, 1919, the New York office wired to Edwards that his case had been transferred to Dallas and directing that he consult with the office there. The telegram sent by the New York office on the 15th was not delivered because the address was not known. The central office approved the commercial course for Edwards on April 4, 1919, by wire. In a letter of April 23, Mr. Griffin, the district vocational officer in New York, advised that in special cases the board was ready to assume extra expense for tutorial instruction, if necessary.

In a letter of May 7, 1919, the district officer in New York wrote to the Bureau of War Risk asking assistance in securing medical treatment for Edwards. The first intimation they had that the man's course in commercial subjects was not satisfactory to him was in a letter from the assistant to the director of the Columbia University, dated September 26, 1919, recommending that he be allowed to take the course in English and short-story writing at Columbia University. On October 1, 1919, he entered Columbia University for this course. The statement was made that Daniels was entitled to more money than the Government allowed him and he could not live on what he was getting. We got the Elks' Fund to give him an extra $20 a month. It also was stated that on account of his disability, which was a loss of sight of one eye and a loss of an arm and a loss of a leg, that he was entitled to permanent disability. Edwards came down here and I got our representative at the bureau to take a personal interest in the matter and put it up to the bureau. I was very much astounded when told that he had not lost a leg. I think probably he is suffering as great a disability because of a loss of a kneecap, and a careful reading of Mr. Edwards's testimony will show that his kneecap was broken or shot off and not his leg. This leaves his leg stiff. The bureau did rate him as permanently totally disabled and gave him $100 per month compensation. They not only did that, but he was carrying $5,000 of insurance, and my recollection is—I have not verified it, but my recollection is that we helped to get his insurance reinstated. Certainly we helped to bring the matter to the attention of the bureau, so that he was awarded the full payment on the basis of $5,000, which was $28.75. Here is a copy of a letter of Edwards dated February 26, 1919, addressed to Mr. U. G. Smith:

DEAR SIR: I being one of the discharged soldiers and after having a talking with you I arranged for you to send me transportation to come back to school at Columbia, and I am glad to say that I am ready as soon as you send it to me.

I was discharged the 17th of February and did not get enough pay to start me out and have the money to come back on, I am well proud to say, and very willing to start to school.

I am at my cousins just at present, and you can reach me at the above address. I had a nice talk with you and found that you would treat me nice as to that matter.

I spoke about you sending me the ticket to return on, and I am in a big hurry to return as I have not got any money to come only as soon as possible if you will do so.

My records were sent to you from Washington, D. C., and I sure do not want to miss the opportunity of your deal as you told me.

I will be here till your transportation reaches me. After thanking you for your nice way of taking my circumstances, I will close, hoping to get the ticket as soon as possible.

Very sincerely, yours,

PVT. DANIEL R. EDWARDS,
Discharged Soldier.

Here is his wire and the replies of the office. Here is the survey in which he states here that at the time of enlistment he was a barber, learning the trade of barber, and was training during convalescence for bookkeeping and typewriting and expressed a preference for a business course of salesmanship and a preference for business methods of selling.

The second survey which was made of him at Walter Reed Hospital, he was sent to the Walter Reed Hospital to be discharged. The original survey was made by U. G. Smith. His occupational preference is commercial course in bookkeeping, and the additional reason stated, has studied along that line. The comment made by Mr. Smith may be stated:

I first interviewed this young man several weeks ago on ferryboat returning from Ellis Island. He was to call the following day, but informs me that he was transferred to Walter Reed Hospital on that day. He is about to be discharged and as he desires to take training in this city and having met me he called at this office to be surveyed. He will inform vocational officer at Walter

Digitized by Google

Reed of this survey. When discharged he will inform us so that action can be taken regarding his training. This young man is bright, showing plainly that he has done considerable study at home. Would certainly be a misfit as a barber: will make a success in the commercial world and I have no doubt but what he will in a short time qualify as an accountant. As stated above he desires training in this city—has many desirable friends here and thinks that the training received here will be more thorough and efficient than he could receive in Texas.

Mr. ROBSION. He was the young man who complained because he did not get story writing and newspaper correspondence?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir. Here is a letter of September 26, 1919, reading as follows:

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY,
New York, N. Y., September 26, 1919.

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION,
New York, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN: I have to-day interviewed Mr. Daniel Edwards, who desires to study with us courses in English and short-story writing. After talking with him carefully and after having him interview the instructor in short-story writing, I find that the best plan which we can recommend is that Mr. Edwards continue his work in the Packer Collegiate Institute and take with us one course in short-story writing, coming on Monday afternoons at 3.10, and one course in English composition, planned especially for writers of short stories, coming on Monday and Thursday afternoons at 1.30 or 4.30. These will give Mr. Edwards the training in fiction writing which he desires, and which he has enough talent to profit by, and will at the same time allow him to continue his commercial studies elsewhere. If it is practical in view of the policy of the board to allow Mr. Edwards to continue in both institutions, I strongly advise such a procedure; but if it develops that Mr. Edwards's health is not able to stand the strain of such work, or if from your point of view you wish him to study in only one institution, I suggest, from what I know of his ability, that he be allowed to continue his English courses with us and drop the commercial subjects.

Sincerely, yours,

FRANK ALLEN PATTERSON,
Assistant to the Director.

MARYE E. LARKIN,
Notary Public.

My commission expires February 13, 1925.

That was the 26th of September, 1919, and on the 1st day of October, 1919, Mr. Edwards was given a course in short-story writing at Columbia University.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose you had permitted him to study at two colleges, would that have doubled the tuition?

Mr. LAMKIN. Probably it would have doubled the tuition. But these commercial schools, as you know, charge for "courses," and as far as Dan Edwards was concerned there was no question about the tuition or the rate of pay.

The CHAIRMAN. But was it the policy of the board to permit a boy to go to two institutions?

Mr. LAMKIN. If he could not get everything that he needed in one, he could go to two and get what he wanted.

The CHAIRMAN. In that case, would you pay the double tuition?

Mr. LAMKIN. Pay the tuition in the schools where he was, but, of course, they would have to follow the course in each one of the schools. For instance, if he entered a college or an institution that gave both courses, we would expect him to get all his training there.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no uniformity in tuition, anyway. In some universities it is more than in others.

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. There is no uniformity in tuition.

The CHAIRMAN. It strikes me that would be rather unusual to let a man study in two institutions, and it would double the expense to the board if he did. There ought to be a very good reason.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think so. He was refunded his transportation from Texas, but not all of it. The amount which was deducted was the amount that could not be paid under Government regulations.

The CHAIRMAN. He complained, I recall, now that you mention it, that he did not get it.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think it was $121, and he was paid $105; something like that. I think in the amounts allowed there was probably not enough for meals and lodging, and not enough for a man who is traveling in Edwards's condition. That is set forth by the Treasury regulations covering the expense that we could pay. We can not pay more than the regulations allow.

Mr. ROBSION. Does the Treasury require you to frame regulations on that?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; and to follow them until they are changed. The regulations provided that we could allow $1.50 lodging and 50 cents for a meal. That was a year ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me correct the figures. He says, I think I have stated, $131.30 on the vouchers, and I received $106.

Mr. LAMKIN. $25 difference. I do not remember just what it was. We paid him all that we could pay him under the Treasury regulations. I think originally the amount made out was what we allowed for a meal and for a lodging. The board fixed the amount allowed, and no more could be paid than this regulation which we had filed with the Treasury Department allowed. The amount may have been too small, but it was fixed and more could not be paid.

naturally, require the return of this case to us. However, the letter which he sent does not indicate a degree of education which would entitle him to admission to Columbia. He has only an eighth-grade education and has been a barber all of his commercial life. We would surely advise that he get more preparatory education before he attempts to enter Columbia University, which he could undoubtedly get at least as well in Texas as he could here.

Mr. DANIEL R. EDWARDS,
Care of T. R. Denard & Son, R. F. D. 1, Bruceville, Tex.

DEAR SIR: We are in receipt of a letter from our New York office with reference to your case, in which they inclosed your letter of February 26 and your telegram of March 13 which you sent them in regard to your return to New York City to take up a course at Columbia University.

After going over your case and letter from the New York office, we would say that your previous education would not permit your entrance into Columbia University. It would be necessary for you to take several years' training before this would be possible.

We note that the vocational adviser who interviewed you recommended that you be given a commercial course, including bookkeeping and typewriting. You, of course, understand that it is the policy of the Federal board to train men in the district nearest their home town. We therefore suggest that you take this training, as was recommended by the vocational adviser in New York, at some commercial school in Texas. This would avoid additional expense of transporting you back and forth to New York, and at the same time would give you the training necessary to fit you for this commercial work. If this arrangement is satisfactory to you, kindly write us indicating your willingness to take such training.

Also ask that you advise us if you have made application for compensation through the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. If not, we know it is necessary that you be awarded this compensation before final arrangements can be made for your course of training.

The next man that appeared was Mr. Pinckney C. Rollins.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the Botanic Garden man?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes. His chief complaint, I understand, was that his training was delayed from July 5 to January, 1920. He was certified on June 18. He gave his occupational preference as landscape architect. Occupation at time of enlistment was telephone and telegraph lineman, which he had followed for several years, and the first medical examination in the field was November 10, in which they made a report—major permanent disability. The following notation appears on his medical examination:

The claimant is the picture of health. Disability from findings of clinical record.

That is by Dr. J. Burr Piggott.

On September 5, 1919, there is a letter to Mr. Rollins asking him to call at the Washington office for a conference. On September 9 the Baltimore office asked the Washington office again to have Mr. Rollins call at this office. On the 13th they wrote Mr. Rollins, asking him to call. On the 15th they wrote to the central office here asking us to send a copy of his medical record.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. Did he receive the letter?

Mr. LAMKIN. They were not returned, Mr. Robsion; that is the only reply I can make. The Baltimore office on October 18 wrote to the branch office here asking for Mr. Rollins's record. On October 24 the Washington branch office wrote to Mr. Rollins stating that they had a copy of his Army medical report, stating that he had 30 per cent disability, and—

Will you please give this matter your earliest attention and communicate, in order to get physical examination?

They replied also on that date to the Baltimore office, stating that they had their letter and had written him on the 13th of September and again on the 24th of October. On the 12th of November they wrote the Baltimore office again stating: "This is one of our old cases of 'major, permanent disability,' and the man has not shown up." On November 13 the Baltimore office again notified their training section that the man's permanent disability was chronic nephritis. Here is a copy from the War Risk file. Here is a copy of the approval of his training. On December 1 the Baltimore office wired the New York office, asking if Cornell University would accept Rollins for a course in landscape architecture. On December 2 they notified him that a year's training at Cornell was approved. On the 2d Farwell, D. V. O. at New York, wired the Baltimore office that the sourse of landslape architecture at Cornell did not begin until the second semester, commencing February 14.

The Baltimore office then notified Mr. Rollins that he could not be admitted until February 14, and asked him to submit whatever entrance credits he might have. On December 6, 1919, the Washington office here notified the Baltimore office Mr. Rollins desired to have the course at the New York Botanical Gardens, which was a briefer course, and one that he would be more able to finish than that given at Cornell. On December 9 the Baltimore office asked the New York office if we could put him in the Botanical Gardens. On the 20th, 1919, they advised Rollins to report to the New York office, and on the 5th of January, 1920, to go into training.

Here is the notice of entering training, not of the 5th but of the 19th of January:

INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Use this form for persons placed in training under section 2 of the vocational-rehabilitation act only.
2. Seven copies of this form shall be prepared in every case by the district office, the original and five carbon copies—duly signed by the district officer—shall be forwarded to central office and the remaining carbon shall be retained in the district office for its file.
3. In the upper right-hand corner, in space indicated, shall be placed the district office and central office file numbers.
4. On date line should appear the date upon which form is signed by district vocational officer and forwarded to central office.
5. Line 1.—Insert in directory style name of person commencing training, viz, surname, first name in full, middle name in full. Example: "Smith, John James."
6. Line 2.—Insert Army or Navy rank or rating, military organization, and Army or Navy serial number of person commencing training. Example: "Private, 5th Infantry, Co. L, No. 263785."
7. Line 3.—Insert name of dependents in directory style, followed by the relationship to the person commencing training, and the date upon which form entitled "Affidavit covering dependents" was forwarded to central office. Example: "Smith, Mrs. John J.," "Wife," "July 18"; "Smith, Maude L.," "Daughter," "July 18." In cases where the person commencing training has no dependents, the word "none" should be inserted in this space. In cases where he has dependents, and form entitled "Affidavit covering dependents" is submitted with this notice, the word "Attached" should be written in the third column. Where statement is not attached or has not been previously submitted, the word "To be submitted later" should be written in the column referred to.
8. Line 4.—State distinctly the character of course, using terminology employed by central office in approving course. Cases placed in training for courses including English and "try-out" courses in other lines must be accurately described. Date of letter from central office approving course must be inserted in space indicated. When cases are placed in training prior to central-office approval, insert the phrase "Prior to approval" in space.
9. Line 5.—Insert the name and address of institution, firm, or organization at which the training is being given, followed by "Inst.," "Job," "Correspondence," "Private tutor," etc., describing method of training. Example: "Miller's Business College, Washington, D. C.," "Inst.," "Remington Typewriter Co., Ilion, N. Y.," "Job." In cases of placement training, word "Job" must be followed by amount of monthly pay to be paid by employer.
10. Line 6.—Insert date upon which training is commenced and period of training approved by central office. Do not abbreviate. Example: "14th," "September," "1919," "Six months."
11. Line 7.—Insert date of termination of course. Do not abbreviate. The practice of allowing thirty days' probationary employment as part of the period of training has been discontinued. Courses terminate upon expiration of period approved by central office in all cases. If further training is necessary, the case should be taken up with central office for extension of course.

12. Line 8.—Insert monthly payments as prescribed by the vocational-rehabilitation act, as amended July 11, 1919. In cases where dependency is claimed and affidavit has not been previously forwarded and is not attached to this form, the amount shown must be $80.

13. Line 9.—Insert cost of carrying training to completion, itemized as indicated. Under the law the board is prohibited from incurring obligations in excess of its appropriation, and district officers are therefore admonished to exercise extreme care in furnishing this information.

14. This form must be signed in the space indicated by the district vocational officer, and must be transmitted to central office within three days after the commencement of course. Any subsequent change in status of case as reported hereon, including items of cost, must be reported promptly to central office on Form 107-A.

It was my understanding that Rollins was employed in Washington in the Treasury Department during that time.

This is a good occasion to remind you that the cause of the delays on cases arising from that office are due to the fact that you do not send us the papers completely and we have to waste time writing for them. When a man comes to the office and is surveyed please ask all the men concerned to see to it that a correct copy of his discharge accompanies his survey and his medical report. Do not send Forms 525 nor 535, but make a true copy of the discharge on blank white paper if you have no official forms of Adjutant General's Office discharges.

Then it is necessary where the discharge is not an S. C. D. for us to have Form 213 from The Adjutant General's Department before we can pass on the case. This is necessary because we must have that to show that the disability was connected with some way in the service and man's discharge often does not show that.

Re: Rollins, Pinkney C., 613 F Street NW., Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have your letter of October 18 asking for an answer to your letter of September 9, which wants a recent medical examination and a training recommendation. We understand that the man desires landscape gardening and drafting. We have written him on September 13 and again on the present date to come in for this examination. As soon as he does so we will give you a complete report.

Yours, very truly,

F. M. PHILLIPS.

Re: Rollins, Pinkney C.

This case has been adjudged a major No. 1, special No. 1, entitled to section 2 training.

The man's disability, chronic nephritis, demands that he receive practically a sedentary occupation. His previous occupation of lineman for nine years will therefore be out of the question for the future.

Prior to following this previous occupation he had an opportunity to take up landscape gardening, which work appeals to him. We will therefore endeavor to capitalize the only other background in the man's experience and recommend that he be trained for the sedentary occupation of landscape architecture, being given the necessary course at an approved school.

1. I am directed to state that the recommendation that this man be given a course in landscape art at Cornell University is approved for a period of one year plus the additional number of days necessary to insure the termination of this course on the 15th, or end of the month, depending on the date first occurring. At the end of this period if further training is deemed necessary or advisable, recommendation to that effect should be submitted.

2. You are authorized to place this man in training immediately, submitting Form 107–Rev. (2) within three days of the date the man enters upon his training course. Statements in regard to dependents should accompany Form 107–Rev. (2), if available. If statements in regard to dependents have not been executed at the time the man enters his training course, the same should be forwarded as soon thereafter as possible. If, for any reason, you are unable to enter this man in training within one month of the receipt of this approval, you should write this office, setting forth the reasons for the delay.

Mr. PINKNEY E. ROLLINS,
613 F Street NW., Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We wish to inform you that a one-year course in landscape architecture at Cornell University has been approved for you.

A single man, without dependents, receives $80 per month training pay from the Federal board for living expenses while in training. All costs of tuition, books, supplies, and transportation to the school and for the return on completion of course will also be paid by the Federal board.

Before we are authorized to enter you in training, it will be necessary for you to furnish this office with two certified copies of your certificate of discharge.

We have taken up the matter with district office No. 2, as to whether Cornell can accept you at this time for the above course, and as soon as we hear from that office we will advise you further.

Very truly, yours,

W. H. MAGEE.

DEAR SIR: Attached hereto are two copies of discharge of Mr. Rollins. The man called at the office to-day bringing with him the two letters sent from your office in Baltimore, one requesting the attached papers and the other stating that his course had been approved for landscape architecture at Cornell University.

Mr. Rollins desires to have this course at the New York Botanical Gardens, which is a briefer course and one which he will be more able to finish than that given at Cornell. If possible, kindly change this course for him at once, so that this man may be entered in training by January 1 without fail.

This man has been in this office constantly since the middle of the summer and delays have occurred again and again in his case, which we have been unable to help. An early reply will be appreciated.

Now, I think you will want to know something about the statement about the Bronx Botanical Gardens, will you not?

The CHAIRMAN. Before you go to that, Mr. Lamkin, I am impressed in the case of Rollings that there was an immense amount of expense in finally locating him and getting him entered. The number of letters that you have in that case is quite unusual.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; I think it is. Here is the thing about that that I want you to remember, about these Washington cases. The district office is in Baltimore and has definite control over Washington. We have a branch office here at 1410 Pennsylvania Avenue that handles the cases in this vicinity, and the number of letters that passed between the Baltimore office and the branch office were as a result of the system. They had a man with a major disability from whom they could get no reply, and the branch office had not acted; consequently the Baltimore office kept coming back at the branch office, "Why don't you get in touch with this man? Why don't you get in touch with this man?" The branch office kept writing out to Rollings and we have no record of his calling at the branch office as requested.

The CHAIRMAN. That was due to the defective organization, was it not, that the branch office was not close enough to the district office?

Mr. LAMKIN. Well, the district office would write to the branch office to get in touch with the men, and not having a reply on it I don't know what else they could do except to follow him up.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you recall what lapse of time in that Rollings case there was?

Mr. LAMKIN. From the time he was first surveyed until he went into training? The man was first surveyed on the 18th of June. The first dated medical information in the file is the 10th of November; the first letter that we have is the 5th of September from the district office in Baltimore to Mr. Rollings, asking him to call at the Washington office for a conference, requesting immediate attention. It took them from the 5th of September until the 10th of November to get him to come into the district office in Washington.

Mr. TOWNER. Right there, Mr. Lamkin—now, in the meantime, was Mr. Rollings in the service of the Government, in the Treasury Department?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; he was employed in the Treasury Department, it seems.

The CHAIRMAN. It might have been his own fault.

Mr. LAMKIN. It might be. I want it understood I am not excusing all these delays; I am giving reason for them.

Digitized by Google

The CHAIRMAN. It appears to me that in this case there was delay.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think there was. I think it was partly his fault.

Mr. TOWNER. If there was no answer to the letters and none of the letters were returned, that would indicate, of course, that he had received these letters and did not care to appear.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. In response to them?

Mr. LAMKIN. The letters were not returned; they are all sent out with our return address in the corner and the man was in the Treasury Department.

Mr. TOWNER. Is there anything in the record at all to indicate that the branch office here in Washington had any knowledge that he was in the Treasury Department?

Mr. LAMKIN. I do not find it. I thought once I would submit all these folders for the record, but if I should you would not read them.

Mr. TOWNER. No; they would uselessly encumber the record.

Mr. LAMKIN. I do not want to do that.

Mr. TOWNER. I was thinking this: What do you say with regard to this proposition? Of course the branch office in Baltimore had his address; did the address itself indicate that he was—well, the address itself would of course indicate that he was in Washington?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Would it not have been possible for the branch office here to have called upon him or made inquiries at his home address?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; they could have done that.

Mr. TOWNER. You do not know whether his address itself contained the information that he was working in the Treasury Department? In other words, his address might have been the place where he was bording, or it might have been the place where he was working.

Mr. LAMKIN. His office address?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. LAMKIN. There is nothing we have to show that.

Mr. TOWNER. Have you got a copy of the letter that was sent to him from the branch office at Baltimore?

Mr. LAMKIN. I had it and the stenographer took it away with him. It is in the record.

Mr. TOWNER. You do not remember what the address was?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir; I do not remember what the address was.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you gotten the case of Ben Dunstall?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; I have it here.

The CHAIRMAN. You can proceed in your regular order if you prefer to.

Mr. LAMKIN. I thought I would discuss this Bronx Botanical Garden first. Mr. Rollings spoke of that.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. That was called the "dumping ground" of the board up in the New York office.

Mr. LAMKIN. As I understand, the man in charge of the Bronx Botanical Gardens stated that he could place 200 men at as good salaries, some of them, as $3,000 a year after they had been trained at the Bronx Botanical Gardens. He said he could place men either as ordinary gardeners or those who showed ability could become landscape gardeners. Instead of it being a dumping ground it was what we call a receiving school or receiving station for that type of men that needed some kind of outdoor work to try them out, to see what they could do; and a number of men were sent to the Bronx Botanical Gardens.

Digitized by Google

There were 36 men, on the 30th of April, 1920, who are in training at the Bronx Botanical Gardens. There are four men, according to Mr. Boynton's report—Mr. Boynton is the supervisor of gardening instruction at the Bronx Botanical Gardens:

There are four men who are dissatisfied with their training: Anthony Carrone, whom I have an opportunity for at the Broadacre Stock Farms, the man to start Monday morning—

This is the report made to me by Mr. Pyle, our coordinator out there—

Thomas Abbott, whose condition of health is such as to render this line of work too heavy for him; Arthur Wagner and William Welsinger, who, while doing good work, are in a condition of health which does not permit that line of training.

He recommended that these men be called in for medical examination to see what they could do, what their physical condition would enable them to do, not to be taken out of training, but to be advised for some other course.

At the time Rollings made his statement to the committee, Charles Graham, Joseph B. Jones, and Albert Nembach wished to take training in tree surgery. Opportunities for these men were secured of Mr. H. E. Western, at Scarboro, N. Y. Nembach never started to work, claiming it was too hard. Jones worked one day, fell out of a tree, and quit. Graham stayed one week.

Sebastian Bacchio wished training in photography, and we have the opportunity for him in that.

Henry McAllester wished commercial greenhouse work. He is now in training with C. A. Kinney, One hundred and eighty-ninth Street, New York.

Ben Geebler wished training in auto mechanics, and has been transferred to the Y. M. C. A. school.

Edward Downey, Louis Nappy, and Hy O'Neill wished training in poultry farming, which opportunity has been opened up for these men.

John M. Tanikawa, whom Rollings stated wished a commercial course, refused to take it after we had secured an opportunity for him with a large Japanese importing house.

Mr. ROBSION. Were those men all taken from the Bronx Botanic Gardens?

Mr. LAMKIN. These are men who were in the Bronx Botanic Gardens at the time Rollings testified.

Mr. ROBSION. When were those changes made?

Mr. LAMKIN. This is dated the 28th of April. I think I can locate the dates of each one of these changes.

Mr. ROBSION. What I was trying to get at is whether or not these changes were made since they quit the Bronx Botanic Gardens.

Mr. LAMKINS. I think most of them were, Mr. Robsion. I think also that the probability is that Rollings got this statement about the time that the boys told a coordinator, and that the coordinator was working on the case when Rollings made his testimony here.

Digitized by Google

William J. O'Brien, another man whom it was stated was dissatisfied, has been taken from the gardens three weeks prior to this report and placed with Lewis & Valentine, landscape gardeners.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Lamkin, just wait a moment. In connection with that I have a letter here dated April 3, 1920. [Reading:]

I, William J. O'Brien, would like to request what authority Mr. P. J. Rollings had when he testified that my course was unsatisfactory to me at the Botanical Gardens, New York City, when it is a fact that I was transferred from there six weeks ago, and am now in placement training, perfectly satisfied with the treatment I have had, and am now having from the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

I, therefore, wish the records corrected as far as the statement that I am now making concerns the testimony by Mr. Rollings.

[SEAL.] GRACE M. CHAMBERLAIN,
Notary Public.

New York County clerk No. 62; New York County register No. 2094; term expires March 30, 1922.

That is signed by William J. O'Brien and properly sworn to before a notary.

Mr. LAMKIN. Here are affidavits from seven men, Mr. Chairman—eight men, as follows:

We, the undersigned, students under the jurisdiction of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, at present in placement training at the New York Botanical Gardens, herewith wish to state that we are thoroughly satisfied with the training given us by the Federal board, and wish to lay particular emphasis on the fact that at all times we have received the best of treatment at the hands of Mr. Pyle, the officer in charge of the work at the gardens.

As far as the dumping ground is concerned, Mr. Chairman, the Bronx Botanical Gardens was not and never has been a dumping ground. It is a place for try-out courses for men in outdoor work.

The CHAIRMAN. From what you know about the work at the botanical gardens, has it been a success?

Mr. LAMKIN. I think it has. I think we have made mistakes in sending men out there, just like we made mistakes in sending men to other places. I think on the whole it has been a success.

The next soldier who testified was John O. Robinson.

The CHAIRMAN. He is the boy that volunteered. I think he came in from Baltimore.

Mr. LAMKIN. I will have to file it, Mr. Chairman. I don't see my notes on that.

The CHAIRMAN. He was suffering from deafness.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes. I have seen him later. I know he has been approved for training and is in training.

The CHAIRMAN. As I recall it he had been a teacher.

Mr. LAMKIN. He had been a teacher.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought he made a pretty good witness.

Mr. LAMKIN. There is a tendency among some people, Mr. Chairman, to think that a man with most any disability can continue as a teacher, which, of course, is not true. That is not the attitude of the board.

The CHAIRMAN. I have forgotten—was he asking for training which would continue him in his work, or something else?

Mr. LAMKIN. I think he wanted to get into farm work.

Mr. ROBSION. Into agriculture.

Mr. LAMKIN. And he was approved and is in Maryland State at the present time. But I will give you an abstract of that case. I thought I had it here.

Robinson, John Oscar,
Private, Machine Gun Company,
Seventy-second Infantry, Toddville, Md.:

This man has a major handicap, but apparently there was some confusion in central office as to whether or not his condition was incurred, increased, or aggravated by his military service. This confusion was probably due to the fact that he had two terms of enlistment. His first term of enlistment was from February, 1918, until April, 1918, having been found to be physically and mentally disqualified for military service, per Special Order 94, headquarters, Camp Meade, dated April 5, 1918. A letter from the Adjutant General dated January 7, 1920, states that the cause of the rejection of this man from the Army was psychoneurosis neurasthenis, not in line of duty.

Mr. Robinson was again ordered to report for military service on August 27, 1918, per order induction into military service of the United States, dated

Digitized by Google

August 20, 1918. On January 30, 1919, he was again discharged from military service "physically and mentally sound." This information is obtained from Form 213. The hospital records noted on the back of this form show that for two days he was confined to a hospital receiving treatment for influenza. There is no other hospital record.

Notification of award of compensation dated August 14, 1919, gives this man $4.50 compensation, stating that he was discharged from the military forces on April 5, 1918. Another notification of award dated March 29, 1920, states that award had been made upon a disability of 25 per cent from date of discharge. Same was approved January 26, 1920. The above shows that the Bureau of War Risk Insurance was also confused because of this man's two terms of enlistment.

Whether or not the board was influenced in giving its decision by the fact that Form 213 showed that he was physically and mentally sound at time of discharge, and that he was only sick two days while in the military service because of influenza, is a question of doubt. The district office is clearly of the opinion as expressed in their letter of January 27 that it was doubtful whether or not this man's disability was connected with the service. In central office letter of February 6 it is clearly shown that central office also had a doubt as to whether or not his condition of hearing was due to service.

It would appear after a careful review of all the evidence in central office folder that the case was a rather unusual one.

A memorandum found in the Baltimore folder signed by L. O. Cummings, supervisor of training for district No. 4, states that on April 20, 1920, this man indicated that he did not wish to take training at present, that he was not certain what kind of training he wanted to take, but that he desired to enter some course next fall.

Robinson, John Oscar,
Private, Machine Gun Company,
Seventy-second Infantry, Toddville, Md.:

This man was surveyed June 30, 1919. His former occupation was given as that of a teacher. He preferred a course in civil engineering, and the vocational adviser recommended this course, there being sufficient evidence to warrant such a recommendation.

June 15, 1919.—Man wrote branch office, then located at Baltimore, stating that he had trouble in getting his claim for compensation through.

June 16.—District acknowledged man's letter of June 15, stating that they would await further action on the man's part.

July 11.—Man was requested to call at district office.

September 13.—District received word from man that he had been awarded compensation.

September 19.—District requested up-to-date medical examination.

September 26.—Man requested to call at district office.

October 21.—Case was forwarded to central office for approval by standing committee of man's course in civil engineering.

October 31.—District notified that man was approved for section 3 training only.

November 10.—Case resubmitted central office with additional data for reconsideration.

November 19.—District again notified that man was not eligible for section 2 training.

November 21.—Man notified of the action of central office.

January 27, 1920.—District wrote branch office at Washington, D. C., stating that they had been unable to connect this man's disability with the service, requesting the District to obtain, if possible, further evidence to show that disability is due to service.

January 31.—Case again submitted to central office for decision.

February 6.—District again notified that this man was not eligible for section 2 training.

DEAR SIR: With reference to our conversation a few days ago, while in your office, in regards to my compensation claims, I have written the Bureau of War Risk Insurance again asking for a reexamination as to my physical condition.

If I do not hear from them by the last of this month, I will bring or mail my discharge papers to you. I am at present being treated by the camp surgeon and hope to get results for the better.

While I like my work here, it is of necessity temporary, and I can not go back to my profession and compete with the man that is in perfect physical condition. I explained my case to you, and I know without a doubt that there has been a

Mr. Robinson is not content with approval by central office for section 3 training in engineering and wishes to appeal his case. He intends to appear in person at central office Tuesday, November 11, with an affidavit to support his claim.

Mr. JOHN O. ROBINSON,
Toddville, Md.

DEAR SIR: This is to inform you that your case was again submitted to our central office for reconsideration, and we are now in receipt of telegram from that office stating that their approval for one year of a four-year course in civil engineering at Johns Hopkins University, under section 3 of the vocational rehabilitation act, remains unchanged.

If you satisfactorily complete this one year of training, there is every reason to believe that the standing committee of the Federal board will grant an approval for an extension of time beyond this period.

Digitized by Google

Section 3 training provides for all costs of tuition, books, and supplies necessary for the course, but does not provide for any allowance for subsistence purposes while undergoing such training.

We also wish to make mention of the fact that in no instance will the Federal board grant an approval for a longer period than one year, because further training is absolutely dependent upon the yearly appropriation made by Congress for this educational work.

Please inform this office by return mail if you are ready to begin this training in order that arrangements may be made for your early entrance in the above-named university.

Re: Robinson, John O., Toddville, Md.
Attention Mr. Phillips.

DEAR SIR: In reply to yours of January 26, inquiring as to the present status of the above-named man's case, permit us to state the case has again been before the medical section and it has been receiving some careful consideration.

We are still unable to see from the information at hand where this man incurred a serious vocational handicap while in the service. The question does not arise so much as to his present physical condition as it does from the fact that he was discharged, according to the records in the Adjutant General's Office, with no disability. There is one hospital record furnished us and that is an acute attack of influenza, in line of duty. This record shows he remained in the hospital two days, September 25 to September 27. Also, we wish to invite your attention to the fact that this man was discharged in January, 1919, and the first claim made for training was on June 30, when he was surveyed by Mr. Woodley.

Before we can further consider his application for section 2 training it will be necessary for this man to establish the fact that he received the disability, upon which he is basing his claim, while in the service of the United States. We doubt if an affidavit without any supporting evidence will be sufficient in this case as we already have an abstract of the records in the Adjutant General's Office, and in view of the further fact that there is no indication that this man was ever overseas, it is quite probable that all records are complete.

We do not wish to assume the attitude of obstructionist, but we must clearly establish the eligibility and you will readily see that there is a large element of doubt in this case with the information which we have at hand. This office will gladly entertain further information when it is submitted.

DEAR SIR: 1. This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 31st ultimo accompanied by Med. B, in the case of the above-named man.

2. After careful consideration it is the opinion of central office that this is still a section 3 case. The Adjutant General's letter states that the disability was incurred not in line of duty, and even though compensation to the amount of $4.50 per month has been granted, it is our belief that this man has not sufficient vocational handicap or even physical disability received while in the service to entitle him to training under section 2 of the rehabilitation act.

1. Name, Robinson, John Oscar; age, 28; race, white. (b) Private, Machine Gun Company, Seventy-second Infantry; enlisted, August 27, 1918; discharged, January 30, 1919. (c) Present address, Toddville, Md. (d) Principal civil occupation, teacher. (e) Occupation suggested by vocational adviser, civil engineering.

2. (a) The applicant has a disability the nature of which is as follows: Neurasthenia; deafness, ear, right. (b) In my opinion the disability was ———[1] incurred in, increased by, or traceable to services with the military and naval forces of the United States and this disability is ———,[2] ———.[2] (c) In view of his principal civil occupation the applicant has ———[1] a vocational handicap resulting from this disability and the degree of the handicap is 15 per cent ———.[2] ———.[2] ———.[2] (d) The occupation suggested is not[2] incompatible with his disability. (e) In view of his physical and mental condition, training in the suggested occupation is ———[1] now feasible.

3. (a) Is follow-up observation advisable during training? ———. If so, how often should his condition be determined? ———,[2] ———,[2] ———,[2] ———.[2] (b) Remarks: The above disabilities handicap man in returning to his former occupation by reason of impaired hearing, ear, right, tinnitus and inability to carry on because of nervous condition. This case has been presented before central office on two previous occasions. All reports received from the field on this man are practically of the same meaning, that the man is unable to return to his former occupation. It is therefore recommended that, in view of the above disabilities, this man be given some form of training that will tend to rehabilitate him. A course in civil engineering has been suggested and is recommended.

Applicant has been adjudged compensable.

PART II.

(A) Anamnesis.—1. Of what disability does the applicant complain? (Give the symptoms as stated by the applicant. Do not give a diagnosis.) Disturbances of hearing in right ear.

2. Give a brief military history of the disability. (This should show whether the disability was presumably due or traceable to military service or aggravated thereby. State where, when, and how this disability was incurred, places where and dates when treated in hospital or dispensary, and whether it was noted on his discharge. Compare paragraph 2, Form 502.)

NOTE.—The applicant should be required to submit an affidavit setting forth the facts in case he is suffering from a disability which is not a matter of record, e. g., if he claims he was inducted into the service with a disability unnoted by the medical examiners, that his disability is related to an injury or illness while in service for which he was not treated in hospital or dispensary, that he had a disability which was not noted on his discharge, or that he has developed a disability due to service since his discharge therefrom.

In March, 1918, suffered from concussion from gunfire in right ear, resulting in partial deafness. Treated in infirmary at Camp Meade, Md., in December, 1917.

(B) Physical examination.—Before beginning the examination the man should be stripped at least to the waist. 1. (a) Height with shoes, ——— inches; weight without coat. ——— pounds; inspiration, ——— inches; expiration, ——— inches; girth, ——— inches. (b) Do you find evidence of past or present disease of brain or nervous system? ———; of the heart? ———; of the lungs? ———; of any of the abdominal organs? ———; has he hernia.

[1] Insert the word "not," if applicable. [2] Strike out the words not applicable.

piles, fistula, or other rectal disease? ———; of any other part of the body? ———. (c) Describe fully the physical and functional conditions, with full details of the disabled organs, his general appearance and build, and endeavor to give a word picture of the man; use diagrams to show location of injuries, and always indicate by a pen sketch the position of ankylosed limbs and fingers.

Conversational voice, 4 feet; whispered voice, 6 inches; bone destruction negative; vestibular tests show marked reductions in reactions.

PHYSICIAN'S REPORT.

JUNE 30, 1919.

Name of man, J. O. Robinson, private, Seventy-second Machine Gun Company, United States Army; present address, Baltimore, Md.; date first examined or treated by you, June 30, 1919; physical condition at present, fair; origin, nature, and extent of injury or disease so far as determinable in November, 1918, suffered from concussion from gunfire in right ear, resulting in partial deafness; conversational voice, 7 feet; whisper, 6 inches. Do you consider that the injury or disease from which he is suffering was received in the service, or was seriously increased or accelerated to a disabling extent by the condition and exposure incident to service? Yes; received in service. State extent of his present disability: Partial, yes; per cent of total, 15 per cent. Is he able to perform any part of former or any other occupation? Yes; school-teacher. Has he a specific injury of a permanent nature? Yes; think it permanent. Do you recommend operation? No. Institutional care? No. What are chances for arrest or recovery? Very questionable. From what period from the date of discharge is disability likely to exist, from vocational viewpoint? At time of discharge from service. Is his condition yielding to treatment? No treatment since discharged. Remarks: Bone conduction negative. Vestibular tests show marked reductions in reactions.

To: Supervisor fourth district, United States Public Health Service, No. 2219 New Interior Building, Washington, D. C.
Subject: Examination of John O. Robinson (C–18843).

This is to state that John O. Robinson, formerly a private, Seventy-second Infantry Machine Gun Battalion, whose home address is Toddville, Md., a white man, single, 29 years of age, and a teacher by occupation, was examined at this office.

During his service he developed a disturbance in hearing from gun fire, a sequel to which is a neurasthenic condition.

On examination at the present time he appears as a moderately well-nourished individual, free from any physical defect, except for his ears and nervous condition.

He was referred to Dr. C. L. Billard for special examination of his ears. A copy of Dr. Billard's report follows:

"History: This man complains of throbbing in his right ear and of ringing in both ears at times.

"Examination: Both ear drums luterless and left somewhat retracted. Bone conduction much reduced on right side and slightly less than air on left.

"Hearing: Right, watch on contact conversational voice at 4 feet; left, watch 14/30, whisper 14/20.

"Diagnosis: Nerve deafness probably due to concussion.

Digitized by Google

"Prognosis: His hearing will probably remain stationary. He is apparently very much annoyed by the noises in his ears and inflation is suggested as a possible remedy for that symptom."

He was referred to Dr. D. Percy Hickling for special neurological examination. Dr. Hickling's report is as follows:

"In compliance with your request I have examined John Oscar Robinson, a white male, 29 years of age. As a result of that examination I would say that the neurological examination should be neurosis, secondary to his ear condition, which should be considered as in the line of duty. I would say that his neurological disability should be rated at 10.

"I regard the prognosis as favorable and depending somewhat on his ear condition. Any treatment which he may require may be carried on by the dispensary service in connection with his special ear treatment."

Diagnosis: Diminished hearing; neurasthenia.

Prognosis: Uncertain.

Disability: At the present time over 10 per cent partial permanent.

Treatment: Such treatment as recommended by Dr. C. L. Billard.

He is unable at the present time to follow his usual occupation as teacher, and I would not recommend the same.

Respectfully,

W. J. HEFFNER,
Acting Assistant Surgeon.

The next case was Frank Hammond, who had no complaint as to the way his case was handled, except that he had to bring congressional pressure to bear. Here are copies of the letters that were submitted by Congressman Hicks and a copy of Mr. Hammond's medical report which states that he has a temporary minor vocational handicap. This is signed by the doctor in the New York office, and as he was awarded compensation he was also given section 3 training.

(The papers referred to follow:)

FEBRUARY 12, 1920.

Hon. FREDERICK C. HICKS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN HICKS: In response to your inquiry concerning the case of Mr. Frank Hammond, 316 Cumberland Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., report from our district office at New York advises that from the evidence available in this case he is not eligible for training under section 2 of the vocational rehabilitation act, as it does not appear that he has a major vocational handicap.

He is, however, entitled to training under section 3 provided he is awarded compensation by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR FILLING OUT THIS REPORT.

[Number of paragraphs correspond to questions on other side.]

1 to 4 to be filled out in the district office.
5. Give a brief military history of the claimant's disability, sufficient to connect his disability with his military service. Give date of induction and discharge, nature of injury or illness, when and where treated, and whether discharged on that account.
6. In recording the man's complaint give symptoms as stated by him; do not give a diagnosis.
7. (a) In recording the results of a physical examination do not give a diagnosis; give the physical signs as you find them.
(b) In cases of wounds, give location of scars and also a description of the injury to the underlying structures, with the resulting deformity, limitation of motion, or disturbed function.
(c) When the applicant complains of dyspnea on exertion as a sequela of gassing, heart disease, or bronchial asthma, note his pulse and respiration before, just after, and 2 minutes after exercise, which should consist of hopping 25 times on each foot.
(d) In cases of heart disease, give general appearance, location of apex beat, and time of occurrence, location and direction of transmission of murmurs, and rate and rhythm of pulse.
(e) In cases of suspected tuberculosis give the physical signs present in the lungs and the height, weight, chest measurements, pulse, respiration, and temperature.
(f) If, in addition to the disability due to service, the man has any other impairment, describe it fully and state whether it is related in any way to his service.
8. Use the nomenclature of the United States Public Health Service.
17. A claimant is considered to have a major handicap when his disability would constitute a real handicap in his former occupation, such as to affect employability or earning power. A minor handicap involves some inconvenience but does not interfere in any real way with earning power or employability in the former occupation.
A negligible handicap involves an inconvenience that can be disregarded in considering employability or earning power.

Digitized by Google

Men without a vocation—that is, students and those who have not worked at one occupation more than one year and are under 21 years of age—should have their handicap considered in light of the general labor market.

18. Training is feasible when the mental and physical conditions permit and when the suggested occupation is not incompatible with his disability.

Civilian physians making this report at the request of the board will mail it directly to the district office of the Federal Board, using the inclosed envelope, which requires no postage. B. W. R. I. examiners will mail it to the district supervisor.

Mr. ROBSION. He wanted section 2.

Mr. LAMKIN. I understand he did not. I understand he was satisfied; but his complaint was, if I remember correctly, that he had to get Congressman Hicks to intercede in order for him to get section 3.

Mr. ROBSION. Your board gave section 3 to any man who was awarded compensation?

Mr. LAMKIN. That want to take it; yes, sir. I think it is true that we have not been pushing the section 3 cases. We have been trying to get the section 2 out of the way, but we are paying the tuition, books, and supplies back to the time the man was awarded compensation if he went in.

The next case is that of John Joseph Davis. On the 15th of July this man was sent an inquiry on the strength of an application which he made for compensation.

On the 31st of July—this is another Washington case—the district notified the branch office to get in touch with the man. Now, on the 11th of August the survey was made, and at that time the man was asked to have a medical examination. I may say that the Army record, the Army discharge, which I am filing herewith, states that the soldier's statement is "no disability." The examining surgeon's statement is, "He is physically and mentally sound." The line of duty is not stated. No disability. Dated Fort Myer, Va.

The Bureau of War Risk file states this soldier was discharged April 8 at Fort Meyer; that the origin, nature, and extent of injury or disability is not determinable. Defect of hearing in left ear caused by exposure. Place incurred: First noticed while stationed at Newport News, Va. Other questions on this blank regarding his ability to perform any part of former or any other occupation. Specific injury of a permanent nature, disability likely to exist, and so forth. Unanswered. This form gives the war-risk insurance number, but does not state any amount of compensation. It gives his present occupation as clerk in the Treasury; employer, in the Government service.

The Army record shows "wounds in action, none; soldier's statement, no disability."

The hospital record shows the man was treated for contusion of a moderately severe upper third thigh, accidentally incurred, being kicked by a horse while at drill on the Casino grounds, Newport News, Va., November 13, 1917. In line of duty. He was returned to duty November 21, 1917, eight days later.

That is the only record we have of any disability incurred in the service; so when he comes in he was asked to have a medical examination; date, August 28; and "some days ago we arranged for you to be examined by Dr. Rench, in order to push through your application for training. We have as yet received no report from the doctor of this examination."

Digitized by Google

On October 8 the branch office here wrote him again that "On August 11 we wrote you asking Dr. Wrench to give you a special ear examination." On October 21 Dr. Wrench made the examination. That accounts for some of the delay.

The next thing that was necessary to do was to connect that disability with the service, as there was nothing in any hospital record to show that it was connected with the service. We asked for an affidavit, and on the 18th day of December, 1919, the affidavit was received.

On the 6th of January, 1920, the district office wrote the branch office that in regard to training for Davis to the effect that they did not consider he had enough background to take work in agriculture; he had not lived on the farm. On January 10 the branch office stated to the district office that he insisted on the course in agriculture. On the 29th of January the case was approved by central office case board representative as entitled to training with pay, and in the latter part of March he was notified that he had received compensation from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

The CHAIRMAN. There was a good deal of delay in that case.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think there was delay in that case, Mr. Chairman.

DEAR SIR: On August 11 we wrote you a letter to Dr. Rench asking him to give you a special ear examination. We have a report from Dr. Rench that you did not appear for this examination.

We have a letter from the Baltimore office which states that your papers are complete and ready for action, with the exception of the medical report. We are therefore advising you to take the inclosed letter of introduction immediately to Dr. Rench for the ear examination in order that we may handle your case without further delay.

Mr. F. M. PHILLIPS,
Federal Board.

DEAR SIR: A careful examination of ears of J. Davis reveals: Right ear, watch, 4 inches; whisper, 2 feet. Left ear, watch, in contact with ear; whisper, negative. Applicant claims that he had good hearing prior to entry into service, but following repeated colds, hearing became bad.

He has deflected nasal septum, which should be corrected, as this will assist in treatment of his ears.

Applicant wishes to pursue study of agriculture; his hearing is sufficiently acute for this work, and out-of-door life would be beneficial.

DEAR SIR: We have a survey in the case of the above-named man made by Mr. Greenleaf in August, but no Army Medical and no copy of his discharge certificate. He has recently been classified as a major case, but this Adjutant General's Office record, as shown on our Form 213, states that at the time he was discharged he was physically and mentally sound. It will be necessary, therefore, to connect up his disability with his service, and we ask that you get the usual affidavit, together with copies of his discharge certificate, for our files.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 18, 1919.

I, John Joseph Davis, residing at 1712 Fifteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C., do depose and say:

1. That I was enlisted into the United States Army on May 26, 1917, at New York City; that I served as private until summer of 1918, when I was made corporal; that because of breaking quarantine in Fort Myer, 1918 (during "flu" time) I was reduced again to private first class; that I was discharged April 8, 1919.

2. That at the time of my enlistment I was in good physical condition.

3. That after enlistment I was sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., to build roads, make stables, etc.; that the weather was rainy, the ground marshy, the hours long (7.30 to 4.30); that I caught a heavy cold which settled in my head, and I noticed at the time that my hearing was affected; that I was transferred to Newport News, Va., and reported several times on sick call to the hospital; that after a consultation of doctors at that hospital it was decided not to operate on my left ear because at present I have a slight hearing in that ear which is preferable to total deafness in that ear as the probable result of the operation; that this was the last time that I tried to get medical treatment for my ear in the Army; that I was transferred to Fort Meyer, where I had an attack of "flu."

4. That I suffer continually with deafness in the left ear; that this is a serious handicap to me in my work.

5. That the above-mentioned symptoms are such that I am not able to take up my old job as salesman in butcher shop in Brooklyn, N. Y., with the success I formerly had.

6. That I appreciate the penalties in fine and imprisonment to which I may be liable for obtaining support from the Government under false pretenses.

8. That I believe myself entitled to such training and support.

9. That I hereby make claim therefor and request that my case be taken up for decision.

Re: Davis, John Joseph, 1712 Fifteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C.
Attention: Mr. W. J. Greenleaf.

DEAR SIR: We note your survey in the case of the above-named man, under date of August 11, states that he has been a bookkeeper for his father (a butcher) for a period of 11 years.

He states in his affidavit that his disability will prevent him from returning to his former occupation as a butcher-shop salesman, while the medical examination gives his occupation as that of manager of grocery store.

We also note that since his discharge from the service he has secured a position as clerk in the Treasury Department at Washington.

In view of the fact that his entire business experience seems to have been on inside work, we very strongly question the advisability of recommending for him a course in agriculture. After he had completed such a course the chances are he would find it necessary to go to work on a farm for perhaps $40 a month and his board, unless he was fortunate enough to connect up with some large place in a more or less executive capacity. Can you not find something that would offer him a better opportunity in the future, and at the same time give him the out-of-door training which he desires?

Re: John J. Davis,. 1712 Fifteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C.
Attention: Mr. Dimmick.

DEAR SIR: This man was requested to consult with this office in regard to changing his training from agriculture to some other course. To-day he called and states that he still makes the same request for agriculture.

Before service he was assisting his father in a combined grocery store and butcher shop in Brooklyn, N. Y. He has several brothers and is evidently capable of managing a farm of his own, which he tells me is his aim as soon as possible.

He has friends in Virginia with whom he is able to work until able to branch out for himself. He tells me that he has had this training in mind ever since his first interview and makes no other request.

Personally I think this training suitable and what he should have. He is a man who is able to look after himself and will not have to work out for somebody at $40 per month.

Will you try and write him personally within the next week, as I assured him he would hear from this case by that time.

From: Chief Division of Rehabilitation.
To: D. V. O., District No. 4.
Subject: Name, Davis, John J., private, first class, Troop D, Eleventh Cavalry.

The case of the above-named man has been reviewed and you are directed to take the type of action indicated by check mark below.

1. Inform the man that he is eligible for training and provided that his disability was incurred, increased, or aggravated while he was a member of the military or naval forces or his disability is traceable to service with such forces.

2. Inform the man that there is some doubt as to his eligibility for training. Make arrangements to get the substantiating evidence as soon as possible and resubmit case to central office representative.

3. Inform the man that he is not considered eligible for section 2 training in the light of the information in your possession. Offer him section 3 training Explain to him his right of appeal. If he does not care for section 3 training prepare recommendations for closing, and forward to central office with surveys and medical data at your convenience.

4. Obtain the information checked below and resubmit case to central office representative:

(a) Form 213 or Form 226 or affidavit from man stating that his disability was due to service.

(b) A medical examination.

(c) Certified copy of certificate of discharge or affidavit stating that he was discharged under honorable conditions and explaining why the discharge is not in his possession.

DEAR SIR: Herewith is a copy of our letter of February 20 to the above-named man. In further explanation permit us to state that Form 213 shows that this man received a slight contusion of the right thigh, accidentally incurred while drilling at Newport News. It will be noted that training is requested on the ground that deafness has resulted in both ears. Hence it is necessary to connect Mr. Davis's present disability with his Army service. We shall be glad to have you get in touch with Mr. Davis and secure the necessary affidavit.

My commission expires February 13, 1925.

Mr. LAMKIN. The next man that you had was Benjamin Dunstall.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; that is the one I have in mind.

Mr. LAMKIN. Contact was first made with this man some time prior to July 22, when the man was in hospital. I might add right here, Mr. Chairman, that boys who live outside of the territorial limits of the United States are handled through the Baltimore office, although over the line in Canada they are handled by the district nearest to the Canadian line, but as a general clearing house they are handled by the Baltimore office.

Mr. ROBSION. Why is that? Why do they clear cases from the Baltimore office?

Mr. LAMKIN. It has to be cleared through one branch office. Because of our relations with outside Governments we very frequently have to take them up through the State Department to reach men in other countries, and where there is no difficulty, such as in the Canadian case, it is referred immediately, as this case was, to our agent in Buffalo, N. Y., as Mr. Dunstall gave his address as Toronto, Canada.

On July 22, 1919, the case was transferred to the Baltimore office from the New York office, as it was a case where a man lived outside the territorial limits of the United States. On August 22 the Baltimore office wrote to the man at Toronto, Canada, the address obtained from a survey.

On the 25th of September the man was still in the hospital. The name had gotten by the Baltimore office and the office had written to him in Toronto, Canada, and the letter had not been replied to; the man had not been discharged from the Army.

On the 25th of September the man was surveyed at General Hospital No. 2 prior to his discharge.

The CHAIRMAN. Isn't Dunstall the man that did not get any word from the War Risk Insurance and was not receiving any money at all?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; that is what he stated; and he gave his address, Mr. Chairman, as Toronto, Canada.

On December 3, 1919, the district was still asking the Buffalo office to locate Dunstall, who had given his address as 295 George Street, Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

He called in the New York office—I believe it was along in the latter part of January, if I remember correctly—and when he was in the New York office he was approved for training, and at the Newark Technical School for a try-out period of 60 days. He entered the Newark Technical School on the 8th day of March. Here is a carbon copy of his survey, showing his address as 295 George Street, Toronto, Canada.

The financial record shows that the man entered training on March 8, 1920, at the Newark Technical School. Rate of pay, $80 per month; that he was mailed a check for $61.33 for the period ending March 31; that he was transferred—his transfer record shows he was transferred from a hospital in the city of New York to Fort McHenry on the 22d of July, and that he was sent back from Fort McHenry to New York on the 30th of October. The bureau states—we called at the bureau that afternoon, and they stated that his compensation at the rate of $30 a month had been paid from October 4, 1919, to March 8, 1920; that the checks had been mailed to 295 George Street, Toronto, Canada; that they were unclaimed and returned to the bureau; and that the bureau did not receive notice of a change of address until the 24th of March, his new address being 117 North Avenue, Cranford, N. J., to which the boy's checks were sent.

The CHAIRMAN. Has that been since the boy was here?

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. No; the checks got to him since the boy was here; but they have been sending his checks to Canada.

The CHAIRMAN. That explains it, then.

Mr. LAMKIN. And they did not know what his address was. Now, I immediately wired our New York office the day the boy was here that Dunstall was here, and that he had no money and that a check for $61.33 had been sent to him, and to look for the boy when he came back to Newark and see that he got him money and see that he got the training.

The CHAIRMAN. Before you leave the Dunstall case, Mr. Lamkin, how close are you to the information—specific information—as to the character of work that is done in that Newark school?

Mr. LAMKIN. That is just what I was going to discuss with you right now, if I may.

The CHAIRMAN. His story was not a very encouraging one.

Mr. LAMKIN. Here is the report which I asked for from the supervisor of training, Mr. Hamilton:

APRIL 23, 1920.

COLLEGE OF TECHNOLOGY, NEWARK N. J., FORMERLY KNOWN AS NEWARK TECHNICAL INSTITUTE.

1. The above-named institute had for a number of years a very small day enrollment and a large evening enrollment. During the daytime facilities were largely not used. Early in 1919 arrangements were made through the director, Dr. D. R. Hodgdon, with the board of trustees to organize special classes for day instruction for students under the supervision of the Federal board.

2. The institution had the usual difficulties in securing suitable instructors and getting supplementary equipment to provide instruction as the number of men to be trained increased. During the summer and early fall the work steadily improved both in number of classes, types of instruction, and also in organization.

3. Following that, however, the work was subject to very serious interruptions and setbacks. The director, Dr. D. R. Hodgdon, resigned in October, 1919, to take a larger position in Chicago. For a considerable period the school was without a director. The Federal board students were under the supervision of a faculty committee, and there was not the utmost cooperation and harmony between two members of the committee, one of whom was a very active candidate for the position of director.

4. Our coordinator stationed at the institution, Mr. A. P. Fant, found great difficulties in getting prompt attention to the needs of the Federal board students through this cumbersome committee arrangement, but the potential facilities were too good to abandon and, furthermore, the number of men constantly being awarded training in District No. 2 made it necessary to preserve the arrangements if possible until a new director came on the scene.

5. The new director, Mr. A. R. Cullimore, formerly dean of engineering at Delaware State College, came to the institution about the middle of January, 1920. Obviously, he could not correct immediately the accumulated bad conditions.

6. Again, our coordinator, Mr. A. P. Fant, left the service for a better position on February 2, 1920, and was replaced by a man who had not had any previous contact with this institution or the disabled men therein. The institution has been visited by representatives of the central office as well as representatives of District No. 2 office. Suggestions have been made for improvement of the work and a very definite recommendation that one instructor should be removed in order to make improvement possible has been made and followed by the institution.

7. We have every reason to believe that the institution will cooperate to the greatest extent and with a good understanding of the work. Director Collimore was a major in Reconstruction Service of the Surgeon General, United States Army.

That was based, probably, on a report dated February 20, from Mr. Smiley, the supervisor of training in New York, concerning the instruction at the Newark Technical School:

FEBRUARY 20, 1920.

From: Mr. W. I. Hamilton, superintendent of training.
To: Mr. P. H. Smiley, supervisor of advice and training, acting, district No. 2.
Re: Instruction, Newark Technical School.

DEAR SIR: The English instruction for students of less than a complete elementary education at the above-named institution has been unsatisfactory for a long time. It was not thought advisable to take radical action during the time when the trustees were searching for a new director. We have always been of the opinion that this school, favorably located in the center of so many industries, could render very valuable service to disabled men by organizing its resources, courses of study and training arrangements with industrial plants so as to meet the needs of students sent there.

The retiring director was in entire sympathy with such a development, and the attitude of the Federal board has been shown by the support it has given in supplementing equipment, making changes in the building, and in other ways. We desire to continue to use the institution and lead out to a broader program of training than has heretofore been carried out.

The present director has the confidence of the board and its staff, both in the Vocational Education Division and the Rehabilitation Division. I do not know Maj. Cullemore personally, but I have known of him by reputation and his services were sought early in the rehabilitation work. We did not succeed in securing him. I am confident he would be entirely unwilling to be connected with an inefficient educational or training enterprise. His desires and ours are identical and are entirely in the interests of the disabled men.

On the basis of the report given me to-day by Miss Ensor, agent of the central office training section, and yourself, I can not escape the conclusion that the English work must be radically changed. A description of the work observed needs no argument to prove that it is not correlated with the men's experience, and is ill-adapted to their capacity. The teaching of English to adults has been well developed in the last few years in certain lines not entirely satisfactory for our use, but teaching methods and technique have been developed which are of use. The present teacher seems to be unaware of any such developments, and I judge, unwilling to change his own. This being the case, clearly a change of teachers is necessary.

Our experience has been for the most part, women teachers of the right type and personality, are more successful than men in teaching English to men of the type we are now discussing.

Contracts with every institution call for instruction which shall be satisfactory to the duly authorized representatives of the board. As the representative of the district vocational officer, in matters relating to training in district No. 2, you have the responsibility of certifying that the instruction is as satisfactory as can be obtained under the conditions surrounding our work. You should take immediate steps with Maj. Cullemore to secure for the benefit of the disabled men the service to which they are entitled, and for which the Federal Board is paying.

I believe you and the director of the school will find yourselves in entire agreement on this proposition; but if he finds it impossible to bring about the necessary changes, you have only one recourse, namely—to recommend the transfer of the men now at the school, after giving the director a reasonable time to comply with your suggestions.

Please file a copy of this communication with Mr. Clark for his information, and with the director of the school if you desire.

Very truly, yours,

(Signed) W. I. HAMILTON,
Superintendent of training.

The man who was writing this report, Mr. Smiley, was connected with the War Department in the S. A. T. C. work during the war. He sought to enlist and the War Department declined to let him in.

As a result of this communication a teacher in that school was removed, Maj. Cullimore has taken charge and is getting satisfactory service for the men there now.

Mr. ROBSION. What is the date of that?

Mr. LAMKIN. This letter is the 20th of February.

This letter is dated the 8th of April, from Mr. H. F. Reagle, training assistant, in regard to Ben Dunstall:

Re: Dunstall, Benjamin, 23210.

In accordance with your instructions regarding the above-named man, wish to state that the man's folder was delivered to Mr. Lamkin on March 14, and was signed for by him. Please note the following facts regarding the man's status:

Form 107, approving the man for a two months' try-out course at the Newark Technical School, was issued on March 8, 1920. He entered this school on March 8 and was placed in the auto mechanics shop, remaining there March 8 and 9. On March 11 he reported to the office of the coordinator and requested a transfer to the Gilsleider sign shop, Montclair, N. J., for a course in sign painting. He did not attend school on the 12th, but returned on the 15th and stated that he did not desire a transfer to the course in sign painting, but wished to take up a course in electrical wiring. He was told to report to the instructor of the electrical class that same morning, but failed to appear. The instructor says he did not register in that class. He says that he does not know the man.

This information was obtained from Mr. Lavenburg, coordinator of the Newark Technical School. A check for $61.33, which is the man's pay from March 8 to March 31, is now at the school and will be held there until further notice.

Mr. BEN DUNSTALL,
295 George Street, Toronto Canada.

DEAR SIR: We have your name in our files as one of our soldiers, but it is not clearly indicated whether or not you received any disability while in the service.

Before proceeding further with your case we will have to have additional information. Inclosed you will find our Form 90. Will you kindly fill out this form very completely and return to this office? It is our purpose to assist all disabled soldiers that are eligible for such assistance. In your case it will be necessary for us to have more information before we can determine whether or not you are eligible for training and assistance at the hands of this board.

In reply use the inclosed envelope, which requires no postage, and refer to our file No. D–4–18423.

Very truly, yours,

W. H. MAGEE,
District Vocational Officer.

MR. BENJ. DUNSTALL,
117 North Avenue, Cranford, N. J.

DEAR SIR: We are glad to inform you that we are authorized to offer you a course in tryout course at Newark Technical School, 367 High Street, Newark, N. J., for a period of 60 days, with the understanding that further training will be provided at the expiration of this period if an extension of course is found to be necessary and advisable.

Please find inclosed Forms 115-a, 115-c, and 544. Instructions given on the forms indicate clearly how they are to be used. If the dependency blank (Form 544) can not be executed at the same time that you mail your notice, of course, (Form 115-c), it should be forwarded as soon thereafter as possible in order that your name may be placed upon our pay roll for the proper amount without delay.

It may be a month before your first check arrives, but after receipt of the initial check you may expect prompt payment on or about the 5th and 20th of each month. If you need funds to carry you over the first month, do not hesitate to notify us and we will endeavor to secure an advance for you.

We hope that you will be able to begin training on the date indicated, but if for any reason you find it impossible to do so, please inform us immediately, giving your reason, so that we may take such steps as are necessary.

We trust that you will find your course satisfactory, but we will always be ready to consider any recommendations which you may wish to make. We will gladly answer any questions which you may desire to ask and which are not taken care of by the instructions which are inclosed.

Yours, very truly,

Mr. TOWNER. Bearing upon the failure to receive the checks, the record of the testimony of Mr. Dunstall, on page 404 of the hearing—Mr. Vestal asked him the question:

Where did you formerly live?

His answer was: "Lately?"

Mr. VESTAL. Before you entered the service?

Mr. DUNSTALL. I came from Canada.

Mr. VESTAL. Have you received word from the Bureau of War Risk that they had sent your money to some place in Canada?

Mr. DUNSTALL. Yes, sir; I went to Canada and came back again.

Mr. VESTAL. You do not know whether it came back again or not?

Mr. DUNSTALL. No; but they sent it. They said they got some checks that came back.

Mr. VESTAL. What address did you give?

Mr. DUNSTALL. I made a mistake in the address. Instead of giving them South Avenue I gave them North, but I told them at the post office to hold all my mail as I was getting my mail all right there.

Mr. VESTAL. Then, there is some little excuse for the mix-up. That helps a little.

Mr. DUNSTALL. I will get that money all right. I do not care for the money, but for the schooling.

Mr. LAMKIN. Here is this other wire, Mr. Chairman:

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 23, 1920.

LAMKIN,
Northwest corner Nineteenth and D Streets NW., Washington, D. C.

Re case Benjamin Dunstall. No. 107-B submitted. Man in training Newark Technical School.

CLARK.

The next soldier who came, Mr. Chairman, was Irving Kanter. They have as much trouble in the New York office with Irving Kanter as with any of the men who have been there. I think that all of us are agreed that the harder the case is to handle the more patience it takes. I think that a careful reading of the testimony will show that Kanter was offered training in Newark, N. J., and declined to go, stating that he could not learn anything over there; could not get anything at the place of training over there. Here are some exhibits showing that we tried to put him into the same kind of work that he was in.

Digitized by Google

That die there [showing] is made by a boy who was in training only a few weeks. This engraving [showing] was made by a fellow who was in training over there at the same kind of work that Kanter was offered. This other man was there six weeks in the shop when this work was done.

The situation in regard to Kanter was, he was awarded training and he wanted precious-stone setting and it could not be given him, as he was told, on account of the strike in the city of New York, and he was offered training along a related line and declined to take it because it was in Newark. He was taken out of the Educational Alliance in New York, as I understand it, because of misconduct.

Mr. ROBSION. Was that Kanter?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Would it be proper to say what the misconduct was?

Mr. LAMKIN. I really do not know, Mr. Robsion. I would be very glad to say if I did. He came into the New York office and he has made the statement here as to what the New York office said about him, and the men in the New York office have made sworn statements as to what he said about them, and I do not care to put them into the record. I think that the boy should have another chance, and he is going to have another chance.

This man had a double hernia. He was approved for training as a jeweler for the period of one year on the 8th of January, 1919. He started training in Seward Park Rehabilitation Center, New York City, on January 21, 1919. On the 28th of February he discontinued training. He wanted training in jewelry manufacturing in New York City only. On account of the strike in that trade in this city, they could not place him, and he refused to take training anywhere else.

On the 16th of February he called up the New York office and was interviewed by Mr. Wheeler, placement officer, who explained to him in detail why it was impossible to place him in training in the jewelry business on account of the strike. In answer to Mr. Wheeler's explanation of existing conditions in the trade he was very insulting, saying he had been to Washington and was there told he could have any training he desired, and that he could be placed in the jewelry trade at once upon presenting himself to the New York office.

The placement officer at Newark, N. J., stated that he would place Mr. Kanter with Riker Bros., jewelry manufacturers, at 42 Court Street, Newark. He was told to report there and begin work. The man did not report. On the 17th of March he was started in training as a fountain-pen maker, with H. B. Dodds, 187 Lafayette Street, New York City. On the 24th of March the following letter was received from Mr. H. B. Dodds:

> Irving Kanter was employed by me March 18 to 22, during which time he worked 13 hours and 40 minutes—5 days. This was very unsatisfactory; therefore I discharged him on March 22, as it is imperative that my employees work steady.
> HARRY B. DODDS.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the policy of the board in a case of that kind—where a case of that kind arises? Here is a fellow that was placed at work; he is not satisfactory; he is dismissed; yet he is a soldier and he is entitled to training, and what are you going to do with him?

Mr. LAMKIN. Mr. Chairman, the wisest man in the world once said we had to bear with some people—forgive some people "seventy times seven times," and while we can not go quite that far with these men, yet the intense human problem requires us to give these boys just as many chances as we can, and it is a pretty difficult thing sometimes for a Government employee or anybody else who is working with men to stand up and take the things they say about them, and say, "Well, we are going to give you another chance." But we are going to do it in the Kanter case, as we are doing it in hundreds of other cases. I think the last boy I talked to in the St. Louis office was a fellow who was entitled to training.

We tried him at three or four different places and he had "gone wrong" every time, and I had to talk to him in a way that I hope nobody will ever have to talk to my boy, but if necessary they should talk to him in that way. I said, "We are going to give you one more chance; this is your last one; if you don't profit by your training this time, we are through; we are done; training would not then be feasible in your case." The last I heard of him he was making good. And those are some of the very, very difficult problems that this board has to handle.

As I said to you yesterday, in discussing the relative difficulty of the work of the board and of the bureau, it is not a question of determining the physical disability and sending out checks to the man, to let him do as he pleases with, but it is our job to follow up these boys, to help them make citizens of themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. There isn't any doubt but what there will be disappointing cases in perfectly well people. I know that. My experience shows that. Now, here are boys, shocked, some of them, because of what they have been through—most of them—and there are a good many circumstances under which they are different from what they would be if they had not been in the service, and I can see that it is absolutely necessary to exercise quite a different attitude of mind toward them than you would if they were simply college boys, boys in vocational work. I would not be at all surprised to find that that problem was very much more complicated by virtue of the disability they suffer, and I have thought that it is so rational that unless you did exercise the finest spirit of overlooking shortcomings, there would be many things left undone that ought to be done.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think that is the attitude of the board. I know it is the attitude of the officials of the board. Sometimes it is very hard to get that to the employees that come in immediate contact with the men.

Mr. TOWNER. This Kanter case—I don't find it, but my recollection was that he was sent to a preparatory school—that he was deficient in education.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. And was there for a short time, perhaps, and then he said he was informed that they would not allow him to continue there any longer. What information have you regarding that?

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. That is the Educational Alliance or the Seward Park Rehabilitation Center, as it is called in New York. It is a very difficult problem—a very sensitive matter.

Mr. TOWNER. Would you rather have that kept out of the record?

Mr. LAMKIN. I have no objection to putting that into the record. It has given us considerable concern. The board has no authority to give these men English only, so we have notified them that they must take some other work, some vocational work in addition to that.

Mr. TOWNER. Why do you say that, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. LAMKIN. English does not lead to a vocation, Mr. Towner.

Mr. TOWNER. Why not? Supposing a man is going to become a letter writer, we will say, or a clerk, and he is deficient in his English; doesn't that lead—isn't that preparation for that work?

Mr. LAMKIN. That is vocational; yes, sir. There is no question about that.

Mr. TOWNER. Well, I can hardly conceive of where a man was deficient in English that it would not lead to better preparation for his vocational training.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think you are right about that. I think there is no doubt about that. It would be better preparation for his vocation.

Mr. TOWNER. For instance, a man who can not write a letter at all—and I presume there are a good many instances like that.

Mr. LAMKIN. Very many of them.

Mr. TOWNER. And that is teaching in English.

Mr. LAMKIN. But that is not the case with Kanter.

Mr. TOWNER. Well, you made the general statement that teaching English alone would not lead to a vocation.

Mr. LAMKIN. English alone would not lead to a vocation.

Mr. TOWNER. It might; but in this particular case, you say it would not? That is the statement you make?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes; that is true. Another answer is this, that a man who needs training only in English will never make a correspondent or a success in commercial work, or things of that kind; and so we are requiring that some other subject be given along with the English instruction. Now, it is a very serious question with us as to whether or not the work that is done in the Seward Park Rehabilitation Center is worth what we are paying for it.

Mr. TOWNER. Well, that is a practical question.

Mr. ROBSION. What do you pay?

Mr. LAMKIN. My recollection is that they have been paying $15 a month. I am not sure about that. It is a part of the regular system of education in New York City. It is a part of the New York City school system, and our contract is with the New York City Board of Education. They have a man by the name of Mayman in charge of it, and within the past two or three days I have had two definite conflicting reports in regard to it. One was that it was not worth what we are paying for it, and the other was that it was decidedly worth what we are paying for it. And it has always been—at least, it has been for several months—a very serious question as to whether or not the men were getting there what they ought to have. We are going to give Kanter training, and will give English along with his other training.

The next case is the case of Henry B. Katzen. The discharge certificate shows that Mr. Katzen was discharged with "no disability." He also complains of delay.

On the 7th of August, 1919, the New York office wrote asking him to call. On the 6th of October a letter from the vocational adviser at Newark, N. J., states that the man had not definitely decided on a course of training until after he went to the Newark Technical School to look up a course, and it further states that on the 1st of August, on the recommendation of the Public Health Service, he was sent to Mendham, N. J., and afterwards to Mount Bethel, Pa., for convalescence care. I think this was a mental case—no; a tuberculosis case.

Immediately upon receiving that letter from Mr. Dillon, our Newark adviser, the New York office again asked him to call and see Dr. Merriam at the earliest convenience.

On the 9th of October they wrote to the American Red Cross at Newark stating that they had received a letter from Mr. Dillon that the man was unable to work, and stating that on the 11th of August, "it was found he had a very slight disability, so in order to do Mr. Katzen full justice I have asked Mr. Dillon to furnish him with transportation to report at this office for an examination and a conference with our staff." He states that the man has had three examinations, but the information differs. It is a case where "doctors disagree."

On the 17th of November he was sent to Maj. Smith, of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, which shows that after he had applied to the board and was examined by the medical officer he was found to be suffering from third-degree flat feet and recommended to be fitted with orthopedic arches, to reduce as far as possible the discomfort which the flat feet produced. "Our medical officer is of the opinion that when the condition of the man's feet have improved his nervous condition will likely disappear." That is signed by the medical officer in the New York office.

That was November 17, 1919. On November 18 he was approved for a course in the Newark Technical School.

Mr. Katzen stated before this committee that the Bureau of War Risk Insurance did not find him compensable until October, 1919.

Mr. ROBSION. How long was it from the time he filed his case, made his application, until it was approved.

Mr. LAMKIN. On May 21 the man was surveyed. He was discharged with "no disability" and surveyed May 21. In the month of August at least he was in hospital under care for disability, and he was reported back the 6th of October and was approved for training the 18th of November.

(Mr. Lamkin submitted the following papers in the case of Henry B. Katzen:)

From: Federal Board for Vocational Education, 1020 Broad Street, Newark, N. J.
To: D. V. O. No. 2, att. Mr. Collier.
Subject: Henry Katzen, 57 Lilly Street, Newark, N. J.

1. Confirming my telephonic conversation with you to-day, our records here show that Henry Katzen first came in here on May 21st and was surveyed, but did not definitely decide on training until he had been to the Newark Technical School to look up a course given there, after which machinist was advised, and his survey was sent to you.
2. On July 22nd we were notified that the case board had turned his case down. On July 31st additional information was sent to you to support his case, and mechanical draftsman was advised. This advisement would seem to suit the disability claimed by the man.
3. From the Red Cross I have obtained the following information: He was given 25 per cent disability by Dr. W. Henry Bremer, 650 Leonard Street, Brooklyn, on examination for Form 504. From May 9th to the end of July he worked at the Edison Co., earning from $20 to $25 a week, the variation being due to his inability to work steadily.
4. On the 1st of August, on the recommendation of Major Smith, of the P. H. S., he was sent to Mendham, N. J., and after to Mt. Bethel, Penn., for convalescent care. He returned about the 1st of September and has not been able to work since.

Miss MARY A. JACOBSON,
Chairman, American Red Cross, Newark Chapter,
1020 Broad Street, Newark, N. J.

DEAR MISS JACOBSON: Your letter with inclosed copies of Mr. Katzen's discharge has been received.

I have since received a letter from Mr. Dillon stating that Mr. Katzen has been unable to work for the past few weeks. When he was examined by our physician on August 11 it was found he had a very slight disability, so in order to do Mr. Katzen full justice I have asked Mr. Dillon to furnish him with transportation, to report at this office for an examination and a conference with our staff. Mr. Katzen has had three examinations made already, but the information differs, so that it will be necessary to give his case personal attention to insure Mr. Katzen of getting full justice.

Thanking you for your interest in his and other cases,

Yours, very truly,

S. E. FARWELL,
District Vocational Officer.

From: D. V. O. District No. 2, New York City.

To: Major F. C. Smith, War Risk Insurance Bureau, 280 Broadway, New York City.

Re: Katzen, Henry, 19994, 57 Lilly Street, Newark, N. J.

DEAR DR. SMITH: I am referring the bearer, the above-named man, to you for treatment of original war disability.

He was discharged from the service under date of April 13, 1919. He has applied to this board for vocational training, and was examined by our medical officer, who finds that he is suffering from third-degree flat feet, and recommends that he be fitted with orthopedic arches to reduce, as far as possible, the discomfort which the flat feet produce.

Our medical officer is of the opinion that when the condition of the man's feet has improved, his nervous condition will likely disappear. We are, therefore, referring him to you for the necessary arches which he may need, and trust that you will let us have a report stating what you have done for him, and oblige,

From: Chief, Division of Rehabilitation.

To: District Vocational Office, No. 2, New York.

Subject: Katzen, Henry, private Company M Fourth Infantry, 57 Lilly Street, Newark, N. J.

1. I am directed to state that the recommendation that this man be given a course in trade tryout at Newark Technical is approved for a period of 60 days, plus the additional number of days necessary to insure the termination of this course on the 15th or end of the month, depending on the date first occurring. At the end of this period if further training is deemed necessary or advisable recommendation to that effect should be submitted.

INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Use this form for persons placed in training under section 2 of the vocational rehabilitation act only.
2. Seven copies of this form shall be prepared in every case by the district office, the original and five carbon copies—duly signed by the district officer—shall be forwarded to central office and the remaining carbon shall be retained in the district office for its file.
3. In the upper right-hand corner, in space indicated, shall be placed the district office and central office file numbers.
4. On date line should appear the date upon which form is signed by district vocational officer and forwarded to central office.
5. Line 1.—Insert in directory style name of person commencing training, viz., surname, first name in full, middle name in full. Example: "Smith, John James."
6. Line 2.—Insert Army or Navy rank or rating, military organization, and Army or Navy serial number of person commencing training. Example: "Private, Fifth Infantry, Company L, No. 263785."
7. Line 3.—Insert name of dependents in directory style, followed by the relationship to the person commencing training, and the date upon which form entitled "Affidavit covering dependents." was forwarded to central office. Example: "Smith. Mrs. John J.," "wife." "July 18"; "Smith, Maude L.," "daughter," July 18." In cases where the person commencing training has no dependents, the word "None" should be inserted in this space. In cases where he has dependents and form entitled "Affidavit covering dependents" is submitted with this notice, the word "Attached" should be written in the third column. Where statement is not attached or has not been previously submitted, the words "To be submitted later" should be written in the column referred to.

8. Line 4.—State distinctly the character of course, using terminology employed by central office in approving course. Cases placed in training for courses including English and "try out" courses in other lines must be accurately described. Date of letter from central office approving course must be inserted in space indicated. When cases are placed in training prior to central office approval, insert the phrase "Prior to approval" in space.

9. Line 5.—Insert the name and address of institution, firm, or organization at which the training is being given, followed by "Inst.," "Job," "Correspondence," "Private tutor," etc., describing method of training. Example: "Miller's Business College, Washington, D. C.," "Inst."; "Remington Typewriter Co., Ilion, N. Y., "Job." In cases of placement training, word "Job" must be followed by amount of monthly pay to be paid by employer.

10. Line 6.—Insert date upon which training is commenced and period of training approved by central office. Do not abbreviate. Example: "14th," "September," "1919," "Six months."

11. Line 7.—Insert date of termination of course. Do not abbreviate. The practice of allowing 30 days' probationary employment as part of the period of training has been discontinued. Courses terminate upon expiration of period approved by central office in all cases. If further training is necessary, the case should be taken up with central office for extension of course.

12. Line 8.—Insert monthly payments as prescribed by the vocational rehabilitation act as amended July 11, 1919. In cases where dependency is claimed and affidavit has not been previously forwarded and is not attached to this form, the amount shown must be $80.

13. Line 9.—Insert cost of carrying training to completion, itemized as indicated. Under the law the board is prohibited from incurring obligations in excess of its appropriation, and district offices are, therefore, admonished to exercise extreme care in furnishing this information.

14. This form must be signed in the space indicated by the district vocational officer, and must be transmitted to central office within three days after the commencement of course. Any subsequent change in status of case as reported hereon, including items of cost, must be reported promtply to central office on Form 107-A.

Mr. TOWNER. He states in his examination that he was examined by a physician eight or nine times. What, if any, explanation is made of that, or is that borne out by your records?

Mr. LAMKIN. This record here states that the doctors disagreed as to his disability, and the boy insisted——

Mr. TOWNER (interposing). He was getting from the War Risk Insurance Bureau a total-disability rating, was he not?

Mr. LAMKIN. He was not awarded compensation until October, 1919, by the bureau.

Mr. TOWNER. And he got $90.

Mr. LAMKIN. But that was awarded in October.

Mr. TOWNER. Well, were these repeated examinations for the purpose of determining the degree of disability, or was that for the purpose of determining the character of training that he should have?

Mr. LAMKIN. The first examination showed that he had a very slight disability and was not entitled to training at all. It states—this letter of October 9:

> When he was examined by our physician, on August 11, it was found he had a very slight disability, so in order to do Mr. Katzen full justice I have asked Mr. Dillon to furnish him with transportation to report at this office for an examination and a conference with our staff.

The Army examining physician said he had no disability when discharged from the service.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. The probabilities are that he had incipient tuberculosis at that time, and that would be and is sometimes very difficult to diagnose.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think I stated, did I not, Judge, a day or two ago that the Public Health officer who first examined the man, or who examined him at all, stated that he did have tuberculosis, and our doctor stated he did not have tuberculosis; they were to give the boy the benefit of the doubt and give the doctors six months to agree, and that if neither of them said the boy had tuberculosis give him the benefit of the doubt, put him in training with pay and get together—the doctors get together—in six months' time.

Mr. TOWNER. I quite approve of that attitude, but I can very readily see, I think, that it would be a very difficult proposition to know in any given case if a man had tuberculosis in any stage of its development what would be the proper training for him; but with all of those matters admitted, I still should think that there would be no justification for eight or nine consecutive examinations by physicians.

Mr. LAMKIN. I am inclined to agree with you.

The CHAIRMAN. I have looked over this testimony, and I notice he was discharged in April and was approved—he made his application in May, about the 1st of May—he says about the 1st of May, and he states here that he went back and forth, first to the board and then to the Red Cross, and was examined and finally got in the 1st of December. When you read the testimony, it is difficult to understand how this situation could exist.

Mr. TOWNER. As tending to throw further light on the proposition Mr. Katzen stated that he had a disability 12 years ago, so that it might have been still existing. Of course, the question was asked him as to how he got in the Army, and he said he did not know.

Mr. LAMKIN. Doesn't the amended bureau law provided that a man is considered as a " whole " man when he is taken into the Army?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not know that the law says that.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think the amendment to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance law allows them to consider a man as having been well or whole when he came into the service.

Mr. ROBINSON. They have turned him down on the idea that it existed prior to enlistment.

Mr. LAMKIN. The next one, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TOWNER (interposing). Just along that line, suppose that it had been developed that a man had been afflicted with tuberculosis before the war, and nevertheless, he was accepted and served through the war and after he came out of it the disease had so developed as to render him incapacitated for returning to his former vocation, would there be any question that the board would be justified in the inference that his disease had been aggravated or increased because of his service.

Mr. LAMKIN. Not a bit. The law provides that if it is increased or aggravated by the service.

Mr. TOWNER. There would be no difficulty, I should think, in the board's taking it for granted that if he did serve having such a disease as that, that the service per se——

Mr. LAMKIN (interposing). Would aggravate it.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. It would be sufficient to show the aggravation of the disease.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think there is no question about that, Mr. Chairman.

The next case is that of Gordon McLeod Campbell. I suppose you remember him. For your information, we got him approved for training and the compensation awarded to him before he got out of town that day. That is a case which I can not account for. He states that he has had medical examinations and the Red Cross wrote a letter to the board, in which they stated they had sent medical examinations by special delivery and by registered mail.

Mr. ROBSION. That was the young man from Mr. Platt's district?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir. We can not find any medical examinations in our files at all and the bureau can not find any in theirs or the Public Health Service can not find any in theirs. Where these examinations are I can not answer.

Here is a letter dated April 12:

STATE HOSPITAL,
Middletown, N. Y., April 12, 1920.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE,
23 West Forty-third Street, New York City.

SIRS: I inclose herewith a newspaper clipping from the local paper with reference to Gordon Campbell, 12 Lincoln Street, Middletown, N. Y.

As your records undoubtedly show, this man has been ordered to report to me on two different occasions for neuropsychiatric examination since last December. He has thus far failed to report, and from the tenor of the newspaper clipping undoubtedly does not intend to report for such examination. I send the clipping for your information.

Yours, very truly,

On the 10th of April there is a letter from Director Chomeley-Jones, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF WAR RISK INSURANCE,
Washington, April 10, 1920.

MY DEAR MR. LAMKIN: If I am informed correctly Mr. Gordon McLeod Campbell, of 12 Lincoln Street, Middletown, N. Y., testified before the Fess Committee on Education of the House to the effect that he did not receive anything from the Federal Board for Vocational Education or any compensation from the bureau.

I think you might be interested in reading a copy of a report giving a full status of his case as handled by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

Very truly, yours,

R. G. CHOLMELEY-JONES, Director.

Mr. UEL W. LAMKIN,
Chief, Division of Rehabilitation,
Federal Board for Vocational Education, Washington, D. C.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF WAR RISK INSURANCE,
Washington.

With reference to the case of Gordon McLeod Campbell, 12 Lincoln Street, Middletown, N. Y., I beg to advise you of the complete status of this case:

This man was discharged from the service on January 13, 1919, upon a medical survey of neuritis, sciatic nerve, percentage of disability 5 per cent. Filed claim for compensation under date of February 7, 1919, claim being filed through the Federal Board for Vocational Education, claim being transmitted to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance by Federal Board under date of March 21, 1919. Under date of March 28, 1919, a physical examination was requested by the bureau and claimant was forwarded transportation to report for such examination. There was and has been no compliance to this request. Claimant was written under date of March 28, 1919, stating fully what was necessary in order to place his claim properly before the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. There has been no reply to this letter. A second request for physical examination was made of claimant under date of May 14, 1919,—there has been no compliance to this request. A third request for physical examination was forwarded through the district supervisor under date of August 15, 1919—there has been no compliance with this request. A fourth request for physical examination was made under date of December 16, 1919—there has been no compliance to this request.

Digitized by Google

The American Red Cross inquired of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance the status of this claim under date of December 2, 1919. Under date of December 12, 1919, the bureau advised the Red Cross of the repeated efforts to obtain a physical examination of this claimant, stating that no compensation could be awarded until there was a compliance to these requests. The fifth request for a physical examination was made under date of March 29, 1920—there has been no compliance to this request.

Under date of April 8, 1920, this claimant was surveyed by the Federal Board for Vocational Education and said board has submitted to the bureau their complete findings as to his physical condition, also the Federal Board submitting the complete medical history of the Navy Department. Using as the basis the report submitted by the Federal Board for Vocational Education, under date of April 8, 1920, the chief medical advisor had rendered an opinion that the disability of temporary partial 50 per cent from date of discharge has existed in this case and accordingly an award for compensation in monthly payments of $40, dating from June 13, 1919, has been approved in favor of this claimant. Claimant has also been written under date of April 9, 1920, by the chief medical advisor, advising him that the necessary hospital and sanatorium treatment will be offered and requesting that he avail himself of such offer.

R. G. CHOLMELEY-JONES.

Mr. ROBSION. You had a report there from the medical adviser in Middletown, N. Y.?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION. Is that the doctor to whom this young man was directed to report?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; that is my understanding.

Mr. ROBSION. He reports that he never did it.

Mr. LAMKIN. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. ROBSION. There was no record in the War Risk, according to Mr. Jones's report, that he ever responded to any of these requests.

Mr. LAMKIN. The request that we made was that he report to the Public Health Service, Dr. Truex, Middletown, N. Y., for examination, on January 20. What has become of these medical examinations I can not tell you.

Mr. ROBSION. Dr. Truex said that he sent them on, did he not?

Mr. LAMKIN. Is that the testimony that is in here of the Red Cross letters?

Mr. ROBSION. Dr. Truex did not testify, did he?

Mr. LITTLEDALE. No.

Mr. LAMKIN. November 28 there was another letter to Dr. Truex to have a survey made.

Mr. TOWNER. The question was asked early in the cross-examination of the boy:

When were you discharged?

Digitized by Google

Campbell's answer was:

January 13, 1919.
The CHAIRMAN. What was your disability rating?
Mr. CAMPBELL. It was 80 per cent disability when I left.

Mr. LAMKIN. The report sent over showed 5 per cent disability. (Additional data submitted for the record follow:)

DEAR SIR: When you were surveyed by our representative last January you thought that you would like a course in drafting and mathematics. In view of the fact that you have had three years of high school, we would suggest to you that you write to the dean of Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N. J., and send to him a report of your marks from high school you last attended and see if he will admit you as a special student at Rutgers this fall.

We would suggest that you ask for a course in the civil engineering department, specializing in mathematics, mechanical drawing, and structural engineering. This will fit you up so that you can qualify for a draftsman of high grade.

Trusting that you will give this matter your immediate attention, so that we will be able to place you in training as soon as possible, we remain,

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL TRAINING,
New York City.

DEAR SIRS: Yours of the 4th received three minutes ago.

When you last wrote to me you wished to know if I passed the entrance examination for Rutgers. Having received a booklet from them, I decided that it was not what I wanted. All I want is a course in some trade school, not a college. A course in drafting, if nothing else, and at a college, would take considerable time more than at some trade school.

After my correspondence with said Rutgers, I thought my chances were entirely over, but from your last letter I have a chance which I hope will put me at school.

Kindly excuse mistakes, but promptness is what you wanted.

GORDON MCLOUD CAMPBELL.

Mr. GORDON MCLOUD CAMPBELL,
Middletown, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: After carefully considering the facts as you gave them to one of our representatives in talking with him about vocational education, under the Government plan for men disabled in military service, the board is undecided, if the facts are as reported, as to whether you can be awarded the training which we understand you desired, under the terms of the vocational act.

Whether or not the disability still exists it is not clear that it is likely to prove a permanent handicap in your former work.

Digitized by Google

It may be that the facts we have do not fully reflect your condition at this time. If you have tried to work, the result of this work, its effect upon you, the pay you are able to earn as compared to other men, etc., may clear up the situation. On the back of this letter you can give us this definite information, including the name of your employer.

Now, this is all important for you, and in order that full justice may be done you, you should carefully report to us just what has happened. If you have lately had to consult a doctor you should gve us a report from him.

What we want to know, for your own sake, is what effect your disability has upon your chances in industry. You might say whether your employer has had to favor you in any way because of it.

If, on the other hand, you have tried work of any kind, please tell us in just what way you are convinced that the injury will permanently handicap you for your work, and just as in the other case, if you have had to consult a doctor recently, send us a report from him.

Even though you are not permanently handicapped you may have certain rights to training which are largely determined by compensation, so please advise us if you have been granted compensation.

Assuring you of our utmost interest in your case in exact accordance with the terms of the vocational act, we are,

Very truly, yours,

S. E. FARWELL,
District Vocational Officer.

I certify this to be a true copy.

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION,
New York City, November 28, 1919.

Mr. GORDON CAMPBELL,
Middletown, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: On reviewing the papers connected with your application for vocational education, we find that the medical information in our possession is insufficient to establish, as required by act of Congress, the extent of the vocational handicap resulting from your disability.

Please present this letter to Dr. S. L. Truex, Middletown, N. Y., and request him to reexamine you and make a report on the inclosed blank.

Very truly, yours,

F. McK. BELL,
District Medical Officer.

[First indorsement.]

Respectfully forwarded.

This examination will also be used by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance in awarding or continuing your compensation. The report in quadruplicate should be forwarded as usual to the district supervisor, Public Health Service, 280 Broadway, New York City.

F. C. SMITH,
Surgeon, United States Public Health Service,
District Supervisor, District No. 2.

I certify this to be a true copy.

My commission expires February 13, 1925.

Mr. TOWNER. What does the discharge show?

Mr. LAMKIN. We have not his discharge.

Mr. TOWNER. The discharge shows 80 per cent?

Mr. ROBSION. They say he was discharged with 5 per cent?

Mr. LAMKIN. Director Jones says 5 per cent. Excuse me, I have a copy of the discharge from The Adjutant General's Office, that is in our files in the central office.

Digitized by Google

Mr. ROBSION. He says he was discharged January 19, 1919, and Jones said he was discharged in June.

Mr. LAMKIN. No; does it? I think it is discharged from the service January 13, 1919. He states June here; June 13. It should be January. It states he was discharged from the service in January. It states, discharged in January; and the award went back, no doubt.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a vote on the water-power bill, and we will adjourn until to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

(Thereupon, at 4 o'clock p. m., the committee adjourned until 10 o'clock a. m., Wednesday, May 5, 1920.)

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Wednesday, May 5, 1920.

The committee met at 10 o'clock a. m., Hon. Simeon D. Fess (chairman) presiding.

TESTIMONY OF MR. UEL W. LAMKIN, CHIEF, DIVISION OF REHABILITATION, FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION—Resumed.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Lamkin, if you are ready, you may resume your testimony.

Mr. LAMKIN. Yesterday afternoon, Mr. Chairman, I was discussing the testimony of the disabled men who were here. I will file for the record a copy of the naval discharge certificate which we got in the case of Gordon M. Campbell, a certified copy, which shows a 5 per cent disability, as it was reported to us. On the 8th of April we drew another discharge from the Navy, of which I will also file a certified copy. I think the 8th of April was the day the young man was here. This shows a disability not in line of duty of over 10 per cent, the medical history showing that his disability was existing prior to enlistment.

For the information of the committee one of the representatives of our office was here, heard the testimony, took charge of the young man, had him examined, awarded training, and on the basis of that examination the Bureau of War Risk Insurance determined him to be 50 per cent disabled and sent him a check for something over $600, but the original certificate which we have from the Navy is that he had less than a 5 per cent disability.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the young man from Middletown?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You had his case adjusted while he was here?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; and before he got out of town the Bureau of War Risk gave him a check for $600. I think he got it the next morning, but we approved him for training and arranged his training for him before he got out of town.

The last one of these men who testified was Samuel M. Freedman. For some reason—I do not know what—we did not get in contact with him until the 15th of March. He was approved for training on the 5th of April. The first information which we have is the 15th of March.

You had Congressman Rogers testifying before the committee, Mr. Chairman. He mentioned two men, and there was a third man whose name appeared in the hearings. I am not trying in any of this to criticize any other department or to give excuses for delays.

The first man, however, that Congressman Rogers discussed was John R. Barry. The Army record shows a disability of 10 per cent. He was discharged on the 16th of January, 1919. In a request of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance for information on the 1st of May, 1919, and the 31st of May, 1919, we were notified by the bureau that no compensation had been awarded, pending a medical report. The Federal board had forwarded the papers to the bureau under date of February 20. We had written to the bureau on the 21st of May urging immediate action. The bureau on the 26th of August, 1919, awarded him compensation at the rate of 10 per cent. On the information we had he was entitled to section 3 training and not section 2. He appealed or submitted new evidence, on which he was awarded section 2 training, and he entered training on the 3d of February, 1920, under the auspices of the board, and the Bureau of War Risk Insurance did not determine him as 80 per cent disabled until four days later, or the 7th of February. So we really acted four days before the Bureau of War Risk Insurance in that case which Congressman Rogers brought to your attention to show how much faster the bureau was than the board.

The CHAIRMAN. I recall distinctly that Congressman Rogers was very complimentary about the Bureau of War Risk. He thought it was functioning almost perfectly.

Mr. LAMKIN. The next man whom he discussed was Romaine G. C. Nichols, who was discharged on May 10, 1919. His discharge papers show that he had a disability of 5 per cent. He applied for compensation on the 3d of June, 1919. The case was finally approved by our board, in spite of the fact he was discharged with a 5 per cent disability, and training was awarded on the 15th of November, and the bureau did not give him compensation until December 6, or nearly three weeks later.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was that?

Mr. LAMKIN. That was Romaine G. C. Nichols, to whom Congressman Rogers referred.

Then, if you remember, in the afternoon Mr. Dallinger read a letter from a man named Lovett who was speaking about his boy, who had had some difficulty, he said, in getting vocational training, and for whom the bureau had never yet paid his hospital bill, incurred on account of an injury received in the service.

The CHAIRMAN. That was some one in Georgia or Alabama?

Mr. LAMKIN. Alabama, I think it was; Munroeville, Ala. The first information we have about Mr. Lovett reached our board on the 14th of July, 1919. He was surveyed in New Orleans on the 25th of July, 1919. It appears that the young man was in service approximately two months at a students' Army training corps when he was discharged. His discharge states that he had no wounds, and the soldier's statement was that he had no disability. After he got out of the service sarcoma developed and it resulted in the amputation of his leg. The physician at the New Orleans office held that the disability was not a result of his military duty and that his two months' service in the students' training corps could not have caused it, consequently the amputation was not due to military service and the young man was not entitled to training. His father appealed, filed affidavits from physicians stating that the trouble was due to military service, and exactly two months and two days after we first made contact with the man he was approved for a four-year course in medicine.

Mr. VESTAL. Was that boy's name Lovett?

Mr. LAMKIN. Lovett; yes, sir. That is in the testimony of Congressman Rogers. Mr. Dallinger read the letter. So he was a man who had been in the service two months in a students' Army training corps, where the district medical officer stated his disability was not due to the service, where he was discharged with no disability, where the man's father prepared his appeal and filed affidavits from the doctors and submitted them, and where the central office approved the appeal in two months and two days, and awarded the young man a four-year course in medicine.

The CHAIRMAN. That is found on page 864, and the letter was addressed to me.

Mr. LAMKIN. The board ordered him a four-year course in medicine. His brother writes under date of October 23 that it was advisable to defer commencement of his course until January, until the beginning of the second semester. The man himself also stated that his artificial limb was giving him some trouble, and we notified him it would be entirely agreeable to us for him not to enter school until the beginning of the second semester in January, 1920. The statement of Mr. Lovett is that the bureau has not yet acted on his case.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to say, Mr. Lamkin, that I will have to leave the committee with Judge Towner, as I am called to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. LAMKIN. You have had, Mr. Chairman, several of the employees of the board testifying here. You had Mr. Meyer, Mr. Noyes, Mr. Ives, Mr. Clark, Mr. Godwin, and Mr. Reid.

I think I stated yesterday that some of them were asked questions about which they tried to give information but concerning which they did not know. For instance, Mr. Godwin discussed, when he was on the stand, the matter of the employment of a stenographer in the Kansas City office, and at the same time stated that he was not in charge of the Kansas City office.

Mr. Noyes, I think, gave some testimony concerning contracts with schools. Mr. Noyes does not pass on contracts with schools; but it is not my purpose to criticize any of these men who have testified with the possible exception of one of them.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, in all fairness to all concerned some facts should be stated in regard to the testimony of William Reid.

In the first place, I would like to ask, as a personal privilege, that it be noted on page 882 of the record, part 14, that the chairman announced that some one was coming the following day from Philadelphia, and the record states that Mr. Lamkin said, "Who is it that is coming?" I think the stenographer got the name wrong because I made no such inquiry of the chairman. I think the chairman will bear me out that I have not inquired at any time who the witnesses were to be. I did hear after I got back to the office that Mr. Reid had been called from Philadelphia to testify.

There was so much misrepresentation in Mr. Reid's testimony, it was so contrary to the facts, and it reflected upon the integrity of men who are of the highest standing in their communities, that I feel called upon to present to this committee some evidence regarding that testimony.

In the first place, Mr. Reid was an adviser with the board at the Baltimore office. He stated here something of his qualifications from an educational standpoint. He was a trouble maker in the Baltimore office to such an extent that the district officer at Baltimore asked that he be transferred from the Baltimore office. The personnel officer, in the central office, suggested that he be discharged from the service. That was along about the last of July, or earlier. Mr. Reid asked that instead of his being discharged from the service he be transferred to another office. Now, that can not be given in official documents because it was a verbal conversation, but Mr. Reid was transferred at his request to Philadelphia. He had trouble in the Philadelphia office almost from the time he started. He was at Dr. Roland's request—Dr. Roland was then in charge of the Philadelphia office—transferred from the advisement section to Mr. Weaver's section, Mr. Weaver being the supervisor of training.

One of the first things with which I had to deal when I came to Washington was the question of Mr. Reid. I have here a communication signed by Mr. Charles E. Cullen, addressed to the Chief of Rehabilitation, with my name in parentheses, because Mr. Cullen knew I was coming just about the 15th of September. Reid had asked to be called into central office for a conference, and he was wired to come. The letter states:

With reference to your telegram calling this man to Washington for conference and received September 13, the following information will be of value:

For some time Mr. Weaver, supervisor of training, has been calling my attention to the fact that he thought Mr. Reid did not get into action on the cases submitted to him, and did not produce to full capacity because of a tendency to disputation or quibbling regarding points not complete enough, in his opinion, in the record of the case or file on his desk. This resulted in the exchange of memorandums with other sections, in some cases several times, and a resulting delay in getting action on the training recommendation.

I had one short talk with Mr. Reid myself on a couple of points he called my attention to regarding cases on his desk, and I suggested to him that he suppress any personal desire to dispute regarding action taken or disagreement with his opinion, for example, by the central office case board representative, but to take advantage of what might look like criticism and profit by it, making changes to meet it and overcome decisions looking bad to him, rather than disputing them.

Mr. Weaver finally brought down several cases having numerous notes thereon and asked me to take action. Mr. Reid had told me he was not well, and as I was willing to ascribe his attitude to nervousne s or ill-health conditions, I called Mr. Reid for a conference and directed him to take a vacation, due him. He stated that he was about to have an operation and desired to know if he could also take sick leave. I thought it would be advisable, and figured out that if he took earned leave and sick leave for a month he ought to come back in good condition. I did tell him, however, that on his return I would expect to find an elimination of the tendency to quibble on points and would expect him to push through training recommendations and get action. Mr. Weaver, happening along, I called him to the desk and explained what arrangements I was making with Mr. Reid.

Mr. Weaver is the supervisor of training in the Philadelphia office whom I told you yesterday had been offered $5,500 in charge of an industrial school at Scranton, Pa., and was resigning to accept that position.

There ensued a little conversation which betrayed that Mr. Reid's feelings toward Mr. Weaver, his supervisor, were not what they should be and I was obliged to put a stop to a kind of remarks tending to imply that Mr. Weaver was rather to blame, by stating that I would expect him to act under Mr. Weaver's directions and follow them, or I could not expect him to remain, or something to that effect. I then directed Mr. Reid to proceed on his vacation without delay, and to come back well and ready to act as desired.

Mr. Weaver tells me that Mr. Reid was tried out in the advisory section, but did not make a harmonious success there. Dr. Rowland desired Mr. Weaver to take him, but this was done only after a great amount of hesitation on Mr. Weaver's part, owing to the previous situation, and with an understanding that there would be a complete and harmonious change. This apparently does not exist, and I can not believe it is Mr. Weaver's fault.

The above may be of service to you in talking the situation over with Mr. Reid.

Very truly, yours,

CHAS. E. CULLEN,
District Vocational Officer No. 3.

Mr. Reid came to Washington and explained to me that he was going to have an operation for the removal of his tonsils. I talked the situation over with Reid and told him he ought to go and take his vacation and come back, and I believed he would feel well and would go back and get into harness again, and we would do the best we could, and I was sure he could make good, and so on.

In his testimony the other day Mr. Reid questioned the retirement of Mr. Cullen. I regretted very much to see Mr. Cullen retire. He had been a captain in the service, came to Philadelphia the latter part of July, and along in the latter part of October Washington University at St. Louis, which is his home, offered him the position as professor of commere, I think it was, to succeed a gentleman who was resigning to take the first vice presidency of one of the largest banks west of the Mississippi River. Cullen told me that he lived in St. Louis; that that was his home; that this was an opportunity he had been looking for; and he resigned to go back there. Cullen had been the efficiency expert for the city of St. Louis prior to going into the military service.

When Reid came back for employment he was sent back to the Philadelphia office. Along in the early part of February, as I remember, or probably it was the middle of January, he wrote to me stating he wanted to come down to Washington on official business to see the chief, and I replied that I knew of no official business which he could not communicate to me through the district officer at Philadelphia. He wired asking for authorization to come. I replied by letter stating that I would be very glad to see him at any time he would come, but until I knew what the official business was I did not care to spend the Government's money and the time of a Government employee in having him come down here. The criticism in a New York newspaper began about the middle of February, and a few days after that Mr. Reid wrote me a letter and stated that he would not come now, as he thought this matter was being handled through the newspapers.

On the 24th of February I got the following letter from Mr. Fuller, of the district office at Philadelphia:

The chief will recall that on a recent visit of the district vocational officer to Washington, some questions were discussed regarding the above-named man

Digitized by Google

[Mr. Reid]. The success of this man's work in this office has been under consideration of the supervisor for training and the district vocational officer for a considerable period of time. It has been felt that this man was not rendering full service to the organization.

I do not think I will burden the record with this whole letter but the purport of it is that he was assigned to work; that he did not put it across; that he was contentious with the supervisors and therefore they recommended that he be removed from the district at that time. He was not removed because——

Mr. ROBSION. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. LAMKIN. The 24th of February, 1920. He was not removed because of the fact we were short of men and I felt we could still get something out of Mr. Reid.

He made complaints, particularly in regard to two pieces of information that had not been given him, one was that copies of this miscellaneous 150 and of all instructions and supplies were not furnished to all staff members. I stated earlier, Mr. Chairman, that we sent out seven of these copies to be given to each one of the supervisors in the offices, and I saw no necessity of having a bunch printed for everybody who was employed by the office. They were available for anybody who wanted to see them. I have a copy by my desk. I probably refer to it two or three times a week, but the information is there.

The instruction letters and information letters were not all sent to Mr. Reid nor to anybody else connected with the offices. For instance, some instruction letters apply solely to the matter of making out accounts. They are printed in limited quantities and sent for distribution to the officials who are in charge of making out accounts. There are other instruction letters that apply solely to the question of placement. They are sent to placement officers. There are others that contain information concerning training facilities and are sent to training officials, and we are trying to keep down the use of paper and the reproduction of mimeograph and printed material.

The next thing Mr. Reid stated was that the letter of January 19 or January 21 was the only information that resulted from a conference of supervisors of training in Philadelphia. Mr. Reid was not the supervisor of training. He was asked to sit in in order that he should get what information he could. We were very glad to have him do it, but the supervisors who were there were each one expected to make a report as to what they did and the information that they got, and I am not going to put this in the record but if any of you care to see them, here are the written reports which the supervisors made concerning the subjects which were discussed at that meeting. Mr. J. B. Holloway is now the supervisor of training in Philadelphia, Mr. G. W. Weaver was the supervisor of training in Philadelphia. Mr. Reid was a subordinate member of the force and had no reason to have sent to him all the material sent to the supervisors.

The particular thing about which I want to testify this morning is the contract which he states we have with three institutions.

In the first place, he testified we had a contract with a university, I think he does not mention it by name, whereby we guarantee to send to it 1,000 students. I think I explained that some of these men were ready to enter universities or schools of higher than secondary grades but the classes were not open for them at that time. There is at Philadelphia the Temple University, which was founded by Dr. Russell H. Conwell, which is a unique institution, and which takes men at any time of any grade and gives them the training which they need. We entered into a contract with them by which they would accept at any time men of any grade educationally, I think, above the grammar school grades, any number of men up to 1,000. There is a good deal of difference between their being willing to accept men up to 1,000 and our guaranteeing to send them 1,000 men. We had 197 men there in January, 266 in February, and 312 in March, and it is what we call a receiving station, if you want to call it such, for men who want professional work or who are preparing for professional work. We can put them in there at any time and get them started on their training.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. You say that in his testimony he did not name the institution. Have you made a contract guaranteeing any other institution 1,000 men?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir; we have made no contract guaranteeing any institution 1,000. Mr. Reid wanted to be appointed coordinator at Temple University and could not do the work.

He also testified concerning the Boland School or the Allegheny Vocational School, at Pittsburgh. The testimony has stirred up some little disturbance in and around Pittsburgh; in fact, I have a letter here from Dr. W. M. Davidson, the superintendent of schools of the city of Pittsburgh, who wants to be called before this committee to testify as to the integrity and ability of Mr. Boland. I understand that Dr. Connolley, who was formerly the director of apprentice schools in the Carnegie Institute of Technology and now, by the appointment of Gov. Sproul, of Pennsylvania, is commissioner of labor and industry of the State of Pennsylvania, would like to be called to testify not only to Mr. Boland's integrity and responsibility but as to the character of work that is being done in the Allegheny Vocational School.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me say here, Mr. Lamkin, that in those individual cases that are of a subordinate character, the committee could not take the time to follow up. Your denial of the proposition is sufficient, if you do deny them, and elaborate explanation will not be necessary unless some of the members of the committee see fit to investigate the matter or desire to investigate further regarding the matter. It would be impossible for the committee to follow up every matter which, after all, is of comparative insignificance in itself or of easy explanation, and the committee are intelligent enough to know that without your having to go into an elaborate defense.

Mr. LAMKIN. I do not want to go into an elaborate defense, Mr. Chairman, but I would like to get enough in the record, in a way, to counteract the reflection which Mr. Reid cast on Mr. Boland and Mr. Weaver.

Mr. ROBSION. I think Mr. Lamkin ought to be permitted to state what the situation is.

Mr. LAMKIN. I will be very glad to state, if I may, what the situation is there. I do not except to call these other men or ask you to call these other men.

Mr. ROBSION. I would like to know about that contract.

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; I will be very glad to tell you about the contract, Mr. Chairman, if I may. Shall I go on?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. LAMKIN. As strange as it may seem there is no secondary trade school in the city of Pittsburgh, which is one of the industrial centers of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I have here the copies of the naval discharges of Gordon McLeod Campbell which I referred to earlier in my testimony to-day.

Mr. ROBSION. What does that show as to his disability?

Mr. LAMKIN. "Degree of disability, per centage, 5 per cent." This is the one that is dated on March 20, 1919. The other one, which reached us on the 8th of April, 1920, states:

Diagnosis, undertermined. Origin, not in line of duty. Existed prior to enrollment. Not due to misconduct.

"Degree of disability, percentage, disability 10 per cent or over"; but it states that the origin is not in line of duty and degree undetermined, and the one which we had up to the 8th of April showed his disability as 5 per cent. As I say, I am not trying to give excuses. I am trying to give reasons.

As I understand the situation, Andrew Carnegie, when he established the Carnegie Institute of Technology, thought he was going to establish a secondary trade school, but the temptation to make it a higher institution was so great that it was made into a higher institution of learning.

We found a great number of men who were not of college grade to whom we had to give elementary training instruction or elementary try-out work.

Digitized by Google

The school authorities of the city of Pittsburgh allowed us to use Schenley High School, their finest high-school building in the city, for the summer, and placed at our disposal Mr. F. W. Boland, who was the director of industrial education in the city of Pittsburgh, for the summer months, and for those summer months Mr. Boland got absolutely not a penny for his services. When fall came and there was an immediate necessity for such trade instruction in the city of Pittsburgh, and for that trade instruction to be continued, Mr. Boland stated to us that there was an abandoned school building—I do not know just in what section of Pittsburgh—in which he would be willing under proper guarantees to organize and maintain an elementary trade school for such boys as we would send there. That was at a time when it took a good deal of nerve to make any contract with the Federal Board for Vocational Education. We were under severe fire from some newspapers, the American Legion, and we had had the discussion in Congress as to appropriations, and it was a case where we had to have an immediate oulet or an immediate place to put our men for training. We made a contract with Mr. Boland and guaranteed that we would send him 150 men for whom we would pay a tuition rate of $35 per month for the first 150, $30 per month for any additional, provided the instruction was satisfactory.

As far as the tuition charge is concerned, Mr. Chairman, I would like to state that the Huntington School in Boston charges us $32 per month; the Rhode Island School of Design charges us $25 per month. The Dunwoody Institute at Minneapolis states that their actual cost per man is $29.87 per month on a 22-day basis. Mr. Gustafson, of the David Rankin Trade School in the city of St. Louis, told me it was costing that institution, which is very heavily endowed, about $300 per year for instruction, and a year is nine months, which is about $35 per month. We are having to pay the New York Electrical School $31.67 per month. The Brunelle School of Photography charges us $37.50 per month. The West Side Young Men's Christian Association School in New York City, from $25 to $35 per month; the Spring Garden Institute in Philadelphia, $30 per month; the Catholic University in Washington, D. C., from $25 to $30 per month; the Eastern College and Conservatory of Music at Manassas, Va., from $25 to $28 per month; the Cincinnati College of Embalming, $29 per month; the Case School of Applied Science, of Cleveland, $29 per month; the Greer College of Motor Mechanics at Chicago, $32 per month; the Seattle Industrial in Washington, from $25 to $32.50 per month.

I am told Mr. Boland mortgaged his home in order to get the equipment to go out there and establish that school and until the middle of January, or later than the middle of January, he states that he was not able to break even. He has some 31 or 32 teachers employed, and he is paying them anywhere from $140 to $325 per month. He is getting the best teachers he can secure, and is giving these men—65 per cent of them who are foreign born and a great percentage of them illiterate—he is giving them both the trade try out and regular courses in instruction in English.

The Pittsburgh Dispatch of Sunday, May 2, states that the Allegheny Vocational School was the pioneer in vocational training for disabled service men " in this part of the country." It states that the technical work includes electricity, machine-shop work, carpentry, cabinetmaking, sheet-metal work, shoe repairing, mechanical drawing, account keeping, and commercial work. It speaks of the fact that to make desirable citizens is the aim of the school, and that the Red Cross has organized a cafeteria where the boys can get their meals at cost. The people of Pittsburgh, I know, are giving the boys considerable attention. I know that during the summer Mr. Boland had arranged with the Y. W. C. A. to give the boys their meals at 25 cents, and he sat down with them and ate by their side and paid 75 cents for the same thing. I said to you the other day that Mr. McMurtrie stated we should establish special schools; and here is one special school which we have arranged for, and we get criticized for that.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Lamkin, you do not think that Mr. Boland is making an undue amount?

Mr. LAMKIN. He is not making an undue amount.

Mr. DALLINGER. And what would you say as to the charge by Mr. Reid that there were hundreds of boys sent out there and that no system of checking up was employed; that the bill came every month from Mr. Boland for so many hundred boys at $30 or $35 a month, and that there was no follow-up system or checking up to ascertain whether or not these boys did receive the instruction; that, so far as the office in Philadelphia was concerned, those boys might have left the school or might have been staying out and having a good time; that there was no checking up to see that those boys were actually there or how they were getting along or what sort of instruction they were receiving?

Mr. LAMKIN. I think that the statement is not true.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will you tell the committee just exactly what system your board has in regard to the school at Pittsburgh?

Mr. LAMKIN. Well, the original reports are made by Mr. Boland. They are checked against the records not only in the Philadelphia office but against the records in this office. Not only that, but we have a Pittsburgh office, which is under the direction of Mr. W. W. Stamm, who is the direct agent of the board.

Mr. DALLINGER. And it is a part of his duty to visit that school?

Mr. LAMKIN. To visit that school and to see that the boys are there in training. We pay Mr. Boland in two checks, it is true.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the third institution about which Mr. Reid spoke is the institution at Longwood, N. J.—the Longwood reconstruction center. Could I speak about this out of the record?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. LAMKIN. Mr. Burroughs was asking about Alfred University. The New York State School of Clay Work and Ceramics is at Alfred, N. Y. We have a contract with them for some time and there are probably 25 students there now. The department which we have to approve is that department which gives work in ceramics and for which the expense runs from $250 to $400 a year. For the higher-priced courses we asked them to submit to this office first.

I would like to add this statement which I think the Congress should know and which they should approve rather than disapprove, and that is that the small number of men who have been placed after training is due to two things: First, that it is a comparatively small number except those of major amputations who were in training prior to September, and, that the courses are longer in America than they are in other countries. I think that is a credit to the liberality of America and to the liberality of the American Congress rather than a criticism of it.

Digitized by Google

The next testimony to which I would like to refer is the testimony given in part 16 in regard to the testimony which was given by Mr. Littledale on Friday, the 23d of April.

Mr. DALLINGER. What page?

Mr. LAMKIN. I would like to take up page 958 first in regard to the transfer of Eugene H. Meyer and William C. Ives from the New York office. I would like to submit copies of telegrams, one of April 17, as follows:

CLERK,
Federal Board Vocational Education,
New York.

Make no transfer out of New York of Meyer, Ives, or Noyes.

Immediately following the testimony given by Mr. Littledale, I got Mr. Clark over the phone and asked him to wire what disposition had been made of these three men, and I have this telegram from him:

Meyer, Ives here. I understand I am complying with orders from you.

Mr. Myer and Mr. Ives were not transferred from New York. Mr. Meyer was here on Tuesday, I think it was, before his testimony was given, on Friday, and I stated to him and he agreed with me that if he were sent out of New York in the regular course of business after that date to visit some institutions in follow-up work or to see some of the men, there could be no objection to it. Mr. Ives was asked to go down to Cape May, N. J., in response to a telegram which was sent by Julia Wells, director of the home service of the American Red Cross, reading as follows:

Please set early date for visit to Cape May Hospital.

I think there can be no question but that if in the regular course of business if any of these men are to be sent out for a day or two or for a longer time they should go, but they have not been and will not be definitely transferred from the New York office. I understand Mr. Meyer did have orders to go to northern New York, and these orders were cancelled upon definite instructions from the Washington office.

Mr. Littledale also referred to Mr. Noyes and stated that "I am informed that an explanation was demanded of William Noyes, and that there is in the possession of Mr. Lamkin a two-pages letter from Mr. Noyes."

When Mr. Noyes left the hearing here that day he rode over with me and Mr. Clark to the office in Washington and I said to him, Mr. Noyes, I am afraid that you have not emphasized the fact sufficiently that the conditions about which you complained were in January, 1919, instead of January, 1920. These letters which you say were written to central office were written to Dr. J. C. Miller, who left the service of the board in September, 1919, and were dated January, 1919.

When he got back to New York, I assume when he got back, he wrote this letter which reads as follows:

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION,
New York City, April 14, 1920.

From: William Noyes.
To: Uel W. Lamkin.

MY DEAR MR. LAMKIN: You seemed this noon to speak with some acerbity of my testimony before the congressional committee and implied that it was a mere stirring up of mud which had already settled to the bottom, or of washing our dirty linen in public; as if what I said had no larger purpose.

On the contrary, I tried to bring out five points:

1. The need of large enough salaries to attract men of sufficient caliber to do the work efficiently. (1) As regards the D. V. O. and concurrently the release of this position from Civil Service rules. (2) As to the vocational advisers and training officers that they should get at least $3,000.

2. Decentralization of authority. It is a simple and undeniable fact that from the beginning until now that the New York office has contended for this, and it has only reluctantly been granted.

3. That the failures of the New York office have been due primarily to bad internal administration. There was no way to show this and to clear central office of responsibility except by giving the facts.

4. To emphasize the importance of follow-up work. To do this necessitated the revelation of difficulties interfering therewith.

5. To show that matters are improving. To do this it was necessary to show in what a bad state they were during the Griffin administration.

Even when I am not under oath, it is not my habit of mind to tell half truths. There was to me every evidence that the congressional committee intended to go to the bottom of every charge. It was therefore my intention not to evade the issue at any point or to blur the facts. This seemed to me to be no time for the board to whitewash itself, and I thought there was no way so sure of defending the board as to steal the ammunition of its opponent by frankly recognizing our errors, not of will but of judgment, and to point out the ways in which they are being corrected and should be corrected.

Under the method of question and answer, I was not able to do this, as I had hoped, in a connected and organized manner. I was faced with the complex problem (1) of counteracting the testimony of avowed critics (not to say enemies) of the board, (2) of answering the pointed questions frankly, and (3) of making my five points as indicated above. I leave it to you to say whether I succeeded.

I fear you do not realize, Mr. Lamkin, the depth of dissatisfaction among the rank and file of the New York office at their inability to express themselves, particularly in the way of constructive criticism. There is not and never has been ample or regular opportunity for the exchange of opinions in conferences. It has always been said and is now being said that we are going to have conferences, but we do not have them. There is no frank and cordial way of dissipating doubts and suspicions, no face-to-face method of diffusing information.

Men in the routine and under the pressure of the daily job have little energy or inclination to be appealing to Washington. When I have done it, the blame has been thrown back on our internal organization, as if we were all equally at fault.

Take for instance the failure of the New York office to carry out the instruction of October 29. Not for weeks did the office even know that there were any such instructions, nor for weeks later, how to carry them out. If you do not already know the facts, please ask Mr. Hamilton in what a mess we are still about instructions 33 and 43.

The statement was made by Mr. Noyes that there seemed to be a paralysis of the New York office, I think, in the month of December. I can answer that statement by showing that Mr. Farwell was barely able to be at the office at that time, and one of the reasons for his resignation in early January was that he had completely broken down physically. I do not know that you quite realize the intense physical strain there is on men in this work. For instance, the chief of the division, Dr. Chandler, went home and was in bed for six weeks after he left this job. Dr. H. L. Smith, immediately preceding me as chief of the division, had a complete nervous breakdown. Dr. C. A. Prosser, director of the board, when he left here, had a blood pressure of 60, and was in bad physical condition for weeks. Mr. Griffin testified when he left the New York office he took sick leave, and Mr. Farwell, I will say, left on the advice of a physician. It is an intense nervous mental strain on the men who are handling the men's problems in this work.

Conferences on either of these matters would have revealed to department heads the absurd and impossible positions into which we were being maneuvered.

I have faith in your sound judgment that you will see the necessity of cordial consultation and conference within the local office and of free flow of information and discussion between the central and local office.

It is the very lack of these, not only a year ago but even now to a large degree, that has created a state of affairs by which some of us have been driven against our will to lay bare in public difficulties which might better have been settled privately.

I beg to assure you of my highest respects and most cordial desire to further the interests of the board and the welfare of the disabled soldiers.

Yours, very truly,

WILLIAM NOYES.

My reply, Mr. Chairman, I am ready to say, will show whether or not we are making reprisals in the case of Mr. Noyes.

APRIL 17, 1920.

Mr. WILLIAM NOYES,
Federal Board for Vocational Education,
No. 23 West Forty-third Street, New York City.

MY DEAR MR. NOYES: I labor under the difficulty of being considered harsh in my statements when I become positive. I am sure that I have no bitterness or resentment toward you or anyone in the New York office who were here before the committee or who were not here.

2. You understand, of course, that I spoke positively, and believe you give me credit for honesty in my opinions and intentions, as well as I give you credit for honesty of yours.

3. I have been at the investigation more or less since it began. I have seen the entire Washington staff of the New York Evening Post sitting there day after day. I understand that they have turned their entire Washington bureau to the matter of the investigation. I can not believe that they will give the same publicity to the good work that the board has done that they have given and are giving to the situation or things which may be developed by irresponsible parties. They will, therefore, take the statements which responsible men like you and others from the New York office made and distort them, not for the "benefit" of the committee but for the "benefit" of the public.

Mr. Noyes had stated that he was giving his testimony for the "benefit" of the committee.

4. I have no objections to your speaking your mind freely at any time to any person on any subject. I know you well enough to believe that you would not brook any interference, and you should not even if I were inclined to try to interfere. I agree with points 1, 2, 4, and 5 of your statement in your letter of April 14. I am reserving any statement on point 3, as it is not my purpose and will not be my purpose to criticize anyone in the district office. In partnership arrangements all of us must share alike any criticism and any commendation.

That is the one in which he refers to the Griffin administration.

5. As to the decentralization of authority I must disagree with you, that it has been reluctantly granted. I can not speak for the period prior to Septem ber 15, but I know that since September 15 authority has been granted as rapidly as the districts have shown themselves capable of assuming authority in carrying the work. In fact, I think that in some instances the burden has been placed upon them before they demonstrated their ability to carry it.

6. In regard to payments of money and employment of personnel, we are directed by the Treasury Department and civil service regulations. We are trying to work out our problem as quickly as possible. I believe we can work it out from one central authority, where we have the Treasury and Civil Service Commission to better advantage, than we can from 14 or more widely separated centers.

7. I thoroughly agree with your criticism concerning conferences and the acceptance of constructive suggestions. I have no doubt but that your testimony before the committee had a good effect on the committee, and when the testimony is read by members who were not there I believe that it will have a good effect on them. I never questioned in any way your sincerity or your ability. I know of no one who has.

8. I do not believe that there is any misunderstanding, but I do think that you understand now better than you have before that the way is open for a frank expression of your opinion which will be welcomed at any time. With assurance of my high respect and esteem and, with best wishes, I am,

Very truly, yours,

UEL W. LAMKIN,
Chief, Division of Rehabilitation.

Mr. Littledale on page 944, referred to records and returns.

That, you understand, is a list of all the forms used in central office. A report to central office from the field is made on official forms. If they all came in on every day it would be a very formidable list. There may be more paper work than is necessary. We are cutting it down as rapidly as we can.

The 107 forms are the ones which control the entrance of the man into training and the money payments, and we had seven copies made for the following reason. Instead of writing a covering letter and sending it with the form, an extra carbon was made and filed in the district to show the form was sent. One of those carbons was stamped when it got into central office, stamped "Received" and sent back to the district office. We had to notify the Bureau of War Risk Insurance that the man had entered training so that one of these several copies was sent the Bureau of War Risk Insurance instead of writing a letter to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance that the man had entered training. One of the copies went to the Records Division and was filed in the man's folder, so that they would have the full information about him. Three went to the auditing and disbursing sections and to the Treasury Department. That was done for the purpose of saving typing by the central office, and it took no more typing in the district office. That number of forms has since been reduced to four.

Forms 190 and 190–A are merely orders for supplies and receipts for same.

Mr. DALLINGER. When did you expect to finish your statement, Mr. Lamkin?

Mr. LAMKIN. I think it will take me probably 30 minutes to finish my direct statement.

Mr. TOWNER. You may proceed.

Mr. LAMKIN. In the exhibit which is submitted you are asked particularly that attention be called to instruction No. 90.

Mr. DALLINGER. What page is that?

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. Page 952. Your attention is called to section 2 in regard to instruction 90. Here is a copy of instruction 90.

I agree that you can hang a good many men on detached sentences taken from various statements. But in section 2 I would like for you to read the sentence that—

The disabled men are entitled to know whether or not they are entitled to section 2 training and central office must know the training load in order that the necessary preparation may be made and the necessary staff provided.

I think that is common sense.

Section 3 has not been called to your attention.

Instruction 82 authorizes the district offices to place men in training if eligibility for training has been determined by central office. The representatives of the central office case board have authority to approve eligibility. Cases may be presented to one of these men at any stage in the progress of the case.

SEC. 6. The central office case-board representative may pass on the same case any number of times. He may change the eligibility rating, provided he never changes a rating from eligible to noneligible except as provided in paragraphs 10 and 11 below, and provided he notifies central office of each change.

Sections 10 and 11 state that if you have told a man he is eligible to training you can not change it. If you have not told the man and find out that clearly you are in error, you may change the rating.

SEC. 7. The idea back of the program outlined in these instructions is that of giving service to the disabled man. If a man calls at a district office, he should go out with a definite instruction in regard to his case. Central office case-board representatives are directed, however, not to interview disabled men. They are to pass on the actual evidence which is in the man's folder.

Always bear in mind that these central office case-board representatives are the men who are to pass on the legal evidence in the case and if you are interested in knowing what some of the legal evidence is, instruction 6 here will show you the 15 or 16 different kinds of honorable discharges that are set out. There are 7 or 8 different kinds of Navy discharges that are used. There are several other kinds of Army discharges other than honorable discharges and there are several from the Navy, and you can not expect the large number of men to know all these conditions.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Are those men who are presenting these attorneys or lawyers?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir; these are men trained in Army paper work, sergeants or lieutenants who have handled Army papers all the time. It is all very fully set out here in the instructions what should be done. Some of the men are not lawyers but they are all of them Army men.

Mr. TOWNER. Those are cases that are considered by you only on appeal?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir; every case that comes in to the eligibility man comes from the district office.

Mr. TOWNER. It is not the case board in Washington?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir; in the district office.

SEC. 9. The chief of the division expects to transfer central office case board representatives from one district to another as occasion demands. At no time, however, will the district be without the services of a representative of central office authorized to give eligibility ratings and to close their cases.

The idea is, we are giving them the service.

The chairman of the committee suggested I file a statement concerning the follow-up work which was being done by the board. I ask the privilege of filing it in accordance with the chairman's suggestion. I spoke to him about it yesterday, and he said it would be very valuable and should be filed.

Digitized by Google

With the exception of that and the following statement, that closes, so far as I know, the definite direct testimony which I would like to present.

I would like to make this statement:

It is far more important that the men disabled in the service be adequately provided for at the present time than it is to recount real or alleged delays of 12 months ago. To secure equitable laws and efficient administration is the common duty and problem of the Congress, of executive Government agencies, and of the American people.

(For your information, I will say that I wrote this statement nearly two weeks ago.)

To help obtain the results we desire, the following constructive suggestions are submitted for the consideration of this committee:

1. Provide vocational training, with maintenance pay, for all men who have been honorably discharged and who have a disability of 10 per cent or more incurred in or traceable to the service. This can be accomplished by the passage of the Rogers bill, which was introduced in Congress late in 1919, or by the passage of some other bill of similar nature. As has been repeatedly stated, the law now provides for training, with maintenance pay, only of such men who "in the opinion of the Federal Board for Vocational Education are in need of vocational rehabilitation to overcome the handicap of such disability." Training, without maintenance pay, is provided for those who are "not included in section 2 hereof," but who have been disabled under circumstances entitling them to compensation.

At no time was there ever legal authority for training all men who had been honorably discharged from the service and who had a disability which was rated as 10 per cent or more.

I understand that the economists feel that a man properly trained is worth $1,000 a year more to himself and $4,000 more a year to the community.

The statement, however, that all such men would be trained has been widely circulated, and thousands of men were discharged from the Army believing they would receive vocational training but who are not entitled to it under the original rehabilitation act or under the amendment of July 11, 1919. The original act provided that men who were awarded compensation from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and who are "unable to carry on a gainful occupation, to resume his former occupation, or to enter upon some other occupation, or having resumed or entered upon such occupation is unable to continue the same successfully," should receive vocational rehabilitation. The Bureau of War Risk Insurance awards no compensation for less than 10 per cent disability.

This no doubt was originally the basis of the statement that all men who had been 10 per cent disabled were entitled to training, and the latter requirements were not emphasized. As to who was originally responsible, I do not know, but statements which led men to believe they would be given training if at least 10 per cent disabled appeared in widely circulated literature sent out by a legally constituted Government agency and were repeated to the men by regularly appointed Government employees. These "promises" should be redeemed by the Government.

To train all disabled men is economically a sound policy. Personally, I believe in proper vocational training for all enlisted men regardless of disability if they desire it. Certainly the returns which will come to the Nation from a group of men properly trained for their vocations are more than justified solely from an economic viewpoint.

The best estimate which I am able to make of the money cost of such training is given in the letter submitted to Congressman J. J. Rogers, of Massachusetts, which he has in turn submitted to this committee. It must always be borne in mind that no one can make a very accurate estimate of how many men are entitled to training or of how many men will accept it, after they have been definitely awarded training. When it is determined, however, how many men are entitled to training and will accept, the cost will be approximately $155 per man per month under the present rate of maintenance pay. The cost will approximate $175 per man per month under the rate as proposed by the Darrow bill.

I understand that was reported out favorably on the floor of the Senate yesterday.

It may be well for Congress to consider carefully limitations concerning length of courses, amounts to be allowed for books, tuition, and supplies, and the length of time the man may have before finally accepting or rejecting vocational training after a specific course has been outlined and offered, in order that provision may be made for raising the money necessary to carry the work through to successful conclusion.

In other words, if training is open to all of these men, you have such questions as this arising, Shall we pay a man who is attending night school and who receives training with pay? He is now getting training without pay. Shall we give training pay to a student who spends all his time in training, although it is to correspondence schools? There are a number of these administrative difficulties which will have to be thrashed out.

On the basis of present figures it is our best judgment that between one hundred and thirty and one hundred and thirty-five thousand men would accept vocational training if the law was liberalized as set forth above, and the approximate cost would be between four hundred and fifty and five hundred million dollars. The cost of this entire program is approximately the cost of 20 days of war.

2. Offer vocational training to widows and orphans of men who were in the military service. There are approximately 22,000 widows, of whom 10,000 have children. A widow without children now receives $25 a month from the Government. The maximum for a widow with children is $52.50 per month. On this amount the widow can not support herself and her children properly. The average widow must, therefore, work in order to earn a living for herself and for her children. It is not only sound economic policy for the Government but simple justice to the woman that she be given such a course of training as will enable her to provide sufficiently for herself and those dependent upon her.

Digitized by Google

It may be urged that the allowances stated do not include the insurance allotments due her from the Government. But insurance payments should be regarded as a business matter just as income from any property the husband might leave. Such payments can not be regarded as entirely cancelling the Government's obligations.

Thousands of children who were deprived of their fathers by the late war will lose the opportunity for such an education as is the right of every American child. The Government, in whose service the father lost his life, should see to it that the child has adequate preparation to meet successfully his future problems.

3. Provide that American citizens who were disabled in the service of our Allies should receive the same benefits as those who were disabled in the service of the United States.

They were all fighting for a common cause. It seems unfair to the man who volunteered and went overseas in the Canadian or other service, who was discharged with a disability and returned to his home in the United States, and who now can get vocational rehabilitation only by appealing to the Canadian Government. The Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks has been providing for these cases. They should be provided for by the Government of the United States.

4. Create a revolving fund which would enable the board to either loan a man a half month's training pay at the beginning of his course of training, or a law should be passed which would provide that a man should be given a half month's training pay on the day he entered his course of training. Creation of such a revolving fund would have to be worked out carefully after consultation with representatives of the Treasury Department.

5. Make Army camps available for training centers. Regardless of whether or not the above suggestions concerning the extension of benefits of training to a large number of men are carried out, training facilities of this country are fast being exhausted. There are several Army camps which should be made available for large training centers. In some of them there is a large amount of excellent material for various kinds of trade instruction, placed there under the supervision and direction of the Surgeon General. As these camps are being abandoned by the War Department, they should be held intact so that men who are willing to begin their vocational training in such establishments can be sent there, where they can live at a reasonable cost and secure trade instruction not surpassed in permanent trade schools. This would relieve the Government of establishing special trade schools, yet would allow men taking vocational training in such units to receive their instructions in the company of men of their own age and of like experience.

6. Provide sufficient hospital facilities. There is at present pending before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a bill providing for the appropriation of sufficient money to erect Public Health Service hospitals for the care of men who were disabled in the service and who are still in need of medical attention.

Either this bill should be passed at once or existing Government institutions should be made available, such alterations as are necessary made, these to be supplemented by such additional new facilities as are needed.

Digitized by Google

I understand that was proposed on the floor of Congress a few days after this was written. I think Mr. Elliott, speaking for the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, in general debate on the sundry civil appropriation bill, proposed it.

In other words, training and treatment should be simultaneous.

In any hospital program there should be a definite provision for beginning vocational training during the convalescent period. In other words, training and treatment should be simultaneous.

7. Pass the Darrow bill, which will provide sufficient money on which men in training can live comfortably while taking training. This bill has recently passed the House. The men in vocational training should live on their income, but their income should be sufficient that they can have the proper food, proper clothing, a reasonable amount of proper entertainment, and not be compelled to worry over the lack of sufficient money for comfortable living.

8. Remove or materially increase salary limitations. It has been repeatedly stated before this committee that the type of man who is needed to advise disabled soldiers can not be secured or held for any length of time under the present salary limitations as imposed by Congress. The board fully agrees with that statement. We have lost since last July more than 150 men on account of the salary limitation. We can not attract men to a temporary service which requires a commanding personality, infinite patience, sound judgment, and unusual tact at the salaries now provided.

9. Remove civil-service restrictions in the employment of staff members. While the Civil Service Commission has been very reasonable in its relations with the board, yet the immediate necessity of making the needed appointments for a period which will be determined by the time necessary to complete the work of rehabilitation should not be delayed by requiring men to pass civil-service examinations before permanent appointment. A number of men who would be attracted to the service otherwise do not care to take civil-service examinations. It is hard to set up a standard which is sufficiently flexible to secure proper men and yet sufficiently rigid as to insure competent ones. The administration officers should be men of sufficient ability to pick their own assistants and of sufficient courage to discharge them if they are not rendering satisfactory service. They should not be restricted in selection by civil-service requirements nor required to file charges before discharging inefficient employees.

10. Consolidate or coordinate more closely the three Government agencies dealing with disabled men. At present there are three Government agencies dealing with disabled men, namely, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, which decides question of compensation; the Federal Board for Vocational Education, which decides questions of vocational training; and the United States Public Health Service, which makes the examinations for both the bureau and the board. There is at present a closer cooperation between these three agencies than there has ever been. In several of the districts the offices of the three agencies are in the same building. In the other districts plans are under way to locate the several offices in the same building. But the disabled man has a right to deal with one Government agency, which will take care of both his physical and his vocational restoration. The doctor who examines the man to determine his physical disability and the person who passes on the question of whether or not that man is entitled to compensation should be able to pass on the question of whether or not he is entitled to vocational education. In other words, there should be one section of one organization which would determine what treatment was necessary, what compensation was just, and what vocational education was desirable. In all necessary cases treatment and training should be simultaneous, both before and after the man has been discharged from the hospital. There should be no hiatus in beginning of his compensation pay after his training pay ends, and there should be no duplication of payments by the board and the bureau.

As stated above, the relations of the board with the bureau are reasonably close. Every effort is being made to prevent any delays, or any duplication of payments, but no such results can be accomplished with separate disbursing offices for each of the organizations, as can be accomplished with a single disbursing officer for the joint establishment. The quickest way to secure the desired results, with the least confusion, is to put the rehabilitation division of the Federal board, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and the Public Health Service under one assistant secretary in one of the executive departments. As to whether or not this is the most practical way at this time is a matter for careful consideration.

The consolidation of the three agencies will result in benefit

(a) To the disabled man, who will be required to deal with but one Government agency—in whose relationship to the Government there will be no confusion as to whether he should communicate with the board or with the bureau or with the Public Health Service—who has a right to look to the Government as a whole, not to several branches of the Government for any care he may need and for the rights and benefits to which he may be entitled.

(b) It will be economical for the Government. It will permit the elimination of duplicate records; it will prevent the employment of unnecessary clerks making the same records, the transferring of information from one bureau to another, and the use of men and money in the effort to direct the soldier to the correct Government agency.

(c) It will be beneficial to the work for which the Federal Board for Vocational Education was established. It was created to act as a cooperative agency with similar boards in the various States for promotion of vocational education. The passage of the Fess-Kenyon bill, providing for the rehabilitation of those disabled in industry, also provides for the Federal Board to act as a cooperating agency with the States in that work. The board is peculiarly well constituted to properly carry out the functions imposed upon it by these two measures. The present vocational rehabilitation act imposes executive duties and responsibilities upon the board. The training of men disabled in the military service is a function of the Federal Government, not of the States. It should be administered through an executive organization.

There is no more important function of the Government than the promotion of public education. The Federal Board for Vocational Education should be able to confine all of its energies to the carrying out of the duties for which it is created and the duties which will be imposed upon it by the passage of the bill providing for the rehabilitation of men disabled in industry.

It has been suggested that the Rehabilitation Division of the Federal Board should be consolidated with the Compensation Division of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, under the Treasury Department. The specific department of the Government under which it is placed is of secondary importance, but the physical or vocational rehabilitation of the disabled man should not be confused with money payments to him. Medical treatment and vocational training are worth more to these men than money alone. Vocational rehabilitation is not a function of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. The present task of the board in relation to disabled men is of equal importance with that of the bureau; and in any consolidation or coordination the work of the board, that of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and that of the Public Health Service should stand on equal footing and be equally recognized.

But any consolidation would be extremely unwise, unless the Bureau of War Risk Insurance was not only permitted but required to make its compensation awards in the several districts throughout the country as the Federal Board for Vocational Education is now making its awards of vocational training. At present the Bureau of War Risk Insurance has not decentralized its activities to the extent that is absolutely necessary. If the board and bureau were consolidated under the present laws governing the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, much of the beneficial effects of decentralization at present practiced by the board will be lost. Any really successful and satisfactory plan will require the decentralization of authority, the awarding of benefits, and the disbursing of money from district offices throughout the country, and not from a centralized establishment in Washington.

Provision should also be continued whereby medical care of men in training suffering from disabilities not incurred in the service could be provided, as the Federal Board is now providing it. The Bureau of War Risk Insurance at present has no authority to provide medical treatment for disabilities other than those acquired in the service, even though such medical treatment may be necessary in order that a man may continue in vocational training.

It must be borne in mind that the rehabilitation of disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines is the work of but a few years, while that of the Compensation Division of the War Risk Bureau, as well as other divisions of the bureau, will last many years. As at present organized, the machinery which is set up to provide for rehabilitation can be abolished when the work is completed. It would be much more difficult to do so if it were a part of a permanent organization like the Compensation Division of the bureau.

As stated above, the problem is in many respects an educational one. If the Smith-Towner bill were a law and there was a secretary of education in the Cabinet, the vocational reeducation and rehabilitation of disabled soldiers might be a proper function for a bureau in that executive department, if properly coordinated with the two other Government agencies.

12. Create a special or a joint committee in Congress to deal with problems affecting disabled men. It is with no intention of any criticism of Congress or of its rules that the suggestion is made that the care and treatment of disabled men is of sufficient importance to justify careful study and consideration, either by a special committee or by a joint committee chosen from the membership of committees to whom "soldier legislation" is referred. According to present practice in the House all matters dealing with vocational rehabilitation are referred to the Committee on Education, those dealing with compensation for the same injury to the same man to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, those which seek to provide hospital care for the recurrence of that same disability to the same man to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, some of those which deal with the establishment of necessary training centers for that same man to the Committee on Military Affairs, those dealing with general matters of soldier-benefit legislation (affecting the same man) to the Committee on Ways and Means, and those dealing with providing the necessary money for all the above objects to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Members of Congress know the way by which consideration of all these matters by any body can best be brought about. The way is of little importance. The material consideration is that immediate action be taken looking toward putting into effect the intention of Congress and the providing of adequate medical treatment, care, compensation, and vocational training for all those disabled in the country's service.

That concludes my statement.

Mr. TOWNER. The committee will now take a recess until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

(Thereupon, at 11.45 a'clock a. m., the committee took a recess until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee reassembled at 2 o'clock p. m., pursuant to recess, Hon. Horace M. Towner presiding.

Mr. TOWNER. The committee will come to order. I want to ask you, Mr. Lamkin, about the difficulty you say you have had with securing staff officers. Of course, we all of us realize that, naturally, the work is of such a nature as to make it difficult to secure properly qualified staff officers. I wanted to ask you if the salary limitation was removed so that you could increase the salary of the staff officers moderately, that you think you would be able to secure competent staff officers for the performance of the work in the various districts?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; I think we could.

Mr. TOWNER. As I understood you, you thought that, perhaps, the increase from $2,400 to $3,000 would be a sufficient increase for the staff officers, of your divisions?

Mr. LAMKIN. I would not say that we would increase all of our men from $2,400 to $3,000.

Mr. TOWNER. I understand that.

Mr. LAMKIN. But for the class you are now paying $2,400, $3,000 would get you the men whom we need for that.

Mr. TOWNER. With regard to the heads, the divisional advisers, what salaries do they get now?

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. $4,000 is the maximum.

Mr. TOWNER. That, I believe, you think, ought to be increased to $5,000?

Mr. LAMKIN. I think New York and Chicago would be worth $6,000, some others $5,000, and others still less. May I say this, Mr. Chairman? The salary limitation given us is a certain number of men at from $3,500 to $4,000. In that class we are paying the district officer in some of the smaller districts, like New Orleans and Minneapolis, $3,750, but not paying the maximum. I think it is not necessary to increase those men beyond $3,750. There is one peculiar provision of that salary limitation. The next class says 28 "at" $3,500; 70 "at" $3,000, and the comptroller has held that we can not pay anybody $3,250 because there are a certain number of people at $3,500 and a certain number of people at $3,000, but if it was a sliding scale in there, with the same amount of money, we could improve the service. Our rule is not to increase any of the salaries more than $250 at a time, and as they show their worth we increase them.

Mr. TOWNER. If the salary limitations were removed, you would increase the salary of the two principal officers, New York and Chicago, the heads of the offices at New York and Chicago, to $6,000?

Mr. LAMKIN. We would like to do that.

Mr. TOWNER. But you think that the balance of that increase could be secured at not to exceed $4,000?

Mr. LAMKIN. I think so; not to exceed $4,000.

Mr. TOWNER. How many, or, perhaps, I ought to ask what proportion of the staff officers that you are now paying $2,400 and ought to increase to $3,000 would there be?

Mr. LAMKIN. That is a hard question to answer.

Mr. TOWNER. Of course, I suppose it would be only an approximation. I am just asking you for the proportion.

Mr. LAMKIN. I would say not to exceed 50 per cent.

Mr. TOWNER. These staff officers are, and must be in in order to perform their work well, rather a superior class of men and more or less experts?

Mr. LAMKIN. They must be, and it is temporary service; two or three years' service.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, you have in each of the divisional offices the representative or representatives of the central office in Washington to determine at the divisional office as speedily as possible the right of the applicant for training?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. There is no interference, as I understand you, in the determination or action of these representatives of the board unless there is an appeal taken by the applicant?

Mr. LAMKIN. None.

Mr. TOWNER. Whenever the action is favorable for training, that action goes, as a matter of course, when it is reported to the board?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. There is not necessarily a review, as to whether or not in the opinion of the central board in Washington the action was justifiable?

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. The review is made to pass on the kind of work which the respesentative of the office is doing and not for the purpose of overruling him to the disadvantage of the boys.

Mr. TOWNER. You think, then, that that cause of delay in the placement of the boys has been eliminated by this action of the board?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Who has the determination of the selection of the schools?

Mr. LAMKIN. That is determined in the districts by the supervisor of training, always subject to direction of the superintendent of training in the central office.

Mr. TOWNER. Does the action of the divisional officer with regard to the placement have to be examined and passed upon by the central office here in Washington before the boy can be placed in training?

Mr. LAMKIN. No, sir. There are two exceptions to that in general, Mr. Chairman. In the first place, the medical colleges, we use the list that is approved by the American Medical Association. With the commercial schools we use the lists that are approved by the American Association of Commercial Colleges. The reason for the latter is that it is easier to supervise the work of a number of men in one institution rather than scatter the men into many institutions. On the other hand, if there is any boy who wants to attend any commercial institution that is of standard grade, he can do so.

Mr. TOWNER. With regard to the giving of training to tubercular patients, those suffering from epilepsy and from mental diseases, as I understand you, the difficulty and any delay is caused for want of hospital accommodations, and is a matter for the treatment and determination of the board of health?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir; the Public Health Service.

Mr. TOWNER. So that there is no delay in the treatment or in the giving of vocational aid if it shall be recommended by the Public Health Service on the part of the board?

Mr. LAMKIN. None except on account of lack of facilities which you have mentioned.

Mr. TOWNER. That is not your lack of facilities.

Mr. LAMKIN. Not at all.

Mr. TOWNER. You are not responsible for any delay of that kind that existed?

Mr. LAMKIN. I take your question to be that if the Bureau of Health psychiatrists say that this man is in such a mental condition that he can be trained, there is no further delay in our part.

Mr. TOWNER. In other words, any delay that occurs now—you claim that any delay that occurs now in the training of hospital patients is not occasioned by any action or nonaction on the part of the board, but is a matter entirely with the responsibility of the Public Health Service?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. I wanted you to explain a little further, if you will, the actual training that was given by the board. As I understand you, two months' additional training is given by the board following their college work, in case they had college work. Can you explain that a little further?

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAMKIN. That does not apply so much to men having college work as it does to men who are taking their instruction in trade schools. We find that the man who has his instruction in a trade in a school has not correlated it or applied it to shop conditions, and he finds a difficulty in carrying on on equal terms with the normal man in a shop or factory at first, and we follow him up for a period of 60 days and continue on the job training for a 60-day period after he completes his theoretical instruction.

Mr. TOWNER. Then that would apply partly to those who were at work in technical schools where they were taking strictly trade mechanical work. After they had taken what necessarily in the school must be more or less theoretical instructions that you give them and two months' actual training somewhere in the work, it is putting them in a factory or machine shop or something of that sort?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir. It may also apply, for instance, to men who are taking work in schools of commerce. We get a position for a man in a financial establishment and the financial establishment says, "This man is not worth anything to me now (while it is a new kind of work he will not be worth anything), but we will start him in on a small salary." We put him there on the job for a period of two months, until he does learn the work at first hand.

Mr. TOWNER. What is your experience in that, resulting in the permanent employment of these men after that, where they have taken two months' extended work?

Mr. LAMKIN. I can not give you definite figures, but my understanding is that they have always remained with the employer, the great majority of them.

Mr. TOWNER. That is the proportion?

Mr. LAMKIN. It is the intention to put them in places where they will have permanent employment.

Mr. TOWNER. In other words, it operates as saying to the manufacturer, "Now, we will place this man with you and take care of him ourselves for two months in order that you may know what his capacity is. We want to pay him something, and we will be glad to have you do it and be responsible for two months, and then you can determine as to whether or not you could continue it to your advantage."

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. That, you say, works well?

Mr. LAMKIN. May I suggest this, further, that in England when a man is put on to a job, and in Canada when a man is put on to a job, any pay which he gets is deducted from the training pay that he gets from the Government.

Mr. TOWNER. But that is not your plan?

Mr. LAMKIN. That is not true in this country.

Mr. TOWNER. I would like to have you give the committee an idea. Of course, I suppose you can not be accurate as to what proportion of those who were originally placed in the factories or establishments for the purpose of learning their trades without having taken a course in any technical school, what proportion of that class of men are retained and given a place with salaries in those establishments?

Mr. LAMKIN. Practically all of them.

Digitized by Google

Mr. TOWNER. Then that work is proving very successful?

Mr. LAMKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Do you have great difficulty in obtaining permission for your men to enter that class of establishments?

Mr. LAMKIN. I do not know that we have great difficulty in it; no, sir. In the first place, many employees are hesitant about accepting these men, because of the questions concerning liability under the workmen's compensation laws which, of course, vary in different States. We have never been able to work out a very satisfactory agreement on that. The larger casualty companies have agreed not to raise the rate of the employer of labor on account of him taking these men. But in States, particularly where they have workmen's compensation laws or statutes the statute can not be changed, and where the employer is not paying them the relationship is not that of master and servant, but yet there is a relationship there. On the other hand, there is always the question of the closed shop which enters. The labor unions where we have taken it up have been as responsive as have the employers. The difficulty, of course, is in the question of follow-up and supervision to see that the men placed in industrial establishments get training and are not put on a productive basis, and that makes it a very difficult problem. We are having a very good success with the men in placement training, as we call it.

Mr. TOWNER. What is your experience in regard to the treatment in colleges of soldiers in training both by the professorial staff and by the body of fellow students?

Mr. LAMKIN. As a very general rule, they are well received by both. There are instances, of course, where the instructors object to the men coming to the institutions at times other than the regular opening of their semesters or terms. That is largely due to its inconveniencing the instructor, but as far as the administrative officials of the institutions are concerned we have no difficulty whatever when we get it up to them. There are a few instances only where the student body has not taken these men as well as we think they should have been received. We think we have in every instance overcome that difficulty. There are one or more instances where the boys themselves have objected to the regulations of the institution and we have had some difficulty in straightening that out. I remember one college where we had some men where regulations provided that a boy could not smoke on the street in the little town outside of the school hours and these boys that had been overseas rather objected to regulations of that kind. As a general thing, I should say, Mr. Chairman, it has been all that we could ask.

Mr. TOWNER. I want to ask you about this "hard-boiled" order, Mr. Lamkin. The testimony before the committee, I think, was to the effect that this "hard-boiled" order was placed on your desk and that you made some emendations or corrections or did something with it which was interpreted as being an approval of the "hard-boiled" I wish you would make such explanation as you think would be warranted by the facts in regard to that matter.

Mr. LAMKIN. I think I made a statement in my letter to Mr. Munroe which covers the most of the question which you ask. I did not understand that the material or circular was intended to go out of the office or intended to be used for distribution to anybody. As I remember it, I was out of the office for a few days and when I came back there was the prepared circular on my desk, several copies of it. I cut out some phrases with the remark, I think, to my stenographer, I am not sure, possibly to Mr. Brigham, that "although this is not intended to regulate the actions of any officer of this board in dealing with disabled men, yet these words must not even be circulated in this office." I think, Mr. Chairman, that if we understand the persons whom we were trying to reach at that time that there will be a better conception of that statement. If I had not discredited in a way, this morning, Mr. Reid, I would suggest that Mr. Reid's suggestion in his testimony, was that Mr. Godfrey, who was one of the central office case board representatives at that time, was in no sense "hard-boiled" to the disabled men but that he was that way toward the members of the district office staff. I think, we must remember Mr. Chairman, that these central-office case board representatives were passing on legal evidence on which was based the expenditure of Government money.

As I said to you this morning, section 108 of the miscellaneous regulations gives eight different ways in which a man can be separated from the service. Instruction No. 46 gives 12 different forms of honorable discharge certificates, 8 different forms of dishonorable discharge certificates from the Army, 6 or 8 forms in the Navy, and in order to base the payment of Government moneys some such evidence as that must be in the files and the central office case board representatives have been sent to the various districts to see that that evidence was in the files. When they went from one district to another the district office staff members would come in where they were working and would ask them about what was going on in another district, about the chances for a salary increase for themselves, or would come in and say, "Yes, I know there is nothing in this man's folder to show that he was honorably discharged from the service but I know that he was." They would come into the room and say, "Yes, I know that this says he was discharged with no disability, but there are economic reasons why this boy should have training." And the idea was that the central office case board representatives should get on paper in the folder legal evidence on which the expenditure of money could be based and to serve as evidence in case of an audit of our expenditures by the agents of the Treasury Department.

The whole intent of Mr. Brigham's statement was to govern the action of the central office case board representatives in their relations which are very complex relations to the members of the district office staffs. It had nothing whatever to do with the relations to the disabled men of any man employed by the board. I did not understand it was to go out of the office. There was no copy in the files of the central office. After its publicity in the newspapers search was made and there was only one copy of it and that was a personal copy. I keep a copy of everything so far as I know, a personal copy, which was found in my personal file. There was no copy downstairs in the regular files of the board. It was not in any sense an order or in any sense an instruction, and the entire discussion, was a discussion of the relationship of the central office case board representatives to the district office staffs. I could give you this illustration: Within the past month, a representative from this office was sent out to another office as an eligibility man. He passed through a city in which one of our district offices was located and telegraphed or wrote ahead to a man from that office and had him come down to the station to see him, and he told the man who was at the station that that district officer was to be changed and that he, this eligibility representative, was going to be sent there as district officer, that the supervisor of training was going to be changed; that the supervisor of placement was going to be changed. He went on to his station leaving that story behind him. The result was, of course, that two or three days later in came a letter from the district office to the central office stating that if "we are going to be changed we ought to be notified from central office." We are trying to keep these eligibility men to the task of passing on the cases before them and leaving other matters alone.

Mr. TOWNER. That was an entirely unjustified statement that he made?

Mr. LAMKIN. Entirely unjustified.

Mr. TOWNER. I want to ask you about one of your recommendations. As I understood, you were recommending the consolidation of the War Risk Bureau and the Public Health Service and rehabilitation section of the vocational board. I would like to have you explain to this committee how you would bring that about. Let me be more particular about it. The War Risk Bureau and the Public Health Service and the rehabilitation section of the vocational board are performing each a particular separable function. What advantage theoretically, in the first place, would there be in the consolidation?

Mr. LAMKIN. The recommendation, Mr. Chairman, was that it should be a consolidation or a closer coordination.

Mr. TOWNER. They are very distinct, those propositions are. I understood you to recommend a consolidation of those.

Mr. LAMKIN. That is not what I read. To consolidate or more closely coordinate, I think, was the statement I made.
